In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not understand what, if any, question of international law is raised, or intended to be raised, as to the "Edward." She was not captured or detained, but was supplied with water, oil, provisions, and carpenter's labour, by the United States' Flag Officer, Stringham. I can only say that the Flag Officer appears to me to have acted with marked courtesy to the Consul, and with great liberality towards the "Edward," in not capturing and sending her into port for adjudication. The owners do not appear, as yet, to have made any complaint; and if the version of the facts represented by the Consul as "the Flag Officer's version of his conduct," turns to be correct, his conduct deserves, in my opinion, a suitable acknowledgment from Her Majesty's Government.

Blockade of Port of Charleston.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 15th July instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Charleston (No. 71), reporting upon the manner in which the blockade of that port has been maintained.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to state that your Lordship sends this despatch for my information, but would be glad to receive my observations should I desire to offer any at the present time upon its contents.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with a view to the claims what may be anticipated as likely to be adduced hereafter against the Government of the United States, in connection with the blockade of Charleston, I would point out that every practicable means should be employed to clear up the doubts hanging over the facts connected with it, and to test the accuracy of the Consul's and of Mr. Seward's conflicting allegations.

The paragraph pencilled at page 5 of the Consul's letter deserves particular attention and further investigation. I would further observe that there are some points to be kept in view, as far as practicable, in obtaining further information: I have put these, for convenience, in the shape of questions—

1. Has ingress been allowed by the blockading squadron after the first establishment of the blockade to any, and what, vessels, knowingly and wilfully? and if yea, in what cases, and on what surmised grounds?

2. Repeat the question as to egress with cargo laden after the blockade, and in derogation of the fifteen days of grace.

3. Have the suggested intermissions of the blockade been caused by the blockading force being (a) wholly and deliberately withdrawn and sent elsewhere by superior orders? or (b) by weather? or (c) by chasing vessels endeavouring to break the blockade, or other vessels generally?

4. Has the force on the spot, from local considerations, number and class of cruizers, and so forth, been even when actually present (and if so, for what time and in what respect) inadequate to maintain an efficient blockade, or to cause obvious danger to those desiring to break it?

The mere fact that the blockading force was not visible from the shore, or not certainly known at Charleston to be in the offing, or even that certain vessels have succeeded in escaping that force by entering or leaving that port, will not of itself render its blockade invalid. This is, in a great degree, a question of relative numbers.

In conclusion, I would suggest that the Consul should direct his attention, and if necessary communicate with Lord Lyons, who should resort to the best sources of information and professional advice as to the point or points on which it may be considered that the question of the validity or invalidity is likely to turn; as, for instance, (1st) its general and total imperfection throughout, from want of a proper and sufficient force; or from (2nd) the number of cases in which either egress, or especially ingress, has been permitted by the blockading force; or (3rd) its partial and temporary interruption, by the withdrawal or absence of the blockading force during certain definite periods. The Consul is, of course, familiar with Kent's "Commentaries on American Law," vol. i, p. 143, et seq., and authorities there cited. I return, herewith, the Consul's despatch No. 71, for reference.

The more general question of the blockade of the Southern ports should be kept separate from that of Charleston; and means should be taken, through the British Legation and Consulates in the United States, to make out a thoroughly correct list, for future use, of the date when the blockade of each of those ports commenced, and how it was maintained. Some information is already forthcoming on this point.

Case of the "Emerald Isle." Accusation against Her Majesty's Consulate-General at Monte Video of issuing a falsified document.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 10th July instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General at Monte Video (No. 27, May 28, 1861), inclosing copies of his correspondence with the Governor of Uruguay, in regard to certain legal proceedings in which the master of a British vessel has been engaged.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to state that I should perceive that Señor Rodriguez, the presiding Judge of the Tribunal of Commerce, accuses Her Majesty's Consulate-General of deliberately issuing a document bearing a false date in reference to this case; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Mr. Lettsom in regard to this accusation.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as too frequently happens in South American cases, Mr. Lettsom has omitted to transmit a copy of the sentence pronounced by Señor Rodriguez (in the suit as to freight of the "Emerald Isle," apparently instituted by Egan the master against "Llamas, Madeiros, and Co."), of some expressions in which sentence reflecting on Her Majesty's Consulate he complains, and upon the precise terms of which document the whole matter necessarily turns. This omission appears to me very extraordinary, and the sentence in extenso, with an exact translation, must be supplied before I can finally dispose of the case, if it is to come before me again. I observe, however:—

1. That the matter seems to have originated in a letter from Mr. Robinson, the agent of Egan, to Mr. Lettsom, dated March 19th.

2. That Egan, in the opinion of Vice-Consul Munro, was justly defeated in this suit, which he ought not to have instituted; and that his defeat was owing to "his neglect of the most ordinary precautions," and in fact to his failure to perform his duty as master.

3. That Egan has not appealed, and that the suit is at an end; thus the matter originates with the agent of a justly defeated suitor whose unfounded claim is now disposed of.

4. That there was in fact an important error committed in this matter by the Vice-Consul in his official character (see his despatch of May 2, page 7).

5. That if the expressions complained of be merely those set forth in Mr. Robinson's letter of March 19, I do not see how they can be officially taken up and resented.

6. That the propriety and expediency of officially applying to a foreign Government, by way of complaint, against expressions used by a Judge in pronouncing a sentence, in itself well founded, and which expressions were used bonâ fide and without malice, and for which there was apparently at all events some ground or cause, appears to me very questionable. In a similar case in this country Her Majesty's Government would decline to interfere; a reflection on irregularities in Consular documents is not a national affront, and the Executive Government cannot control or answer for all judicial ebullitions of temper or strong expressions from the Bench, even if they are not altogether justifiable.

7. Non constat whether the errors, defects, or contradictions in the Consular archives formed the subject of evidence, or of contest or argument, at the trial, which is an important question; if this was the fact, it is a further justification or excuse for the Judge's remarks.

8. Upon the whole my present impression is, that this matter is not one requiring or deserving any further official intervention, which is not in my opinion likely to lead to any important or satisfactory result; and I should be disposed to advise your Lordship to instruct Mr. Lettsom in this sense.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to transmit a letter and its inclosures from Mr. Nevett, in support of his claim, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Mr. Orme has taken a correct view of this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have only to observe that Señor Melgar states that the Executive Government cannot interfere with the Tribunals, and that Mr. Carwell must apply to them for leave of absence on medical certificate, and that he can obtain release from the "arraigo" imposed on him by naming an "apoderado," or finding security. Mr. Jerningham makes no observations by way of answer to this statement, and Mr. Carwell merely disputes many of the facts generally, dwells on the urgency of his case, owing to the state of his health, and insists on a demand for his release on parole being made to the Government by Mr. Jerningham. Señor Melgar's statement is not satisfactorily answered, and although the whole case gives rise to grave suspicions as to the conduct and motives of the Peruvian Government, we cannot advise your Lordship to authorize the making of any formal demand for the release of Mr. Carwell on his parole.

Mr. Jerningham may be instructed to facilitate, as far as may be practicable, the object immediately in view, by procuring Mr. Carwell's release upon such terms and conditions, including or not including security, as may be practicable.

Transfers of American vessels to British subjects.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 20th July instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 59), requesting instructions with regard to the numerous cases of transfers of American vessels to British subjects.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to inclose a letter from the Board of Trade, to which Department Mr. Archibald's despatch was referred; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with any observations that I may have to make upon this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not see how, under the circumstances, any official instructions can be issued to the Consul than those suggested by the Board of Trade. He may, however, be informed that in any special case, in which he may have good reason to suspect that the transfer is not made bonâ fide for adequate value, but is merely fictitious, or "colourable" (the interest of the American vendor in the ship sold not being, in fact, entirely divested), he may delay the official completion of such transfer until he forwards a full and exact statement of the case, and receives instructions from home. I may remark that, on this subject, it would be desirable (with a view to cases which may hereafter arise, in the event of the continuance of the existing hostilities between the United States and the (so-called) Confederate States, and in which the national character and credit of the British flag may be, at least, indirectly involved) to have early and correct information as to the view taken by each of the contending parties of the validity of sales of ships by an enemy to a neutral, flagrante bello. The French prize law altogether refuses to recognize the validity of any such sale; whilst the English prize law recognizes their validity, if made bonâ fide, for adequate value, and without any secret reservation of enemy's interest (see, for instance, Sorensen v. the Queen (the "Ariel"), in 11 Moore's "Privy Council Reports," page 119; the "Baltic," ibid., page 141; and Batten v. the Queen (the "Maria"), ibid., page 271). It would be obviously undesirable for ships under the British flag to be exposed to capture and condemnation at the hands of either of the American belligerents, as was the case quoad the flag of Denmark, in the case of several ships fictitiously sold by Russians to Danes during the late war with Russia, but nevertheless captured and condemned in England.

With reference to the Consul's opinion as to the unsatisfactory state of the English law regulating the national character and status of those entitled to own British ships under the Merchant Shipping Act, and the facilities which it offers to evasions of what I conceive to have been the real policy, spirit, and intention of the Act, I entirely concur with the Consul; and I think it very advisable that the attention of Her Majesty's Government should be directed to this point: but this large and important subject has no immediate or direct bearing on the sales at New York, of United States' ships, to persons entitled (howsoever) under the actual law to own "British ships;" the subject does not fall within the province of the Foreign Department, and I have not leisure or opportunity, at present, to enter fully into it. I will only observe that to any person practically familiar with British shipping interests, it must be apparent that the 17th section of 17 and 18 Vict., cap. 104, is so framed as to expose Her Majesty's Government to the constant risk of serious international complications and conflicts of law, in the case of those British shipowners who, although they may be technically British subjects by descent, according to British law, are yet by birth, domicile, and interest, both de jure and de facto the subjects or citizens of those foreign States within which they nevertheless claim to own "British ships."

Endorsement upon register of the "Tartar" by United States' steamer of war, warning her not to attempt to enter any blockaded ports.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 24th July instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Admiralty dated the 23rd of July instant, inclosing a copy of a letter from Rear-Admiral Milne and other papers, reporting the circumstances under which the "Tartar," schooner, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, was boarded on the high seas by an officer from the United States' steamer of war "Union," who endorsed upon her register a warning not to attempt to enter any port of the United States south of Chesapeake Bay, said ports being under blockade; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion upon this case, and to furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether it would be advisable to communicate through Lord Lyons with the United States' Government, with a view to elicit from that Government a declaration as to the actual existence of an effective blockade of all the ports between Chesapeake Bay and the Mexican frontier.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, with reference to the general question adverted to by Admiral Milne, of the prevailing doubts as to the actual existence of an effective blockade of all the ports in question, I can only refer to my previous Reports on this subject, especially those of the 13th May, 14th June, and 22nd July. I have, from the first, pointed out how desirable it is that Her Majesty's Government should be kept regularly and accurately informed on this subject; and I regret that no reliable information is as yet available. These papers throw no additional light upon this point. I may add that it is only in case of a British vessel being either captured for breach of blockade, or warned off, and thereby prevented from going to some port to which she was destined, and of her owners suffering loss or damage thereby, that the question of the fact of such blockade, or of the terms of the notice thereof given to her, become material: vessels not bound to blockaded ports are not primâ facie injured by even an incorrect notification of blockade. A vessel, for instance, like the "Tartar," bound from Kingston, Jamaica, to Halifax, and, therefore, necessarily, passing along a coast many, if not all, all the ports of which are blockaded, is not injured by such a notification being given to her in latitude 32° north, and longitude 78° west; nor do I understand her owners to complain of it. The question of shotted guns having been fired at the "Tartar," especially if unnecessarily fired, is a separate and serious question; but the circumstance is somewhat vaguely stated: it is not distinctly complained of; and I do not, as at present advised, see the necessity of entering into any formal international discussion thereon.

Your Lordship's last question must, in my opinion, be answered in the negative. I see no advantage, but the contrary, as likely to arise from now asking the United States' Government officially any question as to the dates or actual existence of these blockades; this should be, at all events, postponed until Her Majesty's Government is fully enlightened on the subject from its own sources of information, and until some case arises in which such a step may be requisite.

I may add, in conclusion, that no serious cause of complaint has as yet arisen against the United States' Government in relation to the blockade; and that the officers commanding the blockading force have, as far as I am aware, acted very courteously and liberally towards British vessels; not one case for the demand of redress or compensation is at this time (as far as I am aware) pending between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States. The absence of a general and public notification is, on the whole, not unfavourable to neutral interests; and special notice to each vessel met with is a measure which does not appear to me unreasonable. It is, in my opinion, desirable to avoid, as far as possible, any irritating discussion of the subject, and, at all events, to wait until some strong case shall actually have arisen of wrong done to a British subject, for which no redress can be obtained in any Court administering either municipal or international law, before Her Majesty's Government impeaches the validity of the blockade either generally, or in any particular instance. It is, moreover, to be borne in mind that regular Prize Courts are established in the United States professing to apply the law of nations correctly and impartially, to which all claimants interested in captured vessels can apply. Her Majesty's Government should, therefore, in my opinion, diligently collect all the necessary information; but it should at present abstain from making any official communication on the subject to that of the United States.

SARDINIA.

Losses sustained by Mr. W. Taylor at Monte Cristo, in consequence of proceedings of Sardinian authorities.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 22nd July instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 16th of March last,* on the case of Mr. Watson Taylor, of the Island of Monte Christo, he was directed to forward to me a letter from Mr. S. Watson Taylor, giving an account of the losses sustained by his brother in consequence of the proceedings of the Sardinian authorities, together with a full Report on the affair drawn up by Her Majesty's Consul at Leghorn, and received from Sir James Hudson.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to inclose the other correspondence relating to this matter; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with any further observations which I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the information which I requested in my Report of October 27, 1860, page 7, as to the date of the change of the Government of Tuscany from the Grand Duke to the King of Sardinia, and the form and date of the notice thereof which Mr. Watson Taylor received, has never been supplied: and this question, therefore, still remains in its original obscurity; its relevancy and importance will be seen by reference to the above-mentioned Report.

The Report of Consul Macbean, dated July 3, strengthens and confirms the opinion which I expressed in my Report of October 27, 1860.

It now clearly appears that the official authorization of the proceedings by M. Ricasoli (then Sardinian Governor-General of Tuscany), was either carelessly granted without any inquiry, or improperly granted after a very imperfect inquiry (see Consul Macbean's Report, 3rd July, page 36); that the legality of the sentence is subject to serious doubt (ibid., pages 34 and 37); that the character and value of the evidence adduced for the prosecution is subject to the gravest suspicion; the whole charge seeming to have resulted from the personal malice of some of the persons on the island; and that the sentences passed on Mr. and Mrs. Taylor (especially the latter), were monstrous in point of severity, even assuming there to be no doubt as to the law or the facts. Upon the whole, I must say that I have seldom seen a case in which a State prosecution, specially instituted and conducted on behalf of any European Government, has been from first to last of so thoroughly discreditable a character.

I do not see that the failure of Mr. Taylor to appear, or offer any defence, offers any material palliation for the conduct of the authorities. It would seem that Sir J. Hudson knew, and did not disapprove, of Mr. W. Taylor's intention to absent himself. I can only repeat that the mere remission of the sentence (which was apparently delayed for many months), is not, in my opinion, a sufficient reparation for the grievous wrong so wantonly inflicted on Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, under colour of law and justice, and after and notwithstanding that the attention of the Sardinian Government had been specially called to the circumstances by Her Majesty's Legation.

With respect to the question of pecuniary compensation, there is considerable difficulty. On the one hand, I cannot see any sufficient justification for the entire abandonment by Mr. Taylor of all his property and interests in the island, from and since August 1860. I do not see any sufficient reason for his refusal or omission formally to empower some person to act for him; at all events, I do not see why official notice was not given, through the Consulate, to the authorities, and their intervention to protect and preserve the property required; and I am not satisfied that, under these circumstances, the Sardinian Government can be held responsible for the ordinary depreciation and damage to Mr. Taylor's property caused by or ensuing on Mr. Taylor's entire dereliction thereof. Mr. Taylor cannot treat Sardinia as an owner (insured) treats an underwriter by "abandoning and going for a total loss."

On the other hand, as to the positive plunder and destruction of Mr. Taylor's property by those on board the British steamer "Orwell" (who were apparently Italian military volunteers, commanded by one Settembrini), the question as to the responsibility of the Sardinian Government in this respect appears to me to turn chiefly upon the consideration whether these persons are rightly to be regarded as being then in the service of, or acting on behalf of, the King of Sardinia.

It is suggested by Mr. Samuel Watson Taylor, in his letter of May 20, that the Italian volunteers on board the "Orwell" were subsequently captured by one of Her Majesty's vessels, and thereupon claimed by Sardinia, and released by Her Majesty's Government, instead of being tried at Malta for piracy. It does not appear what was subsequently done with them; and I am not in a position to say at present whether the Sardinian Government recognized these persons, or adopted them as being in its service, or acting voluntarily on its behalf; but if it did so, it is responsible to Mr. Taylor for their acts.

There remains the question of what effective protection and countenance Mr. Taylor from the Sardinian Government is to receive, in the event of his returning to the island. His brother enters fully into this part of the case in the concluding portion of his letter of May 20. It is obvious that unless something of what is therein suggested is vigorously carried out, Mr. Taylor cannot prudently or safely return to Monte Christo, or obtain any rent or profit therefrom, notwithstanding his large previous expenditure.

I remark a somewhat singular silence on the part of Sir J. Hudson, on the general merits and position of the case; but its general aspect and result appear to me to lead to the conclusion that Mr. Taylor, after spending a very large sum on improving the island, became the victim of petty local malice and ill-will; that the authorities afforded him neither favour, protection, nor justice, and without any serious fault or provocation, persecuted and ruined him. He can obtain neither redress for the past, nor adequate protection for the future, without the vigorous intervention of Her Majesty's Government, to which he is, in my opinion, fairly entitled.

It will be for your Lordship to consider whether the best legal advice at Turin may not properly be taken on the legal validity of the sentence, having regard to the state of the island at the time, inter gentes (whatever it may have been), and to the points adduced in Consul Macbean's Report, with a view to any further official communication to the Government of Sardinia.

The question of pecuniary compensation is, to some extent, dependent on the tone adopted by the Sardinian Government. If that Government were frankly and promptly to express its regret for the past, and to pledge itself to protect Mr. Taylor for the future, the question of compensation might perhaps be dropped, in consideration of all the circumstances; but if Sardinia will give no other answer or explanation than that of the late Count Cavour, the case assumes a more serious aspect, and should be pressed to the utmost.

Draft of Letters-Patent to be passed under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom for investing the Supreme Court of Hong Kong with Appellate Jurisdiction in certain cases of Civil Suits between British Subjects heard and determined, under the authority of Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 23rd of January, 1860, by British Consuls within the Dominions of the Emperor of Japan.

WHEREAS by an Ordinance passed by the Legislative Council of Hong Kong in the year 1845, intituled No. 6 of 1845, "An Ordinance to repeal Ordinance No. 15 of 1844 for the establishment of a Supreme Court of Judicature at Hong Kong, and to substitute other provisions in lieu thereof," it was enacted that there should be within the said Colony a Court, which should be called the Supreme Court at Hong Kong:

And whereas by certain Letters-Patent bearing date the 30th January, 1860, provision was professedly made for investing the said Supreme Court with appellate jurisdiction, in cases of civil suits heard and determined, under authority of Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 3rd March, 1859, by British Consuls within the dominions of the Emperor of Japan; but such Order in Council had been repealed previously to the date of the said Letters-Patent, that is to say, by Her Majesty's Order in Council of the 23rd of January, 1860:

And whereas it is expedient that the said Letters-Patent should be revoked:

Now know ye, that upon consideration of the premises, and of Our certain knowledge and mere motion, We have thought fit to direct and ordain, and do direct and ordain as follows:—

1. The aforesaid Letters-Patent of the 30th day of January, 1860, are hereby revoked and determined.

And whereas by the 13th section of an Order in Council bearing date the 23rd day of January, 1860, it was ordered that, in the event of any suit of a civil nature arising between British subjects within the dominions of the Tycoon of Japan, it should be lawful, upon the application of any party to such suit, for the Consul of the district within which the party sued should be found, to hear and determine such suit, subject in case the sum in dispute should exceed 1,000 dollars to an appeal to the Supreme Court of the Colony of Hong Kong; and that every such appeal should be made and conducted in the manner and form, and under the same conditions as were prescribed by the said Order in Council in cases in which the Defendant only was a British subject.

And whereas by the 28th section of the aforesaid Order in Council, it was further ordered that the Supreme Court of the Colony of Hong Kong should have and might exercise, concurrently with Her Majesty's Consul, authority and jurisdiction in regard to all suits of a civil nature between British subjects, arising within any parts of the dominions of the Emperor of Japan: Provided always that the said Supreme Court should not be bound, unless in a fit case it should deem it right so to do, by writ of certiorari or otherwise, to debar or prohibit the Consul from hearing and determining, pursuant to the provisions of the several sections of the said Order, any suit of a civil nature between British subjects, or to stay the proceedings of a Consul in any such matter,—

2. We do further direct and ordain, that if any party to any such suit as aforesaid, heard and determined in Japan, and in which the sum in dispute shall exceed 1,000 dollars, shall be dissatisfied with the decision given upon the said suit by the Consul before whom the same shall be heard or tried, it shall be lawful for such party, within fifteen days after such decision, to give to the Consul notice of appeal to the Supreme Court of Hong Kong, whereupon the Consul shall, with as little delay as possible, stamp with his Consular Seal, and transmit to the said Supreme Court, all the documents which were produced before him, and none other, and also the notes taken by him of the evidence adduced in the said suit, together with a statement of the grounds on which he formed his decision, and an exact copy of the order made by him, and shall forthwith notify to the several parties the transmission thereof: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Consul to require from any party appealing to the said Court reasonable security, which shall consist in part of one or two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Consul, that such party shall and will abide by the decision to be given by the said Supreme Court, and pay all such costs of and incidental to such appeal, as the said Supreme Court shall direct.

3. And We do further direct and ordain, that it shall be competent to the said Supreme Court, and the said Court is hereby required, to take into consideration such documents and statements, and decide upon the same, and to communicate its decision to the Consul, who shall forthwith proceed to carry the same into execution.

4. And We do further direct and ordain, that in any appeal to the said Court from the decision of a Consul, it shall not be open to any party, except as hereinafter is provided, to adduce any further evidence than that which was laid before the Consul, and that a party shall not be required to appear personally to prosecute an appeal or support a sentence: Provided always, that in all appeals from the decision of the Consul, it shall be lawful for a party to allege facts essential to the issue of the suit, which have come to his knowledge subsequently to the decision of the Consul, and to produce evidence in support of such facts; and provided also that it shall, moreover, be lawful for the said Court to admit any further legal evidence besides that adduced before the Consul, on its being established to the satisfaction of the said Court by oath on personal examination, or by affidavit, that the party desiring to produce such further evidence was ignorant of the existence of such evidence, or was taken by surprise at the hearing before the Consul, or was unable to produce it before the Consul after due and reasonable diligence and exertion on his part in that behalf, or wheresoever, under the particular circumstances of the case, it shall appear to the said Court that further evidence ought to be received.

5. And We do hereby give and grant to the said Supreme Court full jurisdiction, power, and authority, to hear and determine all such causes, suits, matters, and things as are mentioned and comprised in the said XXVIIIth Article of the aforesaid Order in Council of the 23rd January, 1860.

6. And We do further direct and ordain, that it shall be lawful for the said Court to make such Rules, Orders, and Regulations, not being inconsistent with the provisions of the said Order in Council, or with these Our Letters-Patent, or with the laws in force in Hong Kong, as may in the judgment of the said Court be requisite for the speedy and effectual decision of the aforesaid appeals, and also of the said causes, suits, matters, and things: Provided always, that all such Rules, Orders, and Regulations, shall forthwith be communicated to the Governor of Hong Kong, and by him shall be transmitted to Us, Our heirs and successors, under the seal of the said Court, for Our or their approbation or disallowance, to be signified through one of Our Principal Secretaries of State to the said Governor.

Complaint of Mr. H. Haynes. Register of the "Roscoe" endorsed with notice of blockade of Southern ports of United States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 30, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 27th of July instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter and its inclosures from Mr. H. Haynes, complaining of an officer from the United States' blockading vessel "Powhattan" having endorsed on the register of the British ship "Roscoe" a notice of the blockade of the Southern ports of the United States.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to transmit a draft of the answer which it is proposed to return to Mr. Haynes; and to request that I would take the case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether the proposed answer to Mr. Haynes is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, adverting to the absence of any full or accurate information of the dates and efficiency of the blockades of the Southern ports by the naval forces of the United States, I have introduced a slight alteration into the end of the draft, subject to which I am of opinion that it is right and proper.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th ultimo, inclosing the register of the British ship "Roscoe," on which an officer from the United States' blockading steamer "Powhattan" had endorsed a notice of the blockade of the Southern ports of the United States, and I am to state to you, in reply, that Lord John Russell, having consulted legal authority, is not of opinion that this document is such as to require any remarks from him.

MEXICO.

Traffic in Yucatan Indians between Yucatan and Cuba. Assistance of British cruizers requested.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 1, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 25th of July ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Mr. Mathew, Her Majesty's Minister at Mexico (No. 28), inclosing a translation of a Decree issued by the Mexican Government prohibiting the traffic in Yucatan Indians, which has for some time past been carried on between Yucatan and Cuba; and also inclosing a translation of a note from the Mexican Government, requesting the assistance of British cruizers to put a stop to this traffic, which the Mexican authorities are themselves totally unable to suppress.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to transmit to me a letter from the Admiralty, dated the 17th September last, with its inclosures, from Rear-Admiral Sir Alexander Milne, and Commander Pakenham, of Her Majesty's ship "Racer," containing a report by the latter officer of the result of inquiries which he was directed to make in Yucatan respecting the traffic in Indians between that country and Cuba.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to state that I should perceive that it is stated by the authorities in Yucatan, that the Indians who are thus shipped off to Cuba under contracts for labour are only prisoners of war, whom they cannot shoot or detain in prison; but, on the other hand, the information which has reached Her Majesty's Government leaves no room to doubt that an extensive system of kidnapping Indians has for some years past been organized in Yucatan, and that the condition of these Indians when landed in Cuba differs very little from that of the negroes introduced as slaves from Africa.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to state that Her Majesty's Government have repeatedly remonstrated with both the Mexican and Spanish Governments on the inhumanity of this traffic, but their remonstrances have hitherto failed in putting a stop to it; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether this trade is legal; and if not, whether British cruizers would be justified in rendering assistance to the Mexican authorities in suppressing it, and to what extent this assistance may be given.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am unable to say that the trade in question is clearly illegal, or a "Slave Trade" internationally; it is in the nature of emigration or exporting of Indians from the territory of Mexico (Yucatan); and there are, apparently, formal contracts of service entered into by the emigrants. It appears that some few Indians so exported have even returned to Yucatan, and subsequently left it again to settle permanently in Cuba. The traffic resembles coolie emigration, which is, whenever uncontrolled, a Slave Trade in its effect and operation, although not so technically; but when controlled and regulated, assumes a very different aspect.

However this may be, it is obvious that if Mexico will not or cannot enforce her own laws on land within her own territory, or take any effectual steps to prevent their violation when brought under the cognizance of her own officers, she cannot fairly ask Her Majesty's Government to assist her in enforcing them on the high seas. Thus, when Mexico has allowed the Indians to be collected and shipped, and permitted the ships laden with them to sail, she cannot, with any decency, call on Her Majesty's ships to stop them on the high seas.

Moreover, the present state of Mexico, and the position of Señor Juarez, offer serious objections to entering into any special arrangement on the subject. This Decree may probably not have the force of law, or be considered as binding by Mexico as a Republic; neither am I precisely aware of what are the precise acts which Señor Juarez desires Her Majesty's vessels of war should do in this matter. If he means that all export whatsoever of Indians from Yucatan to Cuba is "slave-trading" by Mexican law (which does not seem to me to be the effect of the Decree of May 6, 1861), then, under the Treaty with Mexico of 1841, Mexican vessels engaging therein may, without any special instructions, be captured, and sent to Vera Cruz for adjudication. The stipulations in Article IV, however, require attention, and perhaps modification.

I may remark, that other foreign interests (besides those of Mexico), for instance, Spanish interests, are involved in this question, and the intervention of Her Majesty's ships may lead to serious international complications; and the matter is altogether left in so much obscurity that I cannot recommend Her Majesty's Government to take any steps at present in the sense indicated. If Señor Juarez only means to invoke the assistance of Her Majesty's ships to enforce his own Municipal Law (and this after it has been flagrantly violated on Mexican territory, or by the connivance at least of Mexican authorities), but not to act under the Slave Trade Suppression Treaty for the suppression of acts of "slave-trading," then I cannot, under the circumstances of the case, advise your Lordship to accede to his request.

SPAIN.

Mr. Rankin's claim to compensation for losses on account of his vessel "Fahrenheit" having to proceed to Port Mahon to perform quarantine.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 12th June last, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Rankin dated the 29th May last, setting forth the circumstances under which he requests the interference of Her Majesty's Government, with the Government of Spain, to obtain compensation for losses which he has incurred by the proceedings of the authorities at Malaga, in directing his vessel, the "Fahrenheit," to proceed to perform quarantine at Port Mahon; and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government will be justified in interfering in this matter.

I am also honoured with Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 31st July ultimo, stating that, in accordance with the suggestion contained in my letter of the 23rd July ultimo,* Mr. Mark has read all the papers which were sent to me therewith respecting the cases of the "Azorian" and "Fahrenheit," and that he would call upon me on the 1st of August at 12 o'clock, in order that I might have an opportunity of consulting with him on these cases.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have conversed with Mr. Mark on this subject.

With regard to the "Fahrenheit" I observe that it is admitted that two of her crew died during the voyage, it is said "from intemperance at Swansea;" but the suspicions of the Spanish Health Officers were naturally excited. There is no constat of what resulted from the examinations of the master and crew, and the Spanish authorities were not bound implicitly to believe their version of the cause of these deaths; the master does not appear to have complained to the Consul at Malaga, and there is even now no report from that Consulate. I cannot discover that she sustained any illegal treatment; Mr. Mark concurs with this opinion.

Under these circumstances I cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere. Mr. Mark also concurs with me in considering the case of the "Azorian" to be one of flagrant oppression, for which compensation should be insisted on, if any stand is to be made against the capricious exercise of arbitrary Spanish authority, to the ruin of British interests in this class of cases.

This case of the "Fahrenheit" is, however, of a very different aspect. I can only again call attention to the very objectionable state of the present sanitary laws of Spain, which (in effect) leave the fate of almost every ship and cargo arriving from a British port in the hands of the local Boards of Health.

The opinion of Señor Arguelles, inclosed in Mr. Edwardes' No. 74 of 1860, in the "Azorian" (especially at page 47 and following pages of the translation), deserves attention in connection with this subject, and the propriety of the Spanish Government (at least) appointing more numerous and convenient quarantine stations is apparent.

Mr. Mark's presence in England and long experience in Spanish matters may present a favourable occasion for dealing with this important question.

Case of the "Hiawatha," sent to New York as a prize.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 27th July ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me, with reference to my Reports of the 18th June last* and 5th July ultimo,† a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 320), inclosing, with other papers respecting the case of the "Hiawatha," the argument of the Advocate of the owners of that vessel; and to request that I would take these further papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship any observations I might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, under the circumstances, the Consul acted rightly in intervening, by advice of Counsel, for the absent and unrepresented British subjects who are claimants.

The only material document now transmitted is the printed argument of Mr. Edwards, Counsel for the claimants, in the case of the "Hiawatha," in the United States' District Court of the Southern District of New York, sitting, de facto and howsoever, as a Prize Court.

Many of the general points raised in this argument, especially those relating to the Constitution of the United States, and the international questions involved in the case as incident thereto, are very important, especially the question therein raised (page 6 et seq.) as to the absence of any Constitutional Power in the President to declare war; the difference between rebellion and war; the suggestion that the contest between the United States' Government and the Confederate States is not a war; the question as to the existence of any prize jurisdiction, in an international sense, in the Court; and so forth: but neither the argument for the captors contrà, nor the Judgment of Judge Dunlop in the case (apparently) of the "Tropic Wind," which is adverted to by Mr. Edwards, and of which I know nothing, nor the depositions and ship's papers in the case of the "Hiawatha" are forthcoming; and the Court had not, at the date of the last advices, given any Judgment, or intimation of its opinion. Under these circumstances, I cannot usefully offer any observations to your Lordship, merely on Mr. Edwards' argument.

The various points therein made (and, more especially, those of general Constitutional and international importance) will doubtless be steadily kept in view by Lord Lyons; and the propriety of carrying the case by appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the event of an adverse Judgment, will be duly considered, whensoever the Judgment of the District Court shall be pronounced.

and is said to have passed both Houses, entitled "A Bill to provide for the Collection of Duties on Imports, and for other purposes."

Your Lordship was pleased to add, that you thought it might be reckoned that upon the 4th section of that Bill the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown had been already given, but Her Majesty's Government were desirous of consulting us as to the remaining sections. Mr. Murray was therefore pleased to request that we would take them into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We were also honoured with a further letter from Mr. Murray, dated the 29th July instant, stating that your Lordship was pleased to direct him to transmit to us a draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, expressing the views of Her Majesty's Government upon the Law in question, and requesting that we would inform your Lordship whether, in our opinion, the terms of the proposed despatch were in conformity with the law of nations.

We were also honoured with a further letter on the 29th July instant, in which Mr. Murray states that your Lordship was pleased to direct him to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, stating that the Bill in question had passed both Houses of Congress; and a further despatch from Lord Lyons, stating that he believed no amendment was made in the Bill beyond substituting the word "Act" for the word "Bill" in the third line of section 6, and inclosing a copy of a confidential opinion given by the Counsel of the Legation on the legal effects of the Act; and requesting that we would report to your Lordship any observations which we might have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have perused the Bill in question, and your Lordship's draft despatch to Lord Lyons, into which we have, by way of suggestion, introduced some alterations and additions, subject to which we approve of the same.

A Bill further to provide for the Collection of Duties on Imports, and for other purposes.

BE it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever it shall, in the judgment of the President, by reason of unlawful combinations of persons in opposition to the laws of the United States, become impracticable to execute the revenue laws and collect the duties on imports by the ordinary means, in the ordinary way, at any port of entry in any collection district, he is authorized to cause such duties to be collected at any port of delivery in said district until such obstruction shall cease; and in such case the Surveyors at said ports of delivery shall be clothed with all the powers, and be subject to all the obligations of Collectors at ports of entry; and the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approbation of the President, shall appoint such number of weighers, gaugers, measurers, inspectors, appraisers, and clerks, as may be necessary, in his judgment, for the faithful execution of the revenue laws at said ports of delivery, and shall fix and establish the limits within such ports of delivery are constituted ports of entry, as aforesaid; and all the provisions of law regulating the issue of marine papers, the coasting trade, the warehousing of imports, and collection of duties, shall apply to the ports of entry so constituted, in the same manner as they do to ports of entry established by the laws now in force.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That if, from the cause mentioned in the foregoing section, in the judgment of the President, the revenue from duties on imports cannot be effectually collected at any port of entry in any collection district, in the ordinary way and by the ordinary means, or by the course provided in the foregoing section, then and in that case he may direct that the Custom-house for the district be established in any secure place within said district, either on land or on board any vessel in said district, or at sea near the coast; and in such case the Collector shall reside at such place, or on shipboard, as the case may be, and there detain all vessels and cargoes arriving within or approaching said district, until the duties imposed by law on said vessels and their cargoes are paid in cash: Provided, that if the owner or consignee of the cargo on board any vessel detained as aforesaid, or the master of said vessel, shall desire to enter a port of entry in any other district in the United States where no such obstructions to the execution of the laws exist, the master of such vessel may be permitted so to change the destination of the vessel and cargo in his manifest, whereupon the Collector shall deliver him a written permit to proceed to the port so designated: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, with the approbation of the President, make proper regulations for the enforcement on shipboard of such provisions of the laws regulating the assessment and collection of duties as in his judgment may be necessary and practicable.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be unlawful to take any vessel or cargo detained as aforesaid from the custody of the proper officers of the Customs, unless by process of some Court of the United States; and in case of any attempt otherwise to take such vessel or cargo by any force or combination, or assemblage of persons, too great to be overcome by the officers of the Customs, it shall and may be lawful for the President, or such person or persons as he shall have empowered for that purpose, to employ such part of the army or navy or militia of the United States, or such force of citizen volunteers as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of preventing the removal of such vessel or cargo, and protecting the officers of the Customs in retaining the custody thereof.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That if, in the judgment of the President, from the cause mentioned in the first section of this Act, the duties upon imports in any collection district cannot be effectually collected by the ordinary means and in the ordinary way, or in the mode and manner provided in the foregoing sections of this Act, then and in that case the President is hereby empowered to close the port or ports of entry in said district, and in such case give notice thereof by proclamation; and thereupon all right of importation, warehousing, and other privileges incident to ports of entry shall cease and be discontinued at such port so closed, until opened by the order of the President on the cessation of such obstructions; and if, while said ports are so closed, any ship or vessel from beyond the United States, or having on board any articles subject to duties, shall enter or attempt to enter any such port, the same, together with its tackle, apparel, furniture, and cargo, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That whenever the President, in pursuance of the provisions of the second section of the Act, entitled "An Act to provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, and to repeal the Act now in force for that purpose," approved February 28, 1795, shall have called forth the Militia to suppress combinations against the laws of the United States, and to cause the laws to be duly executed, and the insurgents shall have failed to disperse by the time directed by the President, and when said insurgents claim to act under the authority of any State or States, and such claim is not disclaimed or repudiated by the persons exercising the functions of Government in such State or States, or in the part or parts thereof in which said combination exists, nor such insurrection suppressed by said State or States, then, and in such case, it may and shall be lawful for the President, by proclamation, to declare that the inhabitants of such State, or any section or part thereof where such insurrection exists, are in a state of insurrection against the United States; and, thereupon, all commercial intercourse by and between the same, and the citizens thereof, and the citizens of the rest of the United States, shall cease and be unlawful so long as such condition of hostility shall continue; and all goods and chattels, wares and merchandize, coming from said State or section into the other parts of the United States, and all proceeding to such State or section, by land or water, shall, together with the vessel or vehicle conveying the same, or conveying persons to or from such State or section, be forfeited to the United States: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, license and permit commercial intercourse with any such part of said State or section, the inhabitants of which are so declared in a state of insurrection, in such articles, and for such time, and by such persons, as he, in his discretion, may think most conducive to the public interest; and such intercourse, so far as by him licensed, shall be conducted and carried on only in pursuance of rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. And the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint such officers at places where officers of the Customs are not now authorized by law as may be needed to carry into effect such licenses, rules, and regulations; and officers of the Customs and other officers shall receive for services under this section, and under said rules and regulations, such fees and compensation as are now allowed for similar service under other provisions of law.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That from and after fifteen days after the issuing of the said proclamation, as provided in the last foregoing section of this Bill, any ship or vessel belonging in whole or in part to any citizen or inhabitant of said State or part of a State whose inhabitants are so declared in a state of insurrection, found at sea, or in any port of the rest of the United States, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That in the execution of the provisions of this Act, and of the other laws of the United States providing for the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, it may and shall be lawful for the President, in addition to the revenue cutters in service, to employ in aid thereof such other suitable vessels as may, in his judgment, be required.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the forfeitures and penalties incurred by virtue of this Act may be mitigated or remitted in pursuance of the authority vested in the Secretary of the Treasury by the Act entitled "An Act providing for mitigating or remitting the forfeitures, penalties, and disabilities accruing in certain cases therein mentioned," approved March 3, 1797, or in cases where special circumstances may seem to require it, according to regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That proceedings on seizures for forfeitures under this Act may be pursued in the Courts of the United States in any district into which the property so seized may be taken and proceedings instituted; and such Courts shall have and entertain as full jurisdiction over the same as if the seizure was made in that district.

Proposed Despatch to Lord Lyons.

My Lord, Foreign Office, August , 1861.

I HAVE received your Lordship's despatch of the 12th ultimo.

The Bill which you have transmitted to me, entitled "A Bill further to provide for the Collection of Duties on Imports, and for other purposes," raises a very serious question.

By the 1st Section it is proposed to give to the President the power of closing any ports of the United States "whenever it shall, in the judgment of the President, by reason of unlawful combinations of persons in opposition to the laws of the United States, become impracticable to execute the revenue laws, and collect the duties on imports by the ordinary means in the ordinary way," and also to give him the power of causing such duties to be collected at any port of delivery.

The 2nd Section provides for the establishment of the Custom-house, in such case, in any secure place on land, "or on board any vessel in said district, or at sea near the coast," and contains other provisions in aid of this object; and by the words at the end of the 4th Section it is enacted that "if, while said ports of entry are so closed, any ship or vessel from beyond the United States, or having on board any articles subject to duties, shall enter or attempt to enter any such port, the same, together with its tackle, apparel, furniture, and cargo, shall be forfeited to the United States."

It is obvious that this Act gives power to the President to confiscate a foreign vessel, with its cargo, for attempting to enter a port which has not been blockaded, and is not in the possession of the Executive, and as to the closing of which none of the parties interested may have received any previous notice.

The Act, it is to be observed, speaks of "unlawful combinations of persons in opposition to the laws of the United States, and seems to contemplate riotous combinations or insurrections of a partial, temporary, or local nature, not constituting a state or war—combinations of persons simply opposing the laws of the United States. But the joint Resolution of the Senate and Representatives, contained in your Lordship's despatch No. 329 of the 12th instant, speaks a very different language. In this Resolution we find it affirmed that a formidable insurrection has, since the 4th day of March last, arrayed itself in armed hostility to the Government of the United States; that the President, on the 15th day of April, issued his Proclamation calling out 75,000 men to suppress such insurrectionary combinations; that on the 19th day of April he issued his Proclamation setting on foot a blockade of the ports within seven of the States of the Union; that on the 27th of April he proclaimed a blockade of the ports of two more of the States of the Union; that on the 3rd day of May he issued a Proclamation increasing the army by 22,714 men, and the navy by 18,000 seamen.

In addition to these Acts, thus stated by both Houses, we have the information that, in his Message to Congress, the President has called for 400,000 men and 400,000,000 dollars.

After the recital of these immense efforts it seems quite inappropriate to speak of "unlawful combinations." Indeed, it cannot be denied that the state of things which exists is a state of civil war, and there is, as regards neutral nations, no difference between civil war and foreign war.

Acting on these principles, Her Majesty's Government has, accordingly, recognized the state of civil war as existing, and all the rights which belong to a belligerent Her Majesty fully acknowledges to reside in the Government of the United States. But Her Majesty cannot acknowledge that ports in the complete possession of the (so-called) "Confederate States," and which are not blockaded, shall be interdicted to the commerce of Her Majesty's subjects by Decree of the President of the United States, or by a Law passed by their Congress. This would be, in effect, to allow the lawfulness of a paper blockade, extending over 3,000 miles of coast.

Her Majesty's Government cannot admit a right in any Power not in possession of the port, to erect a so-called "Custom-house" on board a ship "at sea near the coast," and there to exact duties.

The principle is in this case so very clear that it is needless to refer ot the case of Spain and Venezuela, or to any other case of a like nature.

Her Majesty's Government decline to discuss the legality or the justice of the conduct of the Confederate States. With the legality or illegality, according to the Constitution and Laws of the United States, of the acts of the (so-called) Confederate States, or their officers and forces, foreign Governments have nothing to do; but they are compelled to recognize this fact, viz., the existence, the extent, and continuance of a formidable resistance to the authority of the United States.

The main question is as to the power assumed to be given to the President, of instituting a mere paper blockade of ports not in his possession. This power Her Majesty's Government cannot acknowledge as belonging to him by international law, or as consistent with the friendly and commercial relations at present subsisting between the United States and Great Britain; and they would consider its exercise as a violation of the unquestionable rights of neutral nations. Her Majesty's Government trust, however, that the President of the United States will not exercise the power which he is enabled to assume by the Act which I have discussed in this despatch. He has in his own hands the right of blockading the Southern ports, in conformity with international law, without raising objections on the part of other maritime Powers.

You will read and give a copy of this despatch to Mr. Seward.

I am, &c.

Vexatious legal proceedings at Liverpool against Captain Wikman of the Swedish brig "Phœnix," arising out of arrest and discharge of seamen, and actions for wages.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 31, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st of October, 1860, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence which took place in 1858, with reference to a complaint made by the Swedish and Norwegian Minister at this Court of some vexatious legal proceedings to which Captain Wikman of the Swedish brig "Phœnix" was, at that time, subjected at Liverpool.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to forward a note, with its inclosures, recently received from Count Platen, from which it appeared that the result of the litigation has been that Captain Wikman has had refunded to him the sum of 104*l.*, which, in the first instance, he was obliged to pay into Court on various accounts to free himself from arrest; but that to effect this object, he had been personally put to the expense of 75*l.* 6*s.* 7*d.*, from which he requested that he might, under the circumstances, be relieved; and requesting that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which should be made to Count Platen's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the accompanying papers, and have the honour to report—

That we recommend that, in reply to Count Platen's application, contained in his despatch to your Lordship of the 25th October, 1860, his Excellency should be informed that Her Majesty's Government must decline, under the circumstances, to reimburse to Captain Wikman any part of the sum of 75*l.* 6*s.* 7*d.* mentioned in that despatch. This amount was paid by Captain Wikman, partly in connexion with two several applications made by him to the magistrates at Liverpool, for warrants to send on board the "Phœnix," as deserters, the two seamen, Walstrom and Stephenson; partly in resisting an application to the Lord Chief Baron at Liverpool, to discharge the seaman Walstrom out of custody, on habeas corpus; but principally in resisting three actions which were brought by the mariners Stephenson, Walstrom, and Matsson, respectively, against Captain Wikman, for recovery of wages alleged by them to have been earned, and to be then payable, for services rendered on board the "Phœnix."

The portions of the law bills paid by Captain Wikman relative to the warrants for sending the deserters on board, and to the attempt of one of them to obtain his release by habeas corpus, present instances of resort by the captain and crew, in turn, to the English Courts for the maintenance of authority, on one side, and the protection of personal liberty on the other. To the captain and crew, equally, the British tribunals were open; so long as both the applicant and the person resisting the application were within the local jurisdiction, these proceedings were strictly according to the English law, and were precisely such as, under the like circumstances, might have been adopted (and would have had the like results) if the ship had been a British ship, and the captain and crew natural-born British subjects. Although, in the words of Mr. Secretary Walpole (see letter of the 6th December, 1858), the powers of the Statute 14 and 15 Vict., cap. 52, appear to have been scandalously taken advantage of and abused, we must observe that this wrong was done, not by the magistrates who administered the English law, but by the Swedish subjects who, by false affidavits, caused it to be put in force for their own improper purposes. The expense to which Captain Wikman has been put, by reason of these proceedings, cannot, on any principal of international law, or of justice, be cast upon the State in which the proceedings occurred. It is obvious that no blame rests with the Liverpool magistrates, or with the Lord Chief Baron, all of whom simply discharged their duty in administering the existing law, according to the prescribed mode of procedure; and in two of the three instances, on the application of the captain himself. The laws thus administered not being contrary to natural justice, it follows that no ground of claim or complaint is, in these cases, furnished to the Swedish Government against the Government of Her Majesty.

With reference to the three actions for wages, the proceedings against the captain by the seaman Stephenson differ from those of the two other plaintiffs. In Stephenson's action, which was instituted in the County Court, no arrest took place, nor was the captain called upon to make any deposit, or to give bail or other security. He was simply served with process of the Court; and thinking it prudent to employ Counsel to conduct his defence, he did so. The defence was successful; and the Court awarded in favour of the captain, and against the plaintiff, the sum of 3*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* for costs, that sum being the amount legally payable by the losing to the successful party in such a case. It may be that the defeated plaintiff was without the means of paying these costs, and whether they can be deducted from his wages at the end of the voyage, according to the law of Sweden, we are not informed. But, be that as it may, it is equally clear that the Swedish Government cannot found any complaint on the fact of Stephenson's poverty, but for which the captain would have received his awarded costs in the action in the County Court. It is equally clear that the difference between the amount so awarded to Captain Wikman, and the sum he was called on to pay to his solicitors, cannot be justly demanded. For, in the first place, extra costs, even if unavoidably incurred, are an ordinary incident of litigation, and must fall, therefore, on the suitor by whom they are incurred; and in the next, it was competent for the captain and those who advised and acted for him to have kept, in the conduct of the defence, strictly within the limits of the allowed costs in such cases; and although, therefore, the excess may, on the whole, have been a prudent disbursement, it was not a necessary one. The captain having thus, in effect, made the payment voluntarily, must, on common principle, bear the loss.

In each of the two remaining actions Captain Wikman was arrested, and, in order to obtain his release, and as a substitute for bail, he was allowed to pay into Court the amount of the alleged debt, together with additional sums by way of security for the plaintiff's costs. In these actions the captain obtained orders for stay of the proceedings against him, unless the plaintiffs should give security for his costs; that security they failed to give, and consequently the proceedings fell to the ground. The expense of those proceedings to Captain Wikman has exceeded 50*l.*; and, here again, we consider the claim put forward in Count Platen's last despatch to be quite unfounded. By the Absconding Debtor's Arrest Act, 1851 (which followed up the 1 and 2 Vict., cap. 110, sec. 3), any person making an affidavit that another is indebted to him to the amount of 20*l.* or upwards, and showing, on the face of his affidavit, probable cause for a belief entertained that the alleged debtor is about to quit the country, with intent to avoid or delay the creditor, may apply to a country Commissioner of Bankruptcy (amongst others) for a warrant to arrest the debtor, and to compel him, as the condition of his liberation, either to give bail, or to make a sufficient pecuniary deposit with the officer by whom the warrant may have been executed. It was under this Act of 1851 that Mr. Commissioner Perry, acting upon the affidavits of the plaintiffs, granted warrants for the captain's arrest, and the captain deposited the sums which were ultimately refunded to him out of Court. Application was made, on the captain's affidavit, for his relief from bail or deposit to one of the Judges of the Superior Courts of Law, and failed; and it cannot be supposed that the ordinary legal procedure was not fairly followed in each of the two cases. Steps might, according to the ordinary procedure of the Court, have been taken to compel the plaintiffs either to bring their cases before the Court for adjudication, or, if they declined to do so, to compel them to submit, without trial, to an adverse judgment, and, as a consequence, to the liability to Captain Wikman to pay his costs of the proceedings. But the captain seems to have been advised to endeavour to arrest the proceedings, with the view of obtaining security for his costs, and, that security not having been given, to put an end to the suits, without the cases having been submitted to the Court for adjudication, or any judgment having been given; and in these attempts he fully succeeded. This may have been a prudent course, regard being had to the prospect of Captain Wikman's being enabled to obtain from the plaintiffs repayment of any outlay he might have made in the suits. But (as we have pointed out in our remarks on the County Court action of the sailor Stephenson) the poverty of a suitor, which always and of necessity occasions loss to an adversary who is successful, being unavoidable, involves no reproach on the municipal law, and no ground of remonstrance on the part of a foreign Government,

We have, throughout our remarks on the actions for wages, assumed that the Courts to which Captain Wikman was summoned had, under the circumstances, and in conformity with English and public law, jurisdiction to entertain and decide the questions so brought before them. Of the existence of this jurisdiction we entertain no doubt whatever, though Count Platen repeatedly in his despatches claims exclusive jurisdiction in such cases, and with reference to ships generally (including merchant-ships) for the tribunals of the country of the flag. In opposition to his Excellency's views thus expressed, we have to state that in matters of contract the English law admits no such exclusive jurisdiction, but entertains familiarly questions of that class, in whatever part of the world the contract may have been made; provided only the person charged with breach of such contract be within the local jurisdiction, and be there served with the process of the Court. We must add, at the same time, that, in determining the questions so entertained, the English Courts follow the lex loci contractus in forming their judgment of the meaning and effect of the contract, and as to whether it has, or has not, been observed. So that, assuming that under the engagements which subsisted between the master and crew of the "Phœnix," no wages were, by the law of Sweden, payable until the completion of the voyage and the arrival in Sweden, the sailors, if they had carried their causes to trial, would have been defeated, and adjudged to pay the defendant's costs. The same result would, as we have stated, have followed if, on legal pressure, they had declined to try. The jurisdiction thus exercised is one which England has ever asserted and enforced; which cannot be given up; and which is not at variance with any recognised principle or rule of international law.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 31, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 21st June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing the copy of a despatch from the Governor of Canada, together with an Act amending the Provisional Statute enacted for carrying out the Treaty with the United States for the Extradition of Criminals,* and requesting that we would take this Act into our consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we saw any objection to its confirmation.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the accompanying papers, and have the honour to report—

Right claimed by British Admiral on North American station, to search merchant-vessels (Foreign as well as British) in British waters for deserters, without intervention of the Civil Power.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 2, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 15th July ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter and its inclosures from the Admiralty, relative to the right claimed by the British Admiral on the North American station, to search merchant-vessels (Foreign as well as British) in British waters for deserters, without the intervention of the Civil power; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 24th July last, transmitting a despatch from Lord Lyons on this subject (No. 323, July 8).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

First, that it appears to us that the only statutable authority under which officers of Her Majesty's navy can board any merchant-vessel, whether British or foreign, in search of deserters, is the Act 10 and 11 Vict., cap. 62, which authorizes the apprehension by a constable, or where no constable is at hand, by any person in Her Majesty's service, of individuals reasonably suspected of desertion from the navy.

* Act returned to the Colonial Office.

For any other or more general right of search for deserters (when the object is not to apprehend any particular individual), there is not, to our knowledge, any legal authority.

No such right is stated to exist in any book of law to which we have been enabled to refer; and the statute already mentioned seems to us to be hardly consistent with its existence. If it does exist, it can only be by virtue of some immemorial usage, of which we can find no satisfactory proof.

We would add, that no reference to what may have been the practice of officers of the Royal Navy on the high seas can support a general right of searching foreign vessels for deserters. Over such vessels no such right can be exercised, unless when they are within British territorial jurisdiction, in which case its exercise, to be lawful, must depend on the local law.

The instructions to Admiral Milne, under the peculiar circumstances in which he is placed, are obviously a question for the discretion of Her Majesty's Government.

We have endeavoured to state our view of the law for his guidance.

Action for damages brought by Mr. Moss against Mr. Alcock in the Supreme Court at Hong Kong.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 5, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th of June last, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 26th of April last,* and of the 8th† and 11th of June last,‡ respecting the case of Mr. Moss, you were pleased to direct him to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Alcock (No. 31, April 3), by which we perceive that, on hearing that Mr. Moss had brought an action against him in the Supreme Court at Hong Kong, he had thought it advisable at once to repair to the Colony, to meet the action with such assistance as he could obtain on the spot.

Mr. Hammond also inclosed, confidentially, two private letters from Mr. Alcock to himself of April 5 and May 1, from the last of which we would see that the action cannot for the present be proceeded with, and that Mr. Alcock has returned to Japan.

Mr. Hammond requested that we would consider the present position of this case, and advise your Lordship as to the course which should be pursued in the interest of Her Majesty's Government, who are resolved, considering the difficult circumstances in which Mr. Alcock was placed, to bear him harmless; and as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Alcock with reference to the contingency of proceedings being hereafter commenced against him.

Liability to which Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers are subject, of being diverted by process of law from the performance of their duties, and being subjected to be cast in damages, which being unable to meet, they might be liable to arrest and imprisonment.

That there was, however, a further and very serious question involved in this case, namely, the liability to which Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular officers were subject of being diverted by process of law from the performance of their proper duties, and being subjected to be cast in damages which they might be unable at once to meet, and consequently to arrest and imprisonment in default of payment.

That such a state of things might be brought about by circumstances over which they had no control, and in regard to which a Superior Court of Justice might hold them irresponsible; yet the public interests would in all cases suffer, not only by the disparagement in the estimation of the people of the country, which a Diplomatic or Consular Officer would needs suffer, but possibly by the British community at large in the country where they now reside, being deprived of the protection and support which the presence of the Diplomatic or Consular Officer is calculated and intended to afford.

Your Lordship was pleased to suggest that we should, after disposing of the immediate case, take this point into our special consideration, with the view of suggesting, if possible, some mode by which the inconvenience of such a state of things as had occurred in regard to Mr. Moss' case might be obviated.

We were honoured with a letter from Lord Wodehouse dated the 28th of June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Alcock (No. 43, May 8) inclosing an opinion given by the Attorney-General of Hong Kong in the case of Mr. Moss, and requesting that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those submitted to us in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th of June last, in which we were requested to advise your Lordship as to the course which should be pursued in the interest of Her Majesty's Government, and also as to the mode by which the inconveniences which had occurred in the Moss case might be obviated for the future.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the accompanying papers, and have the honour to report—

That, with reference to Mr. Hammond's letter of June 15, we have to observe that the best course to be taken is to instruct the Attorney-General at Hong Kong to act as he may think best, and to use his best exertions on behalf of Mr. Alcock in any legal proceedings pending, or hereafter instituted, against him at Hong Kong, at the suit of Mr. Moss. The suggestion contained in Mr. Alcock's despatch No. 31, page 16, as to his having the assistance of the Attorney-General at Hong Kong whenever occasion may arise for seeking it, appears to us to deserve favourable consideration. We are not aware of what is the precise meaning of "the same right of reference to the Attorney-General for assistance which the Minister in China enjoys," as this is not explained; but we consider it desirable that Mr. Alcock and Her Majesty's other Consular officers in Japan should receive whatever professional assistance in the discharge of their duties, and in defending any actions brought against them for their public and official acts, the Attorney-General may be able to render them.

With reference to the more general question recommended to our special consideration, we must observe—

1st. That the personal presence of Consular officers either at Hong Kong or in any other Colony, or in England, where legal proceedings may be instituted against them for damages in respect of their official acts, is, as a general rule, by no means essential to their protection.

2nd. There was, in our opinion, in this case, no necessity for Mr. Alcock's leaving Japan and proceeding to Hong Kong, merely by reason of his having received notice of action at the suit of Mr. Moss.

3rd. As a general rule Consular officers should be instructed not to leave their posts in such cases; and the Law Officers of the Crown, at whatever place such proceedings may be instituted or pending, should be generally instructed in such cases to appear for them, and defend their interests, and generally to act on their behalf as they may consider most expedient.

These suggestions, if properly carried out in practice, will tend greatly to obviate many of the serious results alluded to in Mr. Hammond's letter.

We must add, 4thly, that if Consular officers in countries like Japan will neither publish "Rules and Regulations," as they are specially instructed and required to do, nor construe and apply the extraordinary criminal jurisdiction and powers entrusted to them with ordinary judicial discrimination, it will be scarcely possible for Her Majesty's Government altogether to shelter or protect them from all liability in respect of acts of serious illegality, which, although done optimâ fide, and with the most honest intentions, are attended with the gravest and most injurious results to individuals.

5th. The 41st section of the Order in Council of January 23, 1860 (Japan), provides to a certain extent for the protection of Consular officers, and all persons acting under the authority and in execution of the power or jurisdiction of Her Majesty, entrusted to them by the Order, or in execution of any of the provisions of the Order; and if it should be considered by Her Majesty's Government necessary for the public interest to extend the protection already secured thereby, and by the general law, to Consular officers in respect of their judicial acts, we can only say that the whole subject should be maturely considered upon Imperial grounds, and such further legislative action thereupon taken as may be thought expedient and practicable. An Order in Council cannot protect those who act in excess of its provisions, and not "under or by virtue of its authority," and the Legislature may be reluctant to provide for exceptional cases.

We consider it our duty to observe that Mr. Moss's case does not appear to us to be, either per se, or as one of a class of cases, of such a character or complexion as to call for any further legislative enactment.

Were the practices of going out shooting, or of carrying arms, properly restrained by Consular "Rules and Regulations" in Japan, such cases would seldom, if ever, recur.

With reference to the papers which we are desired by Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 28th June to take into our consideration, we have to observe that, in our opinion, no action can be successfully maintained by Mr. Moss against Mr. Alcock, in the Supreme Court at Hong Kong, in respect of the treatment which Mr. Moss suffered, under what we have already advised was the illegal sentence pronounced by Mr. Alcock. Under the Order in Council of the 23rd of January, 1860, the Court is to exercise jurisdiction "concurrently with Her Majesty's Consul" only (section 28), and the Consul is unable, of course, to exercise jurisdiction in a case to which he himself is party.

With reference to protecting statutes, to which Mr. Small, the Attorney-General for Hong Kong, refers at large, the case stands thus:—

1st. The 42 Geo. III, cap. 85, sec. 6, only extends to public officers having power abroad to commit persons to safe custody, the privileges of the 21 Jac. I, cap. 12, and that with the qualification that acts done abroad may be described in pleading, as done at Westminster; thus, in effect, only conferring upon a defendant, within its provisions, the privilege of pleading the general issue, and giving his defence in evidence under it.

2nd. The 11 and 12 Vict., cap. 44 (Jervis's Act) has no bearing upon the case. It relates, in its terms, to Justices of the Peace only; and is not, like the 21 Jac. I, cap. 12, extended by any other statute to officers abroad, &c.

3rd. Under the Order in Council of January 23, 1860 (section 41) the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 94, are made applicable to persons in the position of Mr. Alcock, and those provisions require the action to be brought within a limited time; and the defendant is also entitled to notice of action, and may tender amends, as is provided in favour of Justices of the Peace by the 24 Geo. II, cap. 44.

We think that Mr. Alcock is not exempt from liability to be sued at law for illegal acts which he may commit in the exercise of his Consular judicial authority, as being the Judge of a Superior Court.

We think that jurisdiction is sufficiently conferred on the Supreme Court at Hong Kong to try British subjects for crimes committed in Japan, by the 27th Article of the Order in Council of January 23, 1860, and that it would not be expedient, at present, to endeavour to obtain an alteration of the law, as suggested by Mr. Small, in his letter of the 8th of May.

Commission of 2½ per cent. charged by Consul at Madeira for arrangement of property of late Mr. J. Unwin.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 8, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 20th June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence that had taken place between your Office, Mr. W. Unwin, and Her Majesty's Consul at Madeira,* respecting the estate of the late Mr. J. Unwin, a British subject, who died in that Island in July 1860, and that the Consul having requested the opinion of the Secretary of State upon the propriety of making a claim under the provisions of the Act

* From Consul Erskine, No. 11, January 30, 1861; to Consul Erskine, February 19 and May 12, 1861; from Mr. W. Unwin, May 2, 1861; from Acting Consul Hayward, No. 31, June 1, 1861.

6 Geo. IV, c. 87, and the Order in Council of May 1, 1855, for the management of the property in question, your Lordship was pleased to inform Mr. Erskine that, under the circumstances stated by him, your Lordship was of opinion that he was fairly entitled to a commission of 2½ per cent.

That the representatives of the deceased, however, disputed the right of the Consul to receive it; and Lord Wodehouse was pleased to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether your Lordship was borne out in the opinion expressed by you to the Consul.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the accompanying papers, and have the honour to report—

That we think the opinion expressed by your Lordship to the Consul is not well founded.

It would, in our opinion, be highly proper and expedient that Her Majesty should, by Order in Council, authorize an amended Table of Fees, by which reasonable fees should be allowed to Consuls for services of the nature of those rendered in the present case; and, also, that the Consul's interposition, in circumstances like those of the present case, to preserve the property of British intestates from depredation before any person having a lawful title thereto can take charge thereof, should be made (by legislation if necessary) part of his official duty. (The Bill on the subject of domicile, introduced by the present Lord Chancellor, having now become law, this latter object has, we conceive, been accomplished.) But, in the present case, the question is whether the Consul is entitled, under the existing Table of Fees, to a commission of 2½ per cent. on the late Mr. Unwin's property? That commission is allowed by the second part of the Table, which relates to "matters in which the Consul's interposition is to be given only when required by the parties interested;" and, under such circumstances (i. e., when the Consul has acted upon the requisition of the parties interested), it is allowed for "management of property." But, in the present case, the Consul's action was spontaneous, and not upon the requisition of any party interested; and we also find it very difficult to say that the mere act of placing the Consular seal upon the repositories in which the intestate's property was found at his death, and giving the Consular sanction to the continuance of that property under the charge of the intestate's confidential servant, who was already in the house, can be held to amount to "management" within the meaning of the Table. "Management of property" seems to us, in the proper sense of the words, to imply active duties, involving both legal responsibility, and the expenditure of time and labour, as well as some continuous exercise of judgment and discretion; and the principle and scale of remuneration, by a commission of 2½ per cent., appears suitable to such duties, according to the analogy of Commission Agents and Indian executors and administrators, who are allowed by law similar commissions.

For this class of services such a commission may be no more than a fair and reasonable remuneration; but we think it might in many instances be excessive and unreasonable, if paid for such services only (however useful) as those rendered by Mr. Erskine in this case, which is an additional reason for supposing that it was not intended to apply to such a case. Upon the whole we think that the Consul's claim cannot be sustained.

We have, &c.

Application of T. G. Aslan to have a declaration of part-ownership in a British vessel

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 9, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 25th of June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Cairo (No. 25, May 30, 1861), requesting instructions as to whether he should or should not comply with an application made to him in that place by a person named Themistocles George Aslan, to have his declaration of part-ownership in attested at the British Consulate at Cairo; he being unprovided with a Foreign Office passport, and therefore not entitled to British nationality in Egypt.

a British vessel attested at the British Consulate, seeing that the person in question, being unprovided with a Foreign Office passport, had no right to claim British nationality in Egypt; and requested that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer that should be returened to Mr. Calvert.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the accompanying papers, and have the honour to report—

That in our opinion the question of Mr. Aslan's right to have his declaration of part-ownership in a British vessel attested at the British Consulate at Cairo depends not upon the terms of his letters of naturalization, nor upon the circumstance of his having or not having a foreign passport, but upon the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 17 & 18 Vict., cap. 104, section 18. By that Act persons who are naturalized by or pursuant to statute are rendered capable of being owners or part-owners of a British ship, only if they "are and continue to be during the whole period of their so being owners, first, resident in some place within Her Majesty's dominions, or, second, if not so resident, members of a British factory, or partners in a house actually carrying on business in the United Kingdom, or in some other place within Her Majesty's dominions." Mr. Aslan, as it appears, is not a person fulfilling the first of these conditions, but it does not appear whether he is or is not a member of a British factory, or a partner in a house actually carrying on business within Her Majesty's dominions: if he is, we think that the application made by him to the British Consul at Cairo to attest his declaration of ownership ought to be complied with; if not, he is by law incapable of being owner or part-owner of a British ship, and the ship of which he is owner or part-owner cannot be deemed to be British; in which case we think that the Consul ought not to attest his declaration.

The clause in Mr. Aslan's letters of naturalization excepting from the grant "any rights and capacities of a natural-born British subject out of and beyond the dominions of the British Crown and the limits thereof," appears to us to be intended only to prevent the person thereby naturalized from claiming, by virtue of his naturalization, as against foreign Governments while within their territories, the benefit of the status of a British subject. We do not think that it applies, or was it intended to be applicable, to the right and capacity of the person naturalized (provided he fulfils the requirements of the Merchant Shipping Act), to be and continue, while locally resident beyond the limits of Her Majesty's dominions, an owner or part-owner of a British ship; and to do, while there, all acts proper to be done by him in that character. Such a right is not one of which any foreign locality can be predicated merely because the person entitled to it may happen to be residing abroad; it is, in its nature, essentially a British right, its subject being a British ship having her port of registry within the dominions of the British Crown; and, if locality is to be ascribed to it at all, we think it must follow the port or domicile of the ship, and not the residence of the owner.

Lord Wodehouse was pleased to inclose copies of the Treaties of Tien-tsin and Peking, and of the Orders in Council of June 13, 1853, and March 3, 1859, for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the accompanying papers, and have the honour to report—

That the IXth Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin purports to authorize British subjects generally to travel, for their pleasure or for purposes of trade, "to all parts of the interior" of China, "under passports which will be issued by their Consuls, and countersigned by the local authorities." It is, undoubtedly, competent for the Consuls, under instructions from the Chief Superintendent of Trade, to refuse passports to any part of China, for reasons applicable to the persons applying for them; but it appears to us that it can hardly be competent for the Chief Superintendent for Trade, in the exercise of a merely administrative discretion, to forbid the delivery of any passports, to any British subjects, for one particular city, not excepted from the Article of the Treaty; for this would be to suspend and nullify, by an act of administrative discretion, the whole operation of this stipulation in the Treaty, as to that particular place. We therefore recommend that Mr. Bruce should not be instructed, in the terms of the proposed despatch, to continue, as long as he deems it expedient, to forbid the delivery to British subjects of passports for Peking; but that he should be instructed to exercise the powers vested in him as Chief Superintendent of Trade, by issuing, without delay, proper rules and regulations on the subject of passports generally, by which the mode and conditions of the delivery of passports shall be defined, and the penalties to be inflicted upon British subjects travelling without passports, beyond the allowed limits, fixed and ascertained. By such rules and regulations it may, in our opinion, be provided that while passports will be granted generally, and under the ordinary rules, for such places, and within such limits, as may be thought expedient, passports for other places (including Peking) will be granted only under special circumstances, and after a reference of each application (if that shall be thought necessary) to the personal consideration of the Chief Superintendent of Trade, who may be expressly authorized either to grant or refuse the same, as in the exercise of his judgment and discretion, in each particular case, he may deem expedient.

Sir, Foreign Office, July , 1861.

YOU will perceive from the inclosed correspondence that I have consulted the Earl of Elgin upon the question raised in your despatch No. 28 of the 10th of April, and its inclosures, respecting the visits of Her Majesty's subjects to Peking, and I have now to state to you that, having taken the matter into consideration, Her Majesty's Government approve your proceedings as reported in that despatch, and authorize you to continue, as long as you deem it expedient, to forbid the delivery to British subjects of passports for Peking.

I have no doubt that you would be justified under the powers vested in you as Chief Superintendent of Trade, in issuing a rule or regulation to this effect, and in affixing a penalty to the violation of it, but the expediency of your adopting so extreme a measure may be open to question, and I should hope that by your instructing Her Majesty's Consuls not to issue passports for Peking, you will be able equally to secure the desired object.

Mr. Rothery's Report to the Treasury, suggesting the expediency of consolidating and amending the Slave Trade Acts.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 15, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 18th July ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Treasury, dated the 29th of June last, together with a Report and its inclosures from Mr. Rothery, the legal adviser of their Lordships on Slave Trade matters, suggesting the expediency of consolidating and amending the Slave Trade Acts; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether it would be advisable to carry out Mr. Rothery's suggestion; and if so, whether that gentleman would be a fit and proper person to be entrusted with the work.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that it will be advisable to carry out Mr. Rothery's suggestions; but that the proposed consolidation should not be confined to questions of bounties to captors (with which the Treasury is chiefly concerned), but should extend to the "Slave Trade Suppression Acts" generally; and we would suggest that provision should be made for adapting and applying the Imperial legislation, as far as practicable, to new Conventions which may hereafter be negotiated, and to new circumstances which may arise from time to time, by Order in Council.

Under the peculiar circumstances of the case, we see no objection to the employment of Mr. Rothery; but the draft of the proposed Bill should be submitted to us before it is introduced into either House of Parliament.

Murder of two Maltese. Promise of impunity to an accomplice giving positive evidence of the murderers.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 16, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Acting British Agent and Consul-General at Tunis (No. 22, July 27), reporting the murder of two Maltese on the 2nd of July, and requesting to be informed whether he might promise impunity to an accomplice who might give positive evidence as to the persons who committed the murder; and requesting that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Werry on this point.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the papers submitted to us, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the proper answer to be returned to Mr. Werry on the point of a promise of impunity to a supposed accomplice in the murder, on his giving positive evidence as to the persons by whom the murder was committed, is that Mr. Werry is at liberty to exercise his own discretion on the subject, and to promise impunity, if still of opinion that, thereby, the discovery of the perpetrators of the crime is likely to be secured.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 17, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 6th August instant, stating that, with reference to my Reports of the 6th,* 19th,† and 24th of June,‡ and 3rd of July ultimo,§ relative to the cases of the "Monmouth" and "Hilja," he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 348), forwarding copies of a correspondence with the Acting British Consul at Savannah, in which further particulars are given with regard to the blockade of that port; and to request that I would take this statement into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which I might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this statement into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, with more especial reference to my Reports of June 6 and July 3, I observe that it now appears that Savannah (for which it is suggested that the "Monmouth" had an alternative destination in the event, which happened, of her being warned off Charleston) was not only not blockaded on the 12th of May (on which day the "Monmouth" was boarded off Charleston and warned off that port, and further notified of the blockade of "the whole south coast of the United States of America" by indorsement on her papers), but that the blockade of Savannah only began on the 28th of May. This fact strengthens the possible claim against the Government of the United States of the British subjects interested in this ship, or her cargo or freight.

I am not, however, at present aware of the actual international or official position of this claim, or of the case of the "Monmouth" generally. I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere spontaneously, or to take any step, merely of its own accord, in this matter.

If any claim has been specifically made by her owners on Her Majesty's Government, or has been advanced by Her Majesty's Government on their behalf against that of the United States, I must desire further information, and request that (with the assistance of the Queen's Proctor, if needful) something in the shape of a "case" may be prepared, and my opinion required on some one or more definite questions.

Proposed draft of Convention with foreign countries for the better ascertainment of the Law of Foreign countries when pleaded in Courts within Her Majesty's dominions.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 16, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 26th of July last, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 16th of July last,‖ in which we stated that it would be advisable for Her Majesty's Government to take steps for negotiating Conventions with those foreign countries with which Her Majesty's subjects had most frequent dealings, in order to carry out the object of the Act 24 Vict., cap. 11, called "An Act to afford facilities for the better ascertainment of the Law of Foreign Countries when pleaded in Courts within Her Majesty's Dominions;" and suggesting that means should, in the first place, be taken to ascertain whether a favourable disposition towards such Convention was manifested on the part of the Governments of such countries, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that it was not clear to you what were the precise objects of the contemplated Conventions, nor what was the nature of the international stipulations, by which the Act was to be carried out, in regard to the communications between the legal tribunals of this country and those of foreign countries; and to state that your Lordship wished, previously to entering into communication with any foreign Government on the subject, to have some definite statement of what stipulations it was intended to propose on the part of Her Majesty's Government: and his Lordship requested that we would furnish your Lordship with a draft of such Articles as we might think fitted to carry out the object of the Statute.

Right of British subjects, natives of Madras, embarking in French ships at Pondicherry for Réunion, to the same Consular protection in that island as if they had embarked at a British port in India.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 22, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th August instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Mr. Pakenham, who is temporarily in charge of Her Majesty's Consulate at Réunion (No. 6, July 6, 1861), requesting to be informed whether British subjects, natives of Madras, who have embarked in French ships at Pondicherry for Réunion are entitled, in that island, to the same Consular protection as if they had embarked at a British port in India; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Pakenham's inquiry.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I presume that this question is to be considered with reference to the Convention between this country and France of July 25, 1860, which is transmitted with the papers, althongh not mentioned in the covering letter, or the Consul's despatch.

If this be so the Ist and XXth Articles of the Convention appear to me to be decisive; and Mr. Pakenham's question should, as I understand it, be answered affirmatively.

All British subjects, including the persons specified in Article XXIV (wheresoever embarked), are entitled to British protection in Réunion.

This appears so plainly to be the meaning of Article XX, that I do not see how any question about it can have arisen; and inasmuch as the Consul does not allude to the Article or the Convention, nor state that any objection has been raised by the French authorities, I would suggest that he be requested (for fear of any misapprehension) to send a fuller explanation of his doubts or difficulties.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 23, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th August instant, stating that he was directed to request that I would take into my consideration the inclosed papers* relative to a complaint made by a Mr. Morgell respecting the disposition of some property left by a deceased relation in France, and that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which should be adopted in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Morgell's letter of the 1st August is of so very vague and incoherent a character as to suggest doubts as to the state of his mind, or capacity for business.

I can only suggest that he should be informed that your Lordship sees no ground for imputing any blame to Consul Pickford or to the French authorities in the matter in question; that the Consul was justified in giving a certificate that by the Law of England a bastard has no claim on the effects of his putative father deceased; that your Lordship observes that Mr. Morgell states himself to be the natural son of the deceased Major Morgell, who appears to have died in France, but where domiciled does not appear, to have left a will, to have appointed an executor (in which will it is not stated that there was any disposition in favour of Mr. Morgell), and to have left at least one legitimate relation, a sister, Miss Morgell, surviving him, who benefited by the will; that your Lordship sees no reason or object for interfering in a matter in which Mr. Morgell has had full notice, information, and opportunity for asserting his legal rights (if any), and in which he has apparently met with no denial of justice; that your Lordship must require Mr. Morgell, in case he continues this correspondence (which is full of vague complaints, charges, and assertions against private individuals), to give his address and profession or employment, and also a reference to some persons of known respectability in England.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 24, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th August instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 10th July ultimo,* he was directed to state to me that, as there seems to be some doubt on the points submitted to me regarding the claim of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, arising out of tonnage duties levied at Panamá on their vessels, your Lordship has caused the Memorandum (therewith inclosed) to be drawn up in explanation of the exact state of the question, and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, together with the previous correspondence therewith returned to me, and which has been bound up for convenience of reference, and that I would report to your Lordship my opinion how far Her Majesty's Government would be justified in claiming on behalf of the Pacific Steam Packet Company, the repayment, by New Granada, of the amount of tonnage dues paid by them under protest up to April 1860.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this paper into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the question appears to me to turn on what has passed between the United States and New Granada as to these tonnage dues. The recent Convention between those States throws no light on the subject.

The United States' Government has (as I understand the facts) succeeded, howsoever (by abuse of force as alleged by New Granada), in securing exemption for all its citizens from all tonnage dues in the ports of the Isthmus, either for a definite period of twenty years after the opening of the interoceanic communication, or indefinitely.

The "most favoured nation clause" in the existing Treaty between Great Britain and New Granada, therefore, entitles Her Majesty's Government, primâ facie, to insist on a similar exemption in favour of British subjects.

If it should turn out that the exemption obtained by the United States rested on peculiar grounds (as, for instance, the terms of a charter to a United States' Railroad Company across the Isthmus of Panamá), or if the exemption was really obtained (as suggested by New Granada) merely by the "abuse of superior force," and not upon any tenable grounds, then Her Majesty's Government may take these circumstances into consideration, and probably will not feel justified in pressing its claim.

The present condition of things seems to be, 1st, that United States' vessels are (howsoever) exempted from all tonnage dues; 2nd, that British and all other foreign vessels are liable thereto, subject only to certain peculiar exemptions as to vessels carrying mails for the Government of New Granada.

Under these circumstances, the plea that New Granada has only yielded to force appears somewhat suspicious. No force was actually used, as far as I am aware; and, at all events, the onus is on her to satisfy the primâ facie claim of Her Majesty's Government, by something more than assertion. If Her Majesty's Government could see the whole correspondence between New Granada and the United States, it would be in a position to form an opinion; as to the reimbursement of the duties already paid under protest by the Company, the same observations apply. This must depend on the result of the general question.

If the grounds upon which the United States have obtained exemption are general and not specific, or if the Government of New Granada fails to satisfy Her Majesty's Government that it has no claim under "the most favoured nation" clause, then reimbursement to the Company should be insisted on, as well as exemption for the future; otherwise not. I must observe, 1st, that all other foreign nations seem to have hitherto paid tonnage duties without objection; 2nd, that apart from the "most favoured nation" clause, and the effect thereon of the exemption obtained by the United States, I am still of opinion that, upon the general merits of the case, and particularly adverting to Article V of the existing Treaty between Great Britain and New Granada, 1825 (Columbia), Her Majesty's Government has not sufficient ground for claiming reimbursement for the Company.

Claim of Mr. Gedge, Solicitor to Messrs. Yuille and Shortridge, for expenses in preparing their case for submission to arbitration of Senate of Hamburgh.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 8th August instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Gedge, Messrs. Yuille and Shortridge's solicitor, requesting the payment of 315*l.* on account of the expenses incurred in preparing the case on behalf of his clients, for submission to the arbitration of the Senate of Hamburgh.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to inclose the papers which contain the terms on which the arbitration was to be conducted, and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether the whole, or any part, and, if so, how much of the amount now claimed by Mr. Gedge should be paid by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, adverting to the 10th Article of the "Identic Memorandum" herewith, and assuming that the Senate of Hamburgh has made no such order as to the costs of the reference as will affect this claim, and bearing in mind paragraph 3 of your Lordship's letter to Mr. Gedge of April 25, 1860, namely, (3) Her Majesty's Government would undertake to "bring the case under consideration of the Arbiter or Arbiters, and they would do so at the public expense," we are of opinion that the whole of the amount now claimed by Mr. Gedge should (on production of proper details and vouchers) be paid by Her Majesty's Government.

As to Consuls allowed to trade being the proper persons to act as Presidents of Naval Courts.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 27, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 12th August instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from the Board of Trade, dated the 30th of July last, in which a question is raised whether a Consul, whose official duty it may be to preside at a Naval Court, under the terms of the "Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," is precluded, by the same Act, from performing this duty in the event of his being, as a member of a mercantile firm, consignee of the ship, whose case is brought before such Court; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether Consuls who are permitted to trade may, nevertheless, be held to be the proper persons to act, in the absence of naval officers, as official Presidents of Naval Courts.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to add that several of Her Majesty's Consuls are permitted to trade, and that it would not be convenient for the public service that this rule should be altered.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a Consul who is partner in a firm to which a ship is consigned cannot, in our opinion, consistently with the Merchant Shipping Act, sit as a member of a Naval Court exercising jurisdiction in relation to matters connected with such ship.

But, subject to this exception, there is not any objection to Consuls engaged in Trade acting on such Naval Courts. Consuls so acting, if there be no Naval officer on the Court, will be the proper persons to preside; and where both Naval and Consular officers are present, then the officer of the "highest rank," according to the 261st section of the Merchant Shipping Act, must preside.

Rear-Admiral Milne's amended instructions. Protection of British subjects and commerce.

Inclosure in No. 208.

Instructions for the Guidance of Cruizers employed on the Coast of America for the Protection of British Commerce.

(Confidential.) "Nile," at Halifax, May 30, 1861.

HER Majesty having, through her Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, signified her pleasure that in the civil war raging in America her naval forces are not to indicate any partiality or preference for either party, it will be your duty to exercise the strictest neutrality between the contending parties (both of whom are recognised by Her Majesty's Government as invested with belligerent rights), and with this view you will, while preserving a firm but conciliatory demeanour, abstain in any intercourse you may have with officers or citizens of the United or Confederate States not only from acting, but from expressing sentiments contrary to Her Majesty's pleasure, and you will enjoin the same line of conduct upon all under your orders.

Article 2. While, however, it is your duty to observe the strictest neutrality between the contending parties it is equally an imperative duty to afford the greatest possible protection to lawful British commerce, which will be effected, on the one hand, by the blockades about to be, or which may have been de facto, established by the Northern States; and, on the other, by the letters of marque which are being issued by the Southern Confederation.

Article 3. Blockades.—The President of the United States, by his Proclamation of the 19th ultimo, declared his intention of blockading the ports of the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, and by his Proclamation of the 28th of that month also those of Virginia and North Carolina, of which the blockades have been actually announced by Commodore Prendergast, commanding the United States' squadron, who states that he has sufficient force at his disposal to maintain them effectually. If such blockades are effectively established and maintained, it will be your duty to respect them; but even should the force employed be in your opinion insufficient to render the blockade effective, you will content yourself with representing your views to the Commander of the blockading squadron in courteous but precise terms, and with full particulars in writing, and forthwith report to me the full particulars, sending me copies of all communications between you and such Commander, and also sending to the Admiralty copies of such reports and communications by the earliest opportunity, so that any British sufferers whose right to claim redress might eventually be recognised by Her Majesty's Government may have the benefit of reference to your reclamations made on the spot. Should your advice in respect to such blockades be asked for by any British ship you might happen to fall in with, it would, while referring to the inclosed Queen's Proclamation of the 13th instant, which is sent herewith for your guidance, be prudent on your part simply to state that such and such places are known to be blockaded effectively, and that Her Majesty's Government had recognised each party as a belligerent, and, consequently, entitled to all the rights of war as against neutrals; avoiding as much as possible all technical points of international law, upon which you, as an observer, are not called upon to act or decide, but which if open to objection would, in the ordinary course of events, be subsequently adjusted by the respective Governments.

Article 4. Privateers.—The President of the Confederate States has, on the other hand, by his Proclamation of the 17th ultimo, offered letters of marque to private armed ships, which there is reason to believe will lead to the fitting out of many privateers, and as from the unscrupulousness with which privateering is generally conducted British commerce may suffer severely from lawless depredations, you will adopt every possible lawful measure to protect British ships from molestation by such privateers, not hesitating, in a clear case of piracy on British ships, to deal with the aggressor as a pirate, in accordance with the Instructions issued by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty on the 8th June, 1818, which are contained in Appendix 2, page 74, of the Station Order Book.

Article 5. It will be expedient that you should approach for observation, and, if necessary, communication with the blockading squadrons, within the limits assigned to you; but unless protection to British life should absolutely demand it, you are to avoid entering into any ports in the occupation of Confederate authorities or troops, as the visit of any of Her Majesty's ships might probably be interpreted into a disposition on the part of Her Majesty's Government to give countenance and support to the Secession movement, and consequently any step calculated to convey such an impression is to be avoided. Their Lordships' letters of the 1st March and the 18th May, and their inclosures, by which you will be strictly guided, will put you in possession of the views of Her Majesty's Government in respect to vessels flying the Palmetto or other Secessionist flag.

Article 6. You are to understand that although the civil war in America confers belligerent rights on both of the contending parties, yet that the position of Great Britain remains unaltered, and consequently the instructions prohibiting the visit or search of United States' (or Secessionist) merchant-ships are not affected thereby. In the event, however, of falling in with a British merchant-vessel which you may have reason to suppose had not intentionally disregarded Her Majesty's Proclamation of the 13th instant, above referred to, and which may have been detained by a vessel carrying a letter of marque, you would be quite justified in ascertaining the authority for, as well as the cause of, such detention.

Article 7. You will furnish me with the usual monthly Return of all foreign vessels met with, including therein full particulars of all privateers and other suspicious vessels, and especially of all blockading squadrons fallen in with, and of which you will be careful to give the numbers, force, &c., as well as to state your opinion as to whether they are, in each case, adequate to maintain effectively the blockade upon which they may be engaged.

Article 8. With reference to the expressed intention of the United States to deal with Secessionist privateers as pirates, the following opinion has been given thereon by Her Majesty's Advocate-General, in respect to British subjects captured in and serving in such privateers:—

"With respect to the concluding paragraph of the Proclamation, relating to the treatment of Secession privateers as pirates, I do not consider it necessary at present to enter fully into its consideration; I will merely observe that pirates, jure gentium, are hostes omnium, common robbers upon the seas, having a general and indiscriminate animus depredandi against all persons in general, which cannot be properly predicated of rebels or insurgents acting under letters of marque from a de facto Sovereign and independent Government, only seeking to capture the property of the subjects or citizens of the particular Government to which they are themselves hostile, and (above all) carrying their prizes into port for legal adjudication. Her Majesty's Government is not concerned as to the treatment which President Lincoln may choose to inflict upon any persons captured in privateers who may not be British subjects, but British subjects who are only hostile privateersmen cannot rightfully, when captured as such on the high seas, be treated as pirates, jure gentium, by President Lincoln. The laws of the United States (to which he alludes) cannot rightfully make a British subject guilty of piracy on the high seas, merely for serving in a hostile privateer."

Article 9. Great caution is to be exercised in approaching the American coast, many of the lights being already removed, and it is not improbable that others may be dealt with in a like manner.

Rear-Admiral and Commander-in-chief.

Advice to master of the "Alliance" respecting his proceedings in connection with the blockade.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Admiralty, dated the 19th of August last, inclosing papers received from Rear-Admiral Milne, reporting the advice given by him to the master of the English ship "Alliance," in regard to his proceedings in connection with the blockade; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the advice given by the Admiral to the master of the "Alliance" was correct and judicious under the circumstances.

Inclosure 1 in No. 210.

Mr. Forest to Rear-Admiral Sir A. Milne.

Dear Sir, St. John's, New Brunswick, August 6, 1861.

THE letter of Captain Kinnear, of the British ship "Coriolanus," published in the London "Times" of the 20th ultimo, has impressed upon me the propriety of addressing you for the purpose of obtaining your instructions or advice for my guidance should certain contingencies arise in the course of my proposed voyage from this city to Havana, Cuba. In the course of that voyage I shall necessarily have to pass along the blockaded portion of the coast of the United States for a great distance, say from Baltimore to Key West. I would therefore request you to furnish me with your instructions or advice upon the following points:—

1st. How near to the blockaded coast have I a right to approach without being subject to have my papers overhauled and endorsed (as in the case of the ship "Coriolanus") by the United States' cruizers?

2nd. Should my vessel become disabled, and incapable of reaching my port of destination, or a port beyond the limits of the blockade offering proper facilities for repairs, without serious risk of loss of vessel, cargo, and crew, should I bear away for the nearest port on the blockaded coast, or what other course should I pursue?

3rd. Would my vessel and cargo be liable to forfeiture for approaching said coast under such circumstances?

It is, perhaps, proper to mention that upon my recent voyage from Liverpool to Charleston, South Carolina, with a cargo of railway iron and coals, I was on the 27th of May boarded by an officer from the United States' cruizer "Union," and ordered off from the Southern Coast of the United States, and a notice to that effect was endorsed upon my duplicate manifest, but not upon my register. That cargo I am now discharging at this port by order of the agents of my owners; and as it has been falsely rumoured that there were cannon and other arms on board of my ship, I have applied to have her thoroughly searched by the proper Government officer at this port.

I expect to sail on or about the 14th instant for Havana, Cuba, with pig-iron for ballast, and a few tons of other cargo, all for account of British subjects; and your early reply to this communication will greatly oblige.

Very respectfully, &c.
(Signed) SAM. D. FOREST,
Master of British ship "Alliance."

Inclosure 2 in No. 210.

Rear-Admiral Sir A. Milne to Mr. Forest.

Sir, "Nile," at Halifax, August 8, 1861.

I RECEIVED yesterday evening your letter of the 6th instant.

As it is probable that you are not in a position to obtain the opinion of any legal practitioner competent from experience to deal with the points raised in your letter, I cannot refuse to give you my advice thereon; but you must understand that the opinions I offer are in no way binding on the American cruizers, belligerent Courts interpreting their own Prize Law, and any prejudice a neutral lawfully trading may suffer becoming eventually a subject of adjustment between the respective Governments.

I take it that a belligerent cruizer has a perfect right to endorse notice of blockade on a neutral's papers, which notice is good for the voyage.

If disabled I should advise your making for a British, or, at all events, for a Northern port. Should, however, this be impracticable, you should endeavour to fall in with a United States' cruizer, from whom, as a merchant ship under a friendly flag lawfully trading, you would doubtless receive assistance and advice; taking great care, however, that the entries in your log shall be so correct as to prove that your proceedings are bonâ fide and above suspicion, which of course I assume they would be.

I am, &c.

TURKEY.

Condemnation by Turkish Criminal Court of three British subjects for forgery.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 11th July ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Hornby, Judge of Her Majesty's Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 54), inclosing the evidence upon which three British subjects have been condemned by the Turkish Criminal Court on a charge of forgery, to twelve years' imprisonment, and stating the circumstances under which he has hitherto abstained from assenting to the judgment of the Court, and to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Mr. Hornby in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we feel it to be our duty (in the first place) to call Earl Russell's attention to the nature of Mr. Hornby's request for instructions, as contained in his letter of the 26th of June.

Mr. Hornby, being the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court, was called upon in the ordinary course of his duty to give or withhold his assent to the judgment of a Turkish Criminal Court, pronounced on three British subjects, and finding them guilty of uttering forged money of the country. The question raised was simply whether there was evidence on which a Court of competent jurisdiction could, without an outrage on common sense and justice, convict the accused. The case did not involve any question of municipal or international law; and it appears to us, therefore, that it lay entirely within Mr. Hornby's own province as a Judge, to decide whether he should, or should not, concur in the finding of the Turkish Judges.

We have, by Lord Russell's desire, taken the observations of Mr. Hornby, and the evidence in the case, into our consideration, and we are of opinion that sufficient evidence of the guilt of the accused was adduced (such evidence being believed, as in fairness it must be assumed to have been), to warrant the conviction of the accused. It is true that the direct evidence was that of an accomplice and of a person (Ricalli), a prisoner, on charge of uttering; and that confirmation which apparently might have been afforded (if Leoncini, in particular, was speaking the truth) was not forthcoming. This, however, even in England, would go to the weight only, and not to the technical sufficiency, of the evidence, although Mr. Hornby appears to treat the proofs given by an accomplice, or a tainted witness, as being no evidence at all. With us it would be the duty of the presiding Judge to leave such evidence to the jury, coupled with such observations on it as he might think fit to make; and the finding of the jury could not be impugned in a Court of Law. These functions must of necessity be discharged by the Court at Constantinople without the aid of a jury; and the Court having convicted and sentenced the prisoners, we do not see how Her Majesty's Government can, on the grounds suggested by Mr. Hornby, of defective or evidence [sic], properly interfere.

What Mr. Hornby's own course as a Judge should be, under the circumstances, we must repeat appears to us to be matter for the decision of Mr. Hornby himself.

Regarding the evidence as detailed by the scribe in the document A, we have already commented on the nature of the direct proof of guilt. The remaining material evidence (passing over the somewhat confused story of Michali Butegich), consists of proof of two of the parties (Rocco and Ferrugia) having known Leoncini of acquaintance, and some suspicious dealings between Rocco and a very disreputable person named Meudel, himself apparently an utterer; and of the fact of the Italian, Giuseppe, or Romano, having been (as stated by Leoncini, denied by Rocco, but sworn to by Romano himself) in the service of Rocco, and called by him "Romano." The Turkish Court, in interrogating the accused, acted in conformity with its own practice, and with the practice of many Courts in Christendom; and where such a procedure prevails, it is hardly a reasonable complaint that answers of the prisoners, appearing on evidence to be untrue, should weigh with the tribunal to their prejudice on the main question.

That Rocco and Ferrugia knew Leoncini appears on the whole very probable (see as to Rocco's bribing Romano, and as to recent medical attendance on Ferrugia, both facts known to Leoncini); and, although, as against Camillieri, the acquaintance appears to rest on the testimony of Leoncini, still there stands against him the evidence to which we have already referred, of a full confession of uttering forged caimées. As to the absence of direct confirmation (observed upon by Mr. Hornby) of Ricalli's evidence relating to the chintz, the point is of less moment, if it were open to Camillieri, according to the rule of the Court, to produce the chintz in which his breakfast was wrapped, and the gown worn by his "woman," or to negative the entire statement as to wrapper and gown. Still it was the prosecutor's duty to give such corroborative proof if it really could have been afforded.

With reference to Mr. Hornby's observations at pages 13 and 14 of his Report, touching the conduct of the Court before which the prisoners were examined, in refusing to come to any decision, and referring the case upon the papers to the Grand Council, if he means that, thereby any Treaty stipulation with the Ottoman Porte for the trial of British subjects, accused of crime committed within the Turkish territories, has been violated, so as to render the proceedings illegal or irregular, he should furnish the fullest information on the subject, in order that the course to be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in the matter may be considered and determined on.

NEW GRANADA.

Mr. Holt's claim on New Granadian Government. Closing of ports of Carthagena and Savanilla.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 10th August ultimo, stating that with reference to the report from Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 21st November, 1860, he was directed to transmit to us, together with the former papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in New Granada (No. 32), containing further information respecting Mr. Holt's claim upon the New Granadian Government, arising out of the closing of the ports of Carthagena and Savanilla; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Griffith in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That before proceeding to state to your Lordship our opinion on the question of international law which appears to us to be raised in this case, we think it will be convenient that we should describe the facts as, in the result, we correct them, and as we have assumed them to be. We accept the correction of Mr. Holt's statement as to "passengers," which is to be found in Consul Bernal's letter to your Lordship of the 8th of February, 1860, and we think that the same letter satisfactorily disposes of that part of Mr. Holt's complaint which rests on his version of the meaning and effect of the "permission" from the "Prefect at Colon" to undertake the voyage thence to Carthagena. The other main facts, as we understand them, are that disorders had been committed by the (so-called) Revolutionary Party at Carthagena and at Savanilla; that a Resolution was issued by the Finance Minister (a member, we presume, of and acting for the Executive) ordering the ports in question to be closed from and after the 20th October, 1859; that such Resolution was in force on the 14th and 15th November, 1859 (the days on which permission to load Mr. Holt's vessel, the "Plantagenet," was refused), and (although it is nowhere distinctly stated) that the Government of the Confederation, and not any body in insurrection against that Government, was in de facto possession of the quays and custom-houses of the two ports, and enabled to prevent the embarkation or discharge of cargo there at the time in question.

Under these circumstances we concur in substance in the observations of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires (Mr. Griffith), contained in his despatch to your Lordship of the 30th April, 1861, with reference to the right, inter gentes, of the New Granadian Government to close the two ports in question, at the time and in the manner they did, and, subject to the question of "notice" (to which we will hereafter advert), to act, with reference to the vessels of friendly nations, as they acted towards Mr. Holt. The act was an act of State, the actor was the Supreme Executive Government; and whatever suspicions may be entertained it cannot be reasonably alleged that the safety of the State did not render the course which was adopted an expedient course. In this view the ordinary prerogative of a de facto Government warranted what was done, and the sufferers, however innocent, must put up with such consequential loss as may fall upon them.

As regards the want of notice, Mr. Holt's case is undoubtedly one of great hardship, but the more especially after the publication, in May 1860, of the Law of the 30th of April. We are of opinion that this circumstance does not confer on Mr. Holt any such title to compensation as can be made the ground of a requisition by Her Majesty's Government on the Government of New Granada. Some reasons (in the justice of which we concur) are to be found in support of this view in Mr. Griffith's despatch to which we have already referred; and as a general rule such rights as are conceded to States by the Law of Nations, for their own safety and defence, over-ride the ordinary rights of individuals, foreign as well as native, within such States.

We would submit to your Lordship that the instructions to be addressed to Mr. Griffith in this case should be in conformity with the opinions which we have above expressed.

We have, &c.

SPAIN.

Case of the coasting vessels "Lola" and "Castilla," detained under suspicion of being equipped for Slave Trade.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 3, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence, as marked in the margin,* which has passed between your Lordship and M. Isturiz, the Spanish Minister at this Court, relating to the case of two Spanish coasting vessels, the "Lola" and "Castilla," which were detained by Her Majesty's ship "Barracouta," in the month of October last, and sent, in the first instance, to Jamaica for adjudication in the Vice-Admiralty Court in that island, as vessels equipped for the Slave Trade, without papers to denote their nationality.

That after seven months' detention in the Admiralty Court, the Judge decreed, that the vessels in question were not disentitled to the protection of the Spanish flag, and they were therefore sent to Havana to be dealt with by the Mixed Commission Court established at that place, under the provisions of the Treaty of the 28th of June, 1835, between this country and Spain, for the suppression of the Slave Trade, and by the decision of the Mixed Commission Court, dated the 1st of June last, the detention of the "Lola" and "Castilla" was declared to be unjustifiable.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to me the Reports which have been received from the naval authorities in the West Indies relating to the detention of these vessels; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Spanish Minister's note of the 25th July last, respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I would suggest that it will be desirable to delay answering the Spanish Minister's note of the 25th July, until a further communication shall be had with the Havana.

It does not appear to me to be possible, under the circumstances, for Her Majesty's Government to justify the conduct of Commander Wood in relation to the vessels in question; not only has the Vice-Admiralty Court of Jamaica, to which place they were sent by the captor, declared its incompetence to adjudicate on them, but the Mixed Commission Court at the Havana, before which they were ultimately sent, has by its sentence formally decreed their detention to be unjustifiable, and ordered the restitution of the vessels and their cargoes.

Commander Wood, as is pointed out in the papers, if he thought fit to capture them, should clearly have sent them before the Mixed Commission Court at the Havana in the first instance. They were Spanish in build and appearance; they had Spanish colours, and some Spanish papers, and no other papers; and there was no sufficient reason for doubting their being entitled to the protection of the Spanish flag, or for supposing them to have any other or different nationality, or (consequently) for sending them to Jamaica.

The only substantial international question, therefore, now remaining open, is that of the compensation to be paid to those interested; and upon this question these papers throw no light.

The Slave Trade Suppression Treaty with Spain (1835), especially Annex B, Articles V and VII, provides for the decision by the Mixed Commission Court, definitively and without appeal, of all claims for compensation on account of damages or losses occasioned to vessels and cargoes detained under the Treaty, but not condemned; and the concluding paragraph of Article VII is express on the point. I presume that some such claims have been, or will be, brought before the Court and determined by it, in both cases; if not, further information should be supplied. However this may be, Her Majesty's Consul at Havana should fully explain the actual and probable future condition of this portion of the case (i. e., the compensation).

If compensation is claimed before the Court under the Treaty, the final settlement and adjudication thereof will devolve upon the Court, and will, doubtless, be proceeded with in regular course; but if, for any reason, no such claim is made, or about to be made, or if the Court should decline or omit to award anything in respect of such claim, Her Majesty's Government should be furnished with full particulars, so as to enable it to determine upon its future course in the event of any claims being brought forward, either by the parties interested or the Spanish Government, in the ordinary diplomatic manner, dehors the Treaty.

(Signed) J. D. HARDING.

Delay in adjudicating case of the "Hiawatha."

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 5, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th August ultimo, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 18th June,* 5th July,† and 2nd August ultimo,‡ respecting the case of the "Hiawatha," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter and its inclosures from Mr. Peter M. Miller, dated the 28th ultimo, representing the delay which has taken place in adjudicating upon the case, and requesting that the matter may be brought to the notice of the Federal Government, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the propriety of taking the steps requested.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That considering the peculiar circumstances connected with the case of the "Hiawatha," and assuming that the only ground of complaint is (in effect) that whereas the "hearing" was concluded on the 3rd or 4th of July, no judgment had been pronounced by the Prize Court (which had taken time to consider) up to the 13th August.

I cannot say that Her Majesty's Government would be justified (as on that date) in making any official representation to the United States' Government on the subject. The parties interested should respectfully apply to the Court, and press it for judgment; and Her Majesty's Government should not intervene until this has been done without effect. If, however, on Lord Lyons' receipt of his next ensuing despatches from your Lordship (say September 20), this step should have been taken, or should then be taken without avail, he may be entrusted with a discretionary power of making a courteous and guarded communication to the United States' Government, pointing out the serious consequences of the delay to the interests of the parties (from the ship, cargo, and crew remaining so long under detention, which I take for granted is the case), and expressing a confident hope that judgment may be pronounced, or the ship restored without judgment, as an act of grace, as soon as possible. Lord Lyons may also use his discretion as to intimating (or not) that if the judgment of the Court should be "simple restitution" (without costs or damages) a lengthened detention inflicts a most serious injury upon individual interests, without conferring any advantage on the United States' Government or the captors.

Arrest and imprisonment of two British subjects, Mc Quillan and Fitzpatrick, for aiding the Southern States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 6, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th of August ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington respecting the arrest and imprisonment of two British subjects named Mc Quillan and Fitzpatrick, and requesting that we would take the statements contained in those despatches into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Lord Lyons on the subject.

We were also favoured with a further letter from Mr. Hammond of the 19th of August last, transmitting to us three further despatches from Lord Lyons, and stating that from the last of these we should learn that orders had been issued for the release of the two British subjects Mc Quillan and Fitzpatrick. And,

We were further favoured with another letter from Mr. Hammond of the 27th August ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 19th August, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons, inclosing copy of despatch from Mr. Consul Bunch refuting the charges brought against him in regard to Mr. P. Mc Quillan, and, as those papers formed part of the case, Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take them into our consideration, together with those now before us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the several despatches and papers submitted to us into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in each of the two cases to which our attention is called, there appears to us to have been so much of illegality, coupled with so much harsh treatment, as fairly to entitle Her Majesty's Government, should it be deemed expedient, to call on the United States' Government for a full explanation, at the outset; and we are unable at present to offer any further suggestion than that such explanation should be required.

In Mc Quillan's case the facts appears to be, in substance, as follows:—In June last Mc Quillan was arrested at Washington on the charge (though whether Mr. Secretary Seward issued, or caused to be issued, any warrant for his apprehension does not appear) of endeavouring to procure military equipments for use by the Southern Confederate forces. From the despatch of Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons of the 1st July, 1861, it is to be inferred that, soon after the arrest, a "preliminary examination" of some kind took place; though what, if any, evidence was adduced on such examination, or before whom, or in what manner it was conducted, does not appear. This should be ascertained. In a few days time he was removed, in custody, from Washington to New York for further examination in the presence of witnesses who were "in or about the city of New York," the criminal act having been charged as committed in that city. He was conveyed to New York by one T. L. Forrest, an officer, who, availing himself of the opportunities of conversation afforded by the journey, would seem to have obtained certain admissions from his prisoner of actual participation in hostilities waged by the Confederates against the forces of the United States. At New York the original charge of procuring military equipments appears to have been dropped, and an entirely fresh charge—that of high treason—substituted; such latter charge resting on a deposition of the officer Forrest, setting forth the admissions above referred to, and upon that evidence alone. We find Mc Quillan "turned over" from civil custody at the Tombs to military charge at Forts Columbus and Lafayette successively, and on orders to that effect from the General-in-chief. Through the zealous and able exertions of Mr. Edwardes, Counsel to the Consulate at New York, writs of habeas corpus were obtained for the bringing up of Mc Quillan before the regular tribunals, together with a statement of the charge, or charges, on which he was detained. These writs were disobeyed, avowedly on the mere order of General Scott, Commanding in-chief, and such disobedience was sanctioned and upheld by the decision of Mr. Justice Betts.

Upon these facts, it appears to us that Mc Quillan being, as we assume he is, a British subject, and never having taken the United States' Oath of Allegiance, was entitled to be dealt with, by the United States' authorities, according to the ordinary course of the law of the country, so far as it affects foreigners being for the time in the United States. Such treatment (in the absence of explanation) he does not appear to have met with. On the first charge, viz., that of procuring, or attempting to procure, equipments for the Confederate troops, he ought to have been promptly confronted with his accusers before some competent tribunal, and either discharged, held to bail, or committed for trial on the charge.

Then, with respect to the charge of high treason, it ought never to have been brought forward, McQuillan being a foreigner. It cannot be admitted, especially after the Southern Confederates have been acknowledged by Great Britain as belligerents, that a British subject serving in their armies, and afterwards happening to be within any of the non-seceding States, is liable to be there taken up and executed (for if the offence exist, the punishment may follow) for treason against the United States.

For the transfer of McQuillan from civil to military custody, we are at a loss to conjecture any ground of legality. In the State of New York the ordinary Courts of Justice were in full power and operation; there was no enemy in the field; and no justification, that we can discover, for the intervention of military authority, at all events in the particular case of McQuillan as it then stood.

These remarks apply with still greater force to the denial to McQuillan of his right, as a person residing for the time in the United States, to the benefit of habeas corpus. To Congress alone, we infer, belongs the power, by legislation, of suspending the "Habeas Corpus Act," which here, however, was, practically, suspended by an order of the Commander-in-chief (an order, be it observed, in the particular case), backed by the decision of a Judge. The consequences of such disregard of the laws of the country might, during the whole continuance of the war, be the imprisonment of British subjects for indefinite periods, and that on groundless charges, or without any charges at all. We do not say that reasons of State may not, having regard to the existence of civil war, be adduced to justify some, at least, of the acts complained of, but full explanation appears to be due.

In Fitzpatrick's case the facts are few and simple, and not such as it appears to us would justify a recapitulation. Our general remarks, however, as to the right of foreigners apply also in this case; and here, as in McQuillan's case, we observe the absence of a prompt or, apparently, any formal charge, and confronting of witnesses, as to the grounds of original arrest. In this case also a civil jail at Baltimore was exchanged for a military prison at New York, and equally, as appears to us, without shadow of justification.

In favour of Fitzpatrick, moreover, it is to be observed that, so far as is known, he is quite innocent of the charge of piracy that was brought against him. His innocence is, at all events, so probable that, in the absence of any formal accusation before a competent Tribunal, and after his treatment as a military prisoner, the fullest explanation seems to us to be fairly demandable. His treatment in the prison at Baltimore seems also to have been particularly harsh.

We are unable to collect the circumstances of the actual seizure of the steamer "St. Nicholas," in which it was alleged that Fitzpatrick participated; as, for instance, whether it took place within the limits of a non-seceding State, or on the high seas, or was made by officers and crew bearing commission as ship of war, or privateer, of the Southern Confederation, and the like.

The knowledge of these facts is, at the same time, important; because it might be that, even if Fitzpatrick had been the companion of Colonel Thomas and his followers, the crime of "piracy" would not have been thereby committed by him as a foreigner; for reasons similar to those we have assigned as to McQuillan, a foreigner, having borne arms in the South, and in the Southern armies, against the forces of the North. No application for a habeas corpus appears to have been made in the case of Fitzpatrick; nor was there any ground for supposing that such an application, in the result, would have been more successful than a like application was in McQuillan's case.

Purchase of enemies' ships by neutrals during war.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd August ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 4th June last, he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 375), referring to Sir John Crampton's despatch to the Earl of Clarendon, No 233 of the 25th September, 1854, and to his own despatches to Lord Malmesbury Nos. 67 and 73 of the 6th and 13th of June, 1859, as containing the fullest and most authoritative information he has it at present in his power to send, with regard to the legal effect and operation in the United States of the purchase of enemies' ships by neutrals during war.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose those despatches (Nos. 67 and 73), as well as the draft of an instruction which was addressed to Lord Lyons on the 9th August ultimo (No. 273), founded upon the observations contained in my letter of the 26th July last, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether I am of opinion that any further and more precise instructions to send home information on this subject need, for the present, be sent to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That no further instructions to send home information appear at present to be requisite. The purchase of enemies' ships by neutrals must be considered as legal in the United States. Should any further light be thrown on the general question (as by judgment of a Court in any particular case, official instructions by the United States' Government to its officers, or otherwise), Lord Lyons will, of course, keep your Lordship correctly informed from time to time; large British interests being obviously involved.

Mr. T. McDonald's proposed speculation in cotton.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th of August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Thomas McDonald dated the 19th ultimo, asking certain questions with reference to a proposed speculation in cotton; and to request that I would take Mr. McDonald's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether his question should be answered, and if so, in what terms?

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th of August ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 27th of August ultimo, he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Mr. McDonald, stating further particulars respecting his proposed speculation in cotton; also a letter from Mr. Delafield, asking questions similar to those put by Mr. McDonald.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these letters into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it will not be expedient for your Lordship to answer either Mr. McDonald's or Mr. Delafield's questions. I may add (confidentially) for your Lordship's guidance the following remarks:—

1. It is obviously impossible for Her Majesty's Government to guarantee beforehand protection to cotton purchased by British subjects in the Confederate States against (say) destruction, as by bombardment or otherwise, in the course of military or naval conflict, with the forces of the United States, or to pledge itself to demand, and to obtain, full compensation in the event of its destruction.

2. It is obviously unadvisable for your Lordship to discuss with the present applicants or to attempt to inform them beforehand of the various circumstances and contingencies in which Her Majesty's Government might or might not think fit to extend protection to, or withhold it from, cotton or other merchandize purchased by British subjects in the United States, and exposed to risk during the existing contest, or to press, or to abstain from pressing, on the Government of the United States, demands for compensation in respect of such property in the event of its hostile capture, damage, or destruction.

3. Mr. McDonald's scheme as explained by him in his letter of the 28th of August, however advantageous it might possibly prove to British interests, appears obviously calculated in its practical result to furnish the (Southern) Confederate Government with the command of large pecuniary resources or credit; and this by means of the intervention of Her Majesty's Government. I need not enlarge upon the serious aspect of this objection in an international point of view; I will merely repeat that in my opinion, even on this ground alone, it will be most inexpedient for your Lordship to continue this correspondence.

4. It is not desirable, with regard to British commercial interests, to make public beforehand the various objections or difficulties which will too probably prevent Her Majesty's Government from interposing any effectual protection in favour of American produce purchased and held in America, on British account, from the various casualties to which it may be exposed in the present course of hostilities; this would operate to discourage such purchases, and would be equivalent to saying to British purchasers, "You must purchase at your own risk; we can promise you no effectual protection for property so held." Any such intimation might increase commercial risk and alarm, and might call forth injurious reflections on Her Majesty's Government; but if this correspondence be continued it will be almost impossible to avoid giving this impression.

I am therefore of opinion that it will, upon the whole, be proper for your Lordship to decline (in effect) giving any answer whatever to these applications, and to discontinue this correspondence.

Vessels belonging to Messrs. Fernie Brothers chartered in Brazil to take cargo to New Orleans. Inquiry respecting modification of blockade.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Messrs. Fernie Brothers, dated the 29th ultimo, stating that one of their vessels has been chartered in Brazil to take cargo to New Orleans, and if prevented approaching that port, then to proceed to New York, and that Messrs. Fernie apprehend that under those circumstances their vessel will not incur the risk of capture, but they deem it advisable to inquire whether the declaration as to boarding and warning off all ships as they appeared off the blockaded ports had been in any way modified.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to request that I would take Messrs. Fernie's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to it.

Mr. Hammond also stated that your Lordship is not aware that the Declaration of the United States' Government, as quoted in my Report of the 16th May, has been modified.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd September instant, transmitting a further letter from Messrs. Fernie and Co., relative to the question of the blockade of the Southern ports of the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Messrs. Fernie Brothers, who (I presume) are British subjects, and whose ship is (I presume) a British ship, may be informed that Her Majesty's Government has not received information of any modification having been made on the part of the United States' Government of the announcement contained in President Lincoln's first Proclamation (of April 19th) on the subject of the blockade of the Southern ports, as to the special notification of such blockade therein referred to.

That your Lordship cannot of course undertake to say how far the Government of the United States will consider itself bound by the terms of this Proclamation, when the fact of a particular blockade may have become notorious; or whether the announcement as to "warning" and endorsing ships' papers would be construed to extend to cases of vessels sailing for a port which their owners or agents knew at the date of sailing to be blockaded; but that, subject to this observation, and without giving any sort of guarantee, your Lordship does not see that this ship, assuming her cargo to be entirely neutral property, and her papers to be completely regular, will, by acting as suggested, incur any serious risk of capture.

Claim of Mr. W. Grey for seizure of his vessel the "Perthshire" by blockading squadron.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Mr. W. S. Lindsay, M.P., dated the 29th ultimo, covering a letter from Mr. William Gray, the owner of the British vessel "Perthshire," claiming compensation on account of the seizure and detention of that vessel by a steamer belonging to the United States' blockading squadron, and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That assuming the entire correctness of Mr. Gray's statement of the 28th August, the case appears to me to be one deserving a request, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, for a full explanation from that of the United States. I must observe, however, that there are some points upon which, before addressing any official communication to the United States' Government it will be desirable to have full information; such as, 1st, was any, and what, portion of the cargo laden (a) after the commencement of the blockade, or (b) after knowledge on the part of the master that it had commenced? 2nd. What was the precise form and effect of a declaration made by the United States' Government (and at what date made) amounting (in substance) to a general concession that neutral vessels, lying in ports which might be blockaded by its naval force, should be allowed a period of fourteen days for egress with cargo, and without molestation? The relevancy of these questions, especially of the latter, with reference to the dates given in Mr. Gray's statement will be apparent.

Act of Congress for seizure on high seas, or in any port of United States, of any vessel or boat built or purchased for piratical purposes.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 417), inclosing copies of an Act of Congress, directing that any vessel or boat built or purchased for piratical purposes shall be seized on the high seas, or in any port of the United States, whether the same shall have actually sailed upon any piratical expedition or not, and to request that we would take this Act into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this Act into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That without some intimation of the probable practical working and effect of the Act in question, more especially as regards British interests (which are not necessarily involved therein), we do not feel ourselves to be in a position to offer any very material observations thereon.

We do not see any necessity for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in relation thereto. We observe that the Act speaks of "piracy as defined by the law of nations;" and we see nothing seriously objectionable in the Act, provided that it is construed and applied with this limitation.

The Queen's Advocate has already pointed out in the matter of the instructions issued by Admiral Milne (and the Attorney and Solicitor-General have expressed their concurrence therewith), that Confederate or Southern privateers capturing only the vessels of the (Northern) United States, and taking them into port for adjudication, cannot rightfully be considered or treated as pirates by the law of nations. They are not "common robbers upon the seas," or hostes omnium, and have no general or indiscriminate animus depredandi.

Apart from the technical definition of "piracy," we may observe that the Government of the United States will, in our opinion, be justified in seizing vessels "built, purchased, fitted out, or held for the purpose of capturing or committing hostilities against its ships or citizens, or for the service of its enemies;" this right is fully competent to any belligerent Government.

We observe, moreover, that vessels seized under this Act are "to be proceeded against, captured, and condemned," we assume by a Court of Admiralty jurisdiction.

Claims of Ionians against the Moldavian Government. Imprisonment of Messrs. Barbieri, Macri, &c.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th May last, stating that you were directed to transmit to me the correspondence which had passed between the Foreign Office, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Jassy, the Queen's Advocate, and various private individuals, in regard to the complaints of certain Ionian subjects against the Moldavian authorities, and that you were to request I would prepare a case for submission to the Law Officers of the Crown for their opinion as to the merits of the claims, and as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

In obedience to Lord John Russell's directions I submitted a case for the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown accordingly, and have now the honour to transmit a copy of the same, with their opinion thereon.

Case for the Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, on the Claims of Ionian Subjects against the Moldavian Government.

THE Queen's Proctor received the following letter from the Foreign Office:—

"Sir, "Foreign Office, May 25, 1861.

"I am directed by Lord John Russell to transmit to you a correspondence which has passed between this Office, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Jassy, the Queen's Advocate, and various private individuals, in regard to the complaints of certain Ionian subjects against the Moldavian authorities; and I am to request that you will prepare a case for submission to the Law Officers of the Crown for their opinion as to the merits of the claims, and as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

"I am, &c.
(Sigded) "E. HAMMOND."

In pursuance of the directions contained in the above letter, the Queen's Proctor has prepared the following case for the opinion of the Law Officers :—

The subject submitted for consideration relates to the arrest, imprisonment, and ill-treatment, by torture and otherwise, of a number of Ionian subjects by the Moldavian authorities at Ismail, upon a variety of charges, the particulars of which, together with the several amounts of compensation claimed, except Barbieri's, will be found at pages 5, 6, and 8 of this case [infra, pp. 206 and 207].

The plaintiffs claim the protection of Great Britain on the ground of their being Ionians, and request that compensation may be demanded for them from the Turkish Government.

By a Treaty of Peace concluded at the Dardanelles in 1809, certain Capitulations and Articles of Peace between Great Britain and the Ottoman Empire, as agreed upon, augmented, and altered at different periods, were finally confirmed, the 42nd Article of which is as follows, viz. :—

"That in case any Englishman, or other person navigating under their flag, should happen to commit manslaughter or any other crime, or be thereby involved in a lawsuit, the Governors in our sacred dominions shall not proceed to the cause until the Ambassador or Consul shall be present, but they shall hear and decide it together, without their presuming to give them any the least molestation by hearing it alone, contrary to the holy law and these Capitulations."

In the latter end of 1859, two Ionian subjects, Dr. Barbieri and Themistocles Macri, were arrested, tried, and sentenced by the Moldavian authorities without the presence of the British Ambassador or Consul,* and it is submitted that the proceedings of the Moldavian Government were at variance with the said Capitulations.

The following is an extract from the Firman of the Sultan dated Constantinople, the 24th April, 1819, recognizing the Protectorate of Great Britain over the Ionian Islands and Ionian subjects (vide Hertslet's Treaties, vol. ix, page 546) :—

"En conséquence la dite Cour d'Angleterre a amicalement requis que dorénavant Sa Majesté Britannique soit regardé comme Souverain Protecteur de ces Iles, et que leurs habitants soient considérés comme sujets protégés ; que le même traitement leur soit fait comme aux sujets Britanniques, et que lorsque les dits habitants voudraient fréquenter les pays de l'Empire Turc, et y faire le commerce, ils soient libre de tout empêchement et molestation ; que leurs affaires soient traitées d'après les mêmes Capitulations et stipulations qui sont observées en faveur des autres sujets de Sa dite Majesté et qu'eux-mêmes soient accueillis avec douceur et bonté."

The correspondence connected with the two cases was laid before the Law Officers, who reported as follows :—

"My Lord, "Doctors' Commons, February 18, 1860.

"We are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 23rd January ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Jassy, relative to a sentence passed by the Moldavian Government on two Ionian subjects, and to the request made by that Government to Her Majesty's Consular Agents to carry the sentence into effect, together with a letter from Mr. Hornby, to whom this matter has been referred.

"Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to state that, in regard to the question of the right of the Moldavian authorities to proceed to the trial of any British or Ionian subject without the presence or assistance of a British Consul, he was directed to state to us that your Lordship proposes to instruct Mr. Churchill to maintain in the Principalities the rights conceded to Great Britain by Turkey under the 42nd Article of the Capitulations, and to insist upon the trial of any British or Ionian subject being conducted in accordance therewith ; and that your Lordship assumes that we shall concur in this course.

"Lord Wodehouse was further pleased to state, that with respect to the sentence, that the convicted Ionians should be imprisoned in the Ionian Islands, which was passed by the Moldavian Court, in which no British authority was represented, and the consequent proposal on the part of the Moldavian authorities to make over the convicts to the British Consular authorities at Galätz with a view to the execution of the sentence ; and with respect, further, to the impression which Mr. Hornby seems to entertain, that if a trial had been concluded in conformity with the 42nd Article of the Capitulations, the sentence of the Court might not improperly be carried out in Her Majesty's dominions ; Lord Wodehouse requested that we would state to your Lordship our opinion on the point thus raised by Mr. Hornby.

* Vide Law Officers' Report of February 18, 1860, infra.

"Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to state, that in the case out of which the present reference has originated, your Lordship apprehends that the Consul at Galatz should be instructed to decline to take charge of the prisoners ; but that your Lordship would be glad to be made acquainted with our opinion on the more general question, namely, whether, under the terms of the 42nd Article of the Capitulations, by which a joint jurisdiction is conceded to Her Majesty's Officers in criminal cases, the effect of that concession goes beyond an admission that the British Officer shall be consenting to the conviction of the criminal ; whether, in short, the British Officer is empowered to take part in determining in what way or degree the law of Turkey applies to the charge, or in pronouncing sentence according to that law ; and whether the sentence which may be pronounced, either by the Turkish Judge alone or by the Turkish Judge and British Officer concurrently, would in either case be executable in Her Majesty's dominions.

"In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

"That we collect from Mr. Churchill's despatch to Mr. Hornby of the 20th December, 1859, that the trial and condemnation of the two prisoners in question, proceeded without any communication to him from the Moldavian authorities, until the fact of their condemnation was announced to him ; should this be the case, he should insist upon their unconditional release, as having been tried by an incompetent tribunal.

"We are of opinion that the criminal trial in Moldavia of British subjects, Ionians, and all others under British protection, ought to be conducted in the manner pointed out by the 42nd Article of the Capitulations ; and that no such person can be legally condemned, unless he is tried by the British Ambassador or Consul, in conjunction with the Turkish (or Moldavian) Judge.

"We think that the terms of the above Article do extend beyond an admission that the British Ambassador or Consul shall be consenting to the conviction of the criminal ; and we are of opinion that the British Ambassador or Consul is empowered to take part in determining, (1st.) The sufficiency of the evidence, not by the law of Turkey, but by the ordinary principles of justice ; (2ndly.) Whether the alleged offence comes within the true intent and meaning of the Law of Turkey ; and, (3rdly.) What ought to be the punishment pronounced on the offence ? which must be measured, not by the Turkish rule or standard, but according to reason and equity, as understood by the most civilized nations.

"Having regard to the present state of the Orders in Council, we are of opinion that the sentences passed by the Mixed Tribunal cannot be carried into effect in Her Majesty's dominions.

"We understand from Mr. Hornby that other European nations claim the delivery of their subjects when condemned as criminals by Turkish authority, and commit them to places of custody in their own dominions ; and we would suggest the expediency of considering whether, in the Draft Order in Council now preparing by Mr. Thring, a clause may not be inserted providing that British subjects or Ionians when convicted by Mixed Tribunals shall be sent to Malta or Ionia respectively.

"We concur with your Lordship's proposed instruction to Mr. Churchill to maintain in the Principalities the rights secured to Her Majesty's subjects in Turkey by the Capitulations.

"We have, &c.

The following appear to be the facts relating to these two cases:—

On the 3rd of October, 1859, Barbieri (a British subject) was travelling in his carriage from Bolgrad to Ismail, accompanied by Captain Alexandre Dané, who describes himself as a French-protected subject, but travels with a Turkish "teskereh," when they were met by a peasant's waggon, coming at full gallop, with four men and a woman in it; that the waggon struck their carriage in passing (but which the peasants deny), and that an altercation and high words then ensued, when the peasants got down and approached them, whereupon Dané also got down with a gun in his hand, and retreated before the peasants, presenting his gun at them and calling to them not to approach him; that the four men seized him, and tried to wrest his gun from him, which was broken in the scuffle and went off, killing one of the peasants (a Moldavian) on the spot.

The peasants, however, state that Barbieri struck them with his whip in passing, and that when one of them got down from their waggon to inquire why he had struck them, Dané shot him. As soon as this had taken place, Barbieri and Dané drove into Ismail to the British Consulate.

It seems, however, that in whichever way the unfortunate affair arose, Barbieri was not the party who shot the Moldavian peasant.

It further appears, that they were, on the next day, examined in the Prefecture, and committed to the Moldavian prison in Ismail, but the British Consular Agent was not present.

That Barbieri was afterwards declared innocent of murder by the Court (Prince's Bench) and set free, but seems to have been again arrested, in connection with Derventis' case, and charges of assassination and forgery brought against him by a Russian, in consequence of which he was kept in prison, on and off, for upwards of three months, and ill treated, beaten by soldiers, and put in chains.

Themistocles Macri, commission agent and merchant.—Plaintiff returning to town one day from the country, was arrested, imprisoned, and tortured, without trial or sentence. Authorities afterwards pretended that he, too, had assisted Crassa in reaching his place of refuge, although plaintiff was not in Ismail when that circumstance happened.

Claims 3,000*l.* indemnity. Supported by nine depositions on oath.

Mr. Consul-General Churchill, in pursuance of directions received from Lord John Russell, lost no opportunity of impressing on the Moldavian Government the importance attached to the two cases (Barbieri and Macri); whereupon it was agreed that a Commission of Inquiry should be appointed, in which Her Majesty's Government should be represented by Mr. Vice-Consul Barker. On that understanding, a programme of the points to be investigated was drawn up by Her Majesty's Consul-General, containing the allegations and assertions of the said parties.

Upon this, an objection was taken to one paragraph of the programme, relating to the presence of Mr. Barker as a component part of the Commission, and it was ultimately agreed that that paragraph should be struck out, which was accordingly done.

On the following day, a Report was brought by Mr. Consul-General Churchill, drawn up by the first Commission, which declared the conduct of the authorities irreproachable; and it was further stated that Barbieri did not appear at the Commission, but had been represented by a delegate from the British Consular Agency, whose signature and seal of office were in the "dossier."

It was further stated, that the Commission had not proved anything against the authorities whom Barbieri had accused of ill-treating him; and, moreover, that he had been warned not to appear at Ismail, because the authorities were leagued against him, and would inevitably arrest him if he did.

That, under these circumstances, he did not appear, and in consequence of the Moldavian Government having entered into direct communication with him, Her Majesty's Consul-General was precluded from the possibility of giving instructions to Mr. Vice-Consul Barker to be present at the Commission; and, moreover, the authorities accused had not been suspended during the time the Commission was sitting, a measure absolutely necessary for the free deposition of the testimony of persons who might otherwise be deterred from coming forward to give evidence.

For the aforesaid reasons, Her Majesty's Consul-General was under the necessity of demanding a fresh Commission.

In the latter end of 1860 and beginning of 1861, other Ionian subjects, under British protection, were arrested by the Moldavian authorities at Ismail, and were likewise thrown into prison without trial or sentence of any kind, and without the concurrence of the British Consular officers. They were detained in prison, some for two and others for three and four months, and were subjected to much ill-treatment, being tortured by an instrument called the "tumbrick," beaten on their naked flesh in the public streets, and violently assaulted with the butt-ends of muskets by the Moldavian authorities.

In January 1861 a second Commission was opened, at which Mr. Barker attended, and irrespective of Barbieri's case the attention of the Commission was called to the accusation of thirteen Ionians, which were equally serious with his, and most important. A detailed account of the first sitting of the Commission is given in Mr. Barker's despatch of the 17th January to Mr. Churchill,* and it appears that he was compelled to refuse attending the further sittings of the Commission in consequence of the interested and undue influence that the functionaries who had not been suspended were exercising over the Commission, with the members of which they were upon terms of the greatest intimacy.

The following are the particulars and claims of the other Ionians on the Moldavian Government, and which were likewise brought to the notice of the Commission.

Costantino Garbi, a grocer.—Had lent a public schoolmaster called Derventis (thirteen months previously) $2\frac{1}{2}$ roubles, and on his demanding payment of the same, Derventis, with assistance of others, beat plaintiff in a manner that it confined him to his bed, from where he was taken two days afterwards by the police and imprisoned. On the night of the same day Derventis beat plaintiff. Derventis was himself assaulted in the street by some person unknown. Authorities paid no attention to plaintiff's grievances against Derventis, and retained him in criminal imprisonment for about four months.

Claims 500*l.* indemnity. Supported by eleven depositions on oath.

Caralambo Garbi, tradesman.—Early one morning was taken from his lodging and imprisoned without trial or sentence; subsequently accused by authorities of having been to Derventis' house with sinister intentions. Retained in criminal prison for four months.

Claims 300*l.* indemnity. Supported by six depositions on oath.

Giovanni Cardianos (Crassa), commission agent in grain purchases.—Plaintiff refusing to pay a sum of money claimed under illegal pretences by Acting Policemaster Popoiret, as due to him personally, the latter placed ten gendarmes in his house to live at plaintiff's expense, and enforced payment. Subsequently plaintiff refusing to attend a summons, rejecting a second arrest, and taking refuge in the American Consular Agencies, where he was an admitted protected, was apprehended and kept in prison sixty-six days.

Claims 1,500*l.* Supported by five depositions on oath.

Gerassimo Raftopolo, a servant.—Plaintiff one night when sleeping in the same room with G. Avierino and his sailors, was pulled out of bed with the others, imprisoned and tortured without trial or sentence, and retained in prison more than three months.

Claims 50*l.* indemnity. Supported by two depositions on oath.

Gerassimo Danate, baker and vendor of bread.—Was, with his assistant Spiro Raftopolo, publicly beaten on the naked flesh twice on the same day, about fifty blows each time, and imprisoned until he paid 30 ducats to be let free; authorities pretending that plaintiff had neglected to remove from before his oven some reeds laying there, used for fuel, for which they beat him.

Claims 50*l.* indemnity (for losses only). Supported by four depositions on oath.

Dionisio Stefanizi, grocer.—Plaintiff having telegraphed to Mr. Consul Cunningham of the imprisonment of the Ionians, was apprehended, imprisoned, and tortured without trial or sentence, and retained for sixty-seven days. Afterwards authorities pretended that plaintiff assisted Crassa to reach his place of refuge; but which was proved untrue.

Claims 700*l.* indemnity. Supported by three depositions on oath.

Gerassimo Avierino, proprietor of a store and of a boat, being the chief mariner of the lighters at Sulina.—Was, with his sailors, and with G. Raftopolo, a servant at Ismail, who had conducted them from their open boat to a cottage for a night's shelter from the cold in the month of January, pulled out of bed, imprisoned, and tortured without trial or sentence, and retained in criminal imprisonment for about three months to say "who had been Derventes" [sic]. Plaintiff having arrived in his boat, with his sailors, from Sulina about twenty-four hours before he was apprehended; his boat returned to him damaged and stripped.

Claims 800*l*. indemnity. Supported by four depositions on oath.

Demetrio Spathi, mariner and speculator in petty commodities.—Shared the same fate as the above last two plaintiffs, being one of Avierino's sailors who were with him in his boat.

Claims 550*l*. indemnity. Supported by two depositions on oath.

Spiridion N. Caravias, merchant in a small way.—Was apprehended in the street, and criminally imprisoned and tortured without trial or sentence on the day he had prepared to leave Ismail for Berlad to join his brother, then British Consular Agent there. Had on his person the usual precaution adopted by travellers in this country, a pair of pocket-pistols, which were taken from him at the police station after his arrest. Authorities apprehended him because he was the Honorary Secretary of the American Agent Demetrio Macri, and in the sequel pretended that he took part in assisting Crassa to reach his place of refuge. Carrying the pistols on his person was also advanced as a proof of his culpability.

Claims 371*l*. 5*s*. indemnity. Supported by three depositions on oath.

A third Commission was appointed to meet at Jassy on the 18th of March, 1861, before which, however, the Ionians declined to present themselves, and a notice put up by Mr. Barker ordering all British subjects having complaints to bring forward against the chief functionaries of Ismail to be at Ismail on the 18th of March, was pulled down by the police by direction of Prefect Colonel Mauriki.

Mr. Vice-Consul Barker attended the first sitting of this Commission; but in consequence of the non-arrival of the President, the non-suspension of the accused functionaries, and the plaintiffs not appearing, he declined further attending the sittings of the Commission.

The following are further Reports of Her Majesty's Advocate-General on the cases of Dr. Barbieri and Macri:—

"Doctors' Commons, October 6, 1860.

"My Lord,

"I am honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th September ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Themistocles Macri, an Ionian, complaining that he was arrested and ill-treated by the local authorities at Ismail without any just cause, and requesting that compensation may be claimed for him from the Moldavian Government in this matter.

"Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Jassy, and from Her Majesty's Consul at Galatz, relative to this case, and to request that I would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and to report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Churchill with regard to Mr. Macri.

"In obedience to the directions of your Lordship I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

"That the instructions which I would venture to suggest as proper to be sent to Mr. Churchill with regard to Mr. Macri are, to dismiss altogether from his mind the vague and acrimonious complaints of the latter against himself, to disregard altogether the case of 'Macri v. Churchill,' and to report fully and distinctly upon the case of 'Macri v. the Moldavian Government,' more especially upon the very positive and distinct averments of Mr. Macri at pages 1, 2, and 3 of the translated copy of his letter to your Lordship of the $\frac{14}{26}$th July, 1861, to the effect more particularly—

"1st. That he was arrested and kept for fifty-six days in a 'horrible criminal prison' without ever being distinctly informed upon what charge or for what reason he was arrested.

"2. That he was tortured by the 'tumbrick,' which should be explained.

"3. That he had been long absent from Ismail, and only arrived there from Reni on the day of his arrest. The relevance of this averment is not quite clear; but I understand it to suggest an alibi, or that he could not when arrested have been guilty of any recent offence at Ismail; and that the authorities by ordinary exertion might have satisfied themselves of this.

"I infer (although this is not distinctly stated) that Mr. Macri was not formally charged with, or, at all events, brought to trial for, any definite legal offence; and that he contends that he was wrongfully and illegally treated throughout, either by error or by malice.

"Mr. Macri may also (subject to your Lordship's discretion) be applied to for further and fuller particulars of the charge (or supposed charge) made or suggested against him, which appears to have been (in effect) an assault on the police; the circumstance of the torture of the 'tumbrick;' as to the bearing of his absence from Ismail on the charge made or suggested against him; what evidence was adduced against him, and by him; and whether he was prosecuted, heard, acquitted, found guilty, and pardoned, or discharged by any, and what, judicial officer or tribunal. Mr. Churchill's attention should be directed to these points, and to the case generally, with a view to enabling Her Majesty's Government to consider the propriety of addressing, and what representation to the Moldavian Government upon Mr. Macri's case.

"The circumstances of Mr. Macri being a partizan of Consul Cunningham and an assailant of Mr. Churchill's conduct can have no bearing on the case; the principal questions upon which your Lordship requires full and precise information are:—

"1. Have Mr. Macri's complaints of the treatment he has received any substantial foundation?

"2. What are the real facts?

"3. Was he tortured?

"4. Was he imprisoned for fifty-six days, legally or illegally, and upon what charge and evidence, and with what result?

"5. And what is, or will be, the answer or defence of the Moldavian authorities to any complaint by that of Her Majesty? Whether Mr. Cunningham rather than Mr. Churchill should be applied to, is a question for your Lordship's consideration. Mr. Cunningham (who went to Ismail) must be the best informed upon this case.

"I do not understand whether Ionians in the Principalities are subject to the ordinary Tribunals in criminal matters, or whether they are responsible only to the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Consuls, as in the Turkish dominions (proper).

"I must venture to remark that it is very unfortunate that Mr. Churchill, in his letter of the 12th of September, should not have directed his attention to the very specific complaints of Mr. Macri against the authorities of Ismail, nor have apparently considered them as of any importance as compared with the complaints against himself; and I must add that there appears in the papers good reason to suppose that Ionians are not fairly treated by the authorities of Ismail: the case of the two bakers who were arbitrarily flogged for a very trifling offence has a very serious aspect.

"The authorities of Ismail seem to be aware of the unfortunate differences between Messrs. Churchill and Cunningham, and to consider themselves at liberty to treat the Ionians at their own discretion in the absence of any efficient British protection.

"Doctors' Commons, October 16, 1860.

"My Lord,

"I am honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th of September ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Dr. Barbieri, who describes himself as being of Florentine descent, but born in Malta, and who complains of having been arrested and ill-treated by the local authorities at Ismail without any just cause.

"Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Jassy, relative to Dr. Barbieri's case, and to request that I would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether any further instructions should be sent to Mr. Churchill with regard to Dr. Barbieri.

"In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

"That this case, which appears to me to be of serious importance, has (howsoever) assumed so confused and complicated a shape that I do not feel able to say with confidence whether any or what further instructions should be sent to Consul Churchill thereon; more especially inasmuch as I have failed to discover what Mr. Churchill has already been instructed to do. The Moldavian suggestion of requiring the complainant to pay or guarantee the costs of the inquiry was simply preposterous.

"In this officer's despatch of September 11, 1860, there occurs the following passage: 'The Prince's Prime Minister, to whom I have again spoken on the subject, has informed me that the Commission is already at Ismail, but that they will defer the examination until his own arrival at that town, when the whole affair will be examined by him.' If the result of this is, that the inquiry into the conduct of the authorities at Ismail towards Dr. Barbieri will be honestly, vigorously, and promptly proceeded with before the Prime Minister on the spot, then I do not see (as the case stands) what more can be done at present; but unless some British Consul, or very competent person, on behalf of Dr. Barbieri, is allowed to be present, and to take part in the inquiry before the Commission (for which I do not observe that any provision has been made), this proceeding will probably be useless.

"As between Her Majesty's Government and the Moldavian authorities, the case will apparently turn upon the correctness of the precise and relevant statements contained in Dr. Barbieri's letter of the 26th October, 1859, especially to the effect that he was liberated by the Chief of Police on the charge of manslaughter, and subsequently re-arrested, beaten, and put in irons upon a false charge (or charges) of assassination and forgery, said to have been committed at Galatz, which charge appears not to have been persisted in.

"The substantial truth of these statements appears to me to be the most material point for investigation, and this letter of Dr. Barbieri is not improper in its tone, and contained all that Mr. Churchill could have required (in the first instance) to enable him to take up the case. Dr. Barbieri's subsequent expressions were most indiscreet, but great allowance must be made for a person treated as he was by the authorities.

"Mr. Churchill should, in my opinion, either have at once taken up and conducted the case himself officially, and have informed Dr. Barbieri that he should do so, and should have declined to forward (either with or without omissions, the Doctor's own letters to the authorities, or he should, without officially interfering, have allowed the Doctor, after due warning, and at his own risk, to conduct the case entirely for himself. Neither course was adhered to consistently, and the result is naturally very unsatisfactory.

"With reference to the concluding passage of Mr. Churchill's despatch of September 11, I must observe, that neither the Doctor's exaggerated notions, nor his irritating language towards the authorities or towards Mr. Churchill, have any bearing on the only question in which Her Majesty's Government is concerned, namely, the distinct allegations of his arbitrary and oppressive ill usage by the authorities, of which Mr. Churchill does not seem to see very clearly the importance: he should not allow his attention to be diverted from the substantial merits of a case of this complexion by the indiscretion of the sufferer. The question of the Doctor's liberation on the charge of manslaughter, and subsequent re-arrest on a different charge, which he alleges to have been admitted by the President to Mr. Cunningham, appears to have been disregarded by Mr. Churchill, who dwells on the charge of manslaughter only.

"The whole case, of which Mr. Cunningham appears to have some knowledge, must be thoroughly investigated with a view of ascertaining whether Her Majesty's Government will be justified in demanding reparation, or otherwise interfering in any manner, and what will probably be the defence set up.

"The facts which require particular attention are the personal treatment of Dr. Barbieri, the precise charge upon which he was thus treated, the character of the accuser, the nature of the evidence adduced against him, the defence or answer made by him, the legal forms observed, the alleged admission of the President, and so forth. If the ill treatment is proved, it seems difficult to see what will be the defence or answer of the Moldavian Government.

"If the local authorities and Courts in the Principalities are legally entitled to exercise criminal jurisdiction over persons under British protection without any qualification or exception, and in all respects as would be the case in any other foreign Christian country (as to which I would request full information), then their conduct in this instance towards an accused person of good character and education evidently requires explanation, and both this case and that of Macri (see Report of the 6th October) contains some very startling averments which should be thoroughly sifted. The 'independence of the Tribunals' (which is alluded to in the case) may easily be made an excuse and a cover for acts of gross oppression if the Tribunals authorize or permit beating and irons without trial, on a mere preliminary proceeding, and it cannot be tolerated that persons under British protection should be thus treated under any circumstances.

"My Lord, "Doctors' Commons, December 20, 1860.

"I am honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th December instant, stating that with reference to my letter of the 16th of October last he was directed to transmit to me a despatch, together with its inclosures, which have been received from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Jassy respecting the proceedings of the Moldavian authorities, and the course pursued by himself, in regard to Dr. Barbieri; and to request that I would take Mr. Churchill's despatch, together with the former papers relative to this matter, into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Churchill's communication.

"In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

"That inasmuch as Mr. Churchill's despatch No. 66 is chiefly directed to the vindication of his official conduct in the case of Dr. Barbieri, the answer to be returned to it is entirely for your Lordship's consideration.

"I cannot, however, avoid observing that whatever official regularity and diligence Mr. Churchill may have displayed in the conduct of this voluminous correspondence (his last letter in which is apparently dated the 27th June, 1860, No. 161; Inclosure 39 in No. 66) on Dr. Barbieri's case, the fact unfortunately remains that not only is Dr. Barbieri (who was arrested and ill-treated in September 1859) at this date without any redress or answer, or any immediate prospect of obtaining either, but that Her Majesty's Government is, from its very imperfect information as to the merits of his case, quite unable to deal with it, to give any proper instructions in it, to take any material step whatever in the matter, or even to answer the Doctor's application. Why all the correspondence between Mr. Churchill and the authorities produced nothing but a promise of inquiry, or why that correspondence has wholly ceased for the last six months, I cannot conjecture.

"The object which I presume Her Majesty's Government has in view in establishing and maintaining foreign Consalates is not merely the keeping up a correct and voluminous correspondence, or keeping the papers in each case in regular order, but either to secure the speedy redress on the spot of injuries inflicted on persons under British protection, or, at least, the prompt transmission of such a clear and accurate statement of the facts of each as may enable the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to answer the complainant in a reasonable manner, and to determine what course to take, and thereupon to issue the requisite instructions.

"No such object has been here attained; Dr. Barbieri has received no satisfaction, and Her Majesty's Government, up to this date, is no more in a position to deal with his case than it would have been a year ago. This, of course, may not be Mr. Churchill's fault, but it is a very unsatisfactory state of things, and the result of it is, that Dr. Barbieri's case still, practically, remains as it was at first, and has not advanced one step, notwithstanding the formalities and extent of the official papers connected therewith. I cannot recall to memory any case of this character and importance in which, after a lapse of fifteen months, nothing has been done. The inquiry before a Commission (or whatever it may be) was a course which, as far as I am aware, was entered upon without any instructions or consent thereto by Her Majesty's Government.

"Mr. Churchill, however, in the latter portion of this despatch, calls attention to a point which appears to me urgently to require the prompt attention of Her Majesty's Government. It seems that the Moldo-Wallachian authorities ignore the Turkish Capitulations, and the peculiar and exclusive Consular jurisdiction secured thereby to Her Majesty's subjects.

"Mr. Churchill appears to have felt his position to be so unpleasant as to have contemplated retiring; but he gives no account of how matters have, as he says, 'drifted into this condition,' or of the course taken by other European Powers interested in the question, especially Russia and Austria. This is obviously a question urgently requiring a distinct and prompt settlement, not only with a view to the case of Dr. Barbieri but to that of Themistocles Macri (reported on by me on the 6th October, 1860), and to other cases which must arise hereafter.

"It is absolutely necessary, in order to secure any protection at all for British subjects or Ionians in the Moldo-Wallachian Principalities, to know under what jurisdiction and what law, both civil and criminal, they are there placed; and upon this point I have the honour to request further instructions, whensoever this case or cases of this character are again referred to me.

"The Right Hon. the Lord John Russell,
&c. &c. &c."

The attention of the Law Officers is called to the following extract from the despatch of Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General to Lord John Russell, by which it appears that the depositions of the plaintiffs, and evidence collected by Mr. Barker, are ignored by the Local Government, who have obtained a voluminous file of documents in defence of the accused parties:—

"Jassy, May 20, 1861.

"My despatch of the 1st May will have apprised your Lordship that all my efforts to bring the Commission to investigate the circumstances connected with the complaints in question had, to my great regret, been frustrated as much by the equivocal dealings of the Moldavian authorities as by the refusal of the accusers to come forward and substantiate their grievances; nor can I say that Mr. Barker has exhibited much inclination to see the complaints at all investigated by the Commission sent to Ismail for that express purpose.

"Dr. Barbieri from the very first refused to present himself before the Commission, on the plea that his life was in danger, and that the depositions he had so plentifully made in writing to his own Consular authorities were sufficient in themselves to justify the condemnation of the accused parties. The other complainants have likewise refused to present themselves before the Moldavian Commission, and their reasons for so doing appear to be less objectionable, as orders had been issued by the Central Government, which have now been countermanded, to send up to the capital for trial all those who had not cleared themselves of the accusation brought against them of assault on the police of the town in the 'Crassa' case, amongst whom were many of the complainants.

"The depositions of the plaintiffs, and the evidence collected by Mr. Barker, may be trustworthy enough, but they are ignored by the Local Government, inasmuch as they have not been drawn up before the Moldavian Commission; whilst Her Majesty's Government is unacquainted with the defence of the accused parties, forming a voluminous file of documents in the Moldavian tongue, which was never communicated to me by the Moldavian Government. The Moldavian Government has, it appears to me, a right to attach as much importance on their separate investigation, as Mr. Barker does in the affidavits and depositions collected by him; and the only possible means of bringing the matter to a satisfactory conclusion appears to me to be the one that has been and still is so much opposed by the complainants, namely, to confront the adverse parties, and come to the truth of the whole affair."

The opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown is requested—

1. As to the merits of the claims; and
2. As to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

We are of opinion that it now appears that Dr. Barbieri, although tried in the absence of the British Consular Agent, was acquitted of the crime of murder, with which he was charged, and set free; and that Macri, though arrested and imprisoned, has not been tried at all. In the other cases, also, we understand the complaints to be of ill-treatment of various kinds, without resort to any form of trial.

It follows, that although it may be proper to call the attention of the Moldavian authorities to the violation of Treaty in the trial of Barbieri, yet the grounds of claim for compensation are, in every case, illegal arrest, imprisonment, cruelty, and the like; matters which may give rise to well-founded remonstrance, and just claims for indemnification, according to the general language of Treaties and the obligations of international law, but cannot be classed as violations of the XLIInd Article of the Treaty of 1809, providing for the trial of British subjects in Turkey, for crimes alleged to have been committed there. Barbieri's committal for trial, in the first instance, would appear, under the circumstances, to have been a perfectly just proceeding.

For the rest, it appears to us that the complainants ought to appear and support their respective cases before the Commission by evidence. Provided a Commission be appointed, and sit to inquire into the facts of each case, and to report thereon to the Government of the country, we do not think that either the complainants or Her Majesty's Government can properly insist on the depositions, which have been taken in support of the complaints, and to the use of which it appears the Moldavian authorities object, being received in evidence. But we think that the complainants, and those against whom the complaints are urged, ought, in this respect, to be on the same footing before the Commission, and that their being so should be made a sine quâ non of the attendance of Mr. Barker, and of the complainants, before the Commissioners. Vivâ voce proofs on each side, or written depositions of the same character on each side, ought to be admitted, and we should think oral testimony much the preferable of the two.

Should such an inquiry as we have described be refused, then the ex parte statements of the complainants, so far as they may appear to be probable and entitled to belief, ought, in our opinion, to be adopted by Her Majesty's Government as being true in fact; and their demands on the Turkish Government might, it appears to us, under those circumstances, be justly founded on such assumption.

The conduct and event of an inquiry, should it take place, will (of course) have to be fully considered, with reference to the course which, in the end, it may be right for Her Majesty's Government to adopt.

Interference with British vessels on the "high seas."

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 10, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch, and its inclosure, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 423), requesting, with reference to a sentence in a despatch from Earl Russell, stating that Her Majesty's Government would not submit to measures taken on the high seas, in pursuance of a Decree closing the Southern ports, to be informed to what extent the term "high seas" limits the refusal of Her Majesty's Government to allow British vessels to be interfered with; and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Her Majesty's Minister.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration and have the honour to report—

That Lord Lyons may, on the abstract question of international law, be referred to Kent's "Commentaries," vol. i, page 29:—"According to the current of modern authority, the general territorial jurisdiction extends into the sea as far as cannon shot will reach, and no farther; and this is generally calculated to be a marine league, and the Congress of the United States have recognized this limitation by authorizing the District Courts to take cognizance of all captures made within a marine league of the American shores."

Certain gulfs, channels, and arms of the sea, wholly encompassed or bounded by the national territory, occasionally present instances of a limited extension of this rule; subject, however, to certain geographical considerations, into which it is not practicable to enter (in the abstract) with any sufficient precision.

But in the application of the recent Act of the Congress of the United States for closing the Southern ports, it will be perceived from our Report thereon that it is not to be assumed that in the absence of an effective blockade, Her Majesty's Government would be disposed to acquiesce in the capture, or confiscation, even within the territorial waters of the United States, of British vessels bound to or from Confederate or Southern ports.

The United States' Government is not entitled to treat acts of trading by British vessels, bound to or from British or foreign ports, with such Southern ports, under existing circumstances, simply as acts of smuggling, or to punish them as such, merely by virtue of the Act.

Lord Lyons may be, therefore, generally instructed to this effect; he should not, without further instructions, acquiesce in any captures of British vessels, bound to or from Southern ports, by United States' ships or officers, excepting such as purport to be made under the authority of the Law of Nations, as for breach of blockade, carrying contraband of war, and so forth.

We are not aware of any other captures of British vessels having been as yet made.

Intention of Mr. Hayman to trade with New Orleans and other ports. Inquiry respecting British protection.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a copy of a letter from Mr. Henry Hayman, stating that he has it in contemplation to fit out a number of ships for the purpose of trading with New Orleans and other ports of the United States, and requesting to be informed whether Her Majesty's cruizers will protect the ships of this intended expedition.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that Mr. Hayman adds, that if, for any diplomatic or other reasons, it is not deemed expedient to order any direct action on the part of Her Majesty's vessels in such matter, the parties interested will be prepared to defend themselves; and to request that we would take Mr. Hayman's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion—first, as to the bearing, internationally, of the step which Mr. Hayman states to be in contemplation; and secondly, as to the answer which it would be advisable to return to him.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That New Orleans is, as we have reason to suppose, blockaded by the naval forces of the United States, and that others of the Southern (or Confederate) ports are in the same condition; and we assume that it is with these (blockaded) ports that Mr. Hayman proposes to fit out ships to trade; which ships, he states, are to be "prepared to defend themselves, as best they may, in pursuit of their legitimate trade;" and he adds that "all parties hindering them will become responsible for the consequences."

The United States and the Confederate States are engaged in a civil war, which state of things is recognized by Her Majesty's Government, which is strictly neutral between them. If any British (neutral) ship knowingly attempts to break an effective blockade, she is liable to capture and condemnation. If she defends herself by force against a national vessel enforcing such blockade, such defence is a breach of the law of nations, exposing the ship and cargo to condemnation as prize, and those persons committing it to personal responsibility, and to severe treatment, according to the laws of war; and constituting an act of unjustifiable hostility on their part, by the law and usage of nations. Internationally, therefore, the contemplated proceeding (being such as we presume it to be) is obviously calculated not only to entail the most serious consequences upon those who may engage therein, but also to expose Her Majesty's Government, as well as British national character and interests in general, to the most obvious risk of serious embarrassment, and of grave international complications. The general rule as to trading by neutrals, in time of war, with belligerents, is that they may freely trade, respecting, however, every effective blockade; and carrying contraband of war to either belligerent at the risk of capture and condemnation by the other, if discovered.

The nature and precise terms of the answer which it will be advisable for your Lordship to return to Mr. Hayman, are, to a certain extent, a question for Her Majesty's Government under the peculiar circumstances of the case; we can only suggest that he should be warned of the serious consequences which the measures contemplated will entail on all concerned therein, and informed that Her Majesty's Government will not afford the slightest protection or countenance to the projected enterprise.

As to notification in "Gazette" of efficient blockade of Southern ports; and notice to Mr. Hayman of blockade of New Orleans.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th September instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 30th August ultimo, inclosing a copy of a letter from Mr. Hayman respecting the blockade of the Southern ports of North America, he was directed to request that, in taking this letter into consideration, we would report to your Lordship our opinion whether, in the event of notice of the establishment of an efficient blockade of the Southern ports being received from Her Majesty's Consuls or Rear-Admiral Milne, Her Majesty's Government should cause such notice to be inserted in the London Gazette; and, specifically, whether it would be right to give Mr. Hayman notice of the blockade of the port of New Orleans, supposing the fact of that port being blockaded should be conclusively established.*

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th September instant, transmitting a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 269, June 11), and two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at New Orleans (No. 23, June 6, and No. 38, August 29), containing the information received from those officers respecting the blockade of the Mississippi, together with a letter and its inclosures from the Admiralty dated the 29th August; and requesting that we would take these papers into consideration, with reference to the propriety of informing British shipmasters of such blockade, either by notice in the "Gazette" or otherwise.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, so far as we are aware, the Government of the United States has never either published or transmitted to Her Majesty's Government any official notification of the actual establishment of any blockade of any one or more ports (a step which the Government of Her Majesty and other Governments are usually in the habit of taking), and there is reason to suppose that the blockade of several Southern ports commenced at different dates, and has not been always, or in every case, uninterrupted. It is, moreover, strongly rumoured, and is not improbable, that some such ports have never been, and were not, effectually blockaded at the date of the latest intelligence therefrom.

We must also advert to the passage in President Lincoln's Proclamation of the 19th April, in which he announces that, "if, with a view to violate such blockade, a vessel shall approach, or shall attempt to leave, any of the said ports, she will be duly warned by the Commander of one of the blockading vessels, who will indorse on her register the fact and date of such warning; and if the said vessel shall again attempt to enter or leave the blockaded port, she will be captured, and sent to the next convenient port for such proceedings against her and her cargo, as prize, as may be deemed advisable."

As matters, therefore, actually stand, it is obviously competent to British vessels which may be captured for breach of blockade to contend before a Prize Court that, under this Proclamation, they are justified in sailing for New Orleans, or any Southern port, even although known to be blockaded, and taking their chance of entering it without being actually warned by a United States' ship of war; and that they are not liable to capture until they have, after such warning, "again attempted to enter."

The official publication in the "London Gazette" of any notification of blockade by Her Majesty's Government might seriously prejudice any such attempted resistance to condemnation on the part of British captured vessels, as well as operate, in general, injuriously to British interests in the actual state of the question.

It is, moreover, very difficult, if not impossible, for Her Majesty's Government to publish any accurate or reliable notice of the state and efficiency of so extensive a blockade as that under consideration; and such notification, if once issued, would most probably require continual modifications, and would be likely to lead to much difficulty and embarrassment.

Moreover, no such step is incumbent on Her Majesty's Government by the law or usage of nations; and, upon the whole, we do not consider it to be advisable.

We do not, however, see any objection to your Lordship informing Mr. Hayman, with reference to his recent communication, that, up to the date of the last advices, Her Majesty's Government was informed that New Orleans was, in common with other neighbouring ports, effectively blockaded by the naval forces of the United States' Government.

Proceedings of local authorities at Smyrna against a Turkish subject for forging bills of exchange with intent to defraud English firms.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 12.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 12, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Hornby, the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 72), inclosing a report (with other papers) from Legal Vice-Consul Logie, relative to the proceedings of the local authorities at Smyrna in the case of a Turkish subject named Dedian, who had been arrested on a charge of forging bills of exchange, with the intent to defraud certain English firms.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose some previous papers on the same subject, and to request that we would take Mr. Logie's report and its inclosures into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether it is advisable or practicable to send any instructions to Her Majesty's Ambassador at the Porte with regard to the sentence passed on Dedian by the Turkish Court at Smyrna.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that your Lordship's question must be answered in the negative. The case in question is that of a Turkish subject tried before a Turkish tribunal, competent by the law of the country to conduct the trial, the charge being one of a violation of Turkish law committed in Turkey.

It is true that British subjects were the sufferers by the frauds imputed to the accused, but the utmost right of interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government in the matter, to which this circumstance could, by any possibility, give rise, would be the right to see that the ordinary criminal law of Turkey was put in motion for the purposes of investigation, and of the punishment of the guilty in the event of a conviction. All this has, however, been done, and not only so, but an amount of interference in the course of the trial was permitted by the Court on the part of Mr. Logie, a British subject and judge, which might well have been refused, and from which it would, in our opinion, have been better if that gentleman had refrained. Mr. Logie bears about with him always the character of a judge; he may at any time be called upon in his judicial capacity to sit with Turkish magistrates on the trial of British subjects, and his appearing before those magistrates (as he did in this case) as the advocate of one of the parties upon an accusation of crime, must tend to impair his influence and efficiency when the occasion arises for presenting himself in his other character.

The conclusion at which the Turkish Court arrived, is not such as an English Court would have formed under the circumstances, and the light sentence appears to be justifiable, even according to Turkish law, only on the ground of the graver crime of "forgery" not having been established to the satisfaction of the Court. But it was for the Court to determine the question. This they seem to have done in an orderly manner, and with deliberation; and it is not to be wondered at, if they were perplexed, to account for the prisoner's having, of his own criminal mind, and without the instigation of others, committed so many frauds, by which another could alone benefit. The conduct of Mr. Whittall, a British subject, was, on his own showing, very discreditable, and even lays him open to suspicion. If the Turkish Court thought the clerk a tool in the hands of his master, their verdict and sentence would be likely to be much influenced by the consideration; and we think that, at all events, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified, internationally, in interfering in any way, either by remonstrance, or with the view of obtaining a rehearing, or a reconsideration of the finding, or of the sentence.

Income tax exacted from foreigners.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 17.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 13, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas (No. 59), relative to a tax upon incomes which is enacted in Venezuela from foreigners.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose the previous papers connected with this case, and to request that I would take them into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in instructing Mr. Orme to remonstrate with the Government of Venezuela against the levy of such a tax upon foreigners.

I am also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th August ultimo, transmitting a letter from Mr. Nevett dated the 22nd of July, in relation to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as far as friendly remonstrances will go, I am of opinion that the severe and capricious operation of the tax will justify them; and that Mr. Orme may persist in endeavouring (amicably) to obtain some exemption or mitigation for Her Majesty's subjects. I cannot, however, see how it can be fairly contended that this tax is "a forced loan, military exaction, or requisition," within the terms or spirit of Article IX of the Treaty of 1825 (Colombia) accepted by Venezuela by Treaty of 1834; nor will the circumstances of the case, in my opinion, justify a demand for the refunding by the Venezuelan Government of what has been actually levied.

The most important point for consideration in these papers, however, appears to me to be the statement in Mr. Nevett's letter of the 22nd July, 1861, to the effect that the French subjects having resisted the payment of this tax, and protested in their Legation, the Minister of Finance gave a verbal order to the Commissioners to suspend the proceedings.

Her Majesty's Government will be primâ facie justified in insisting upon British subjects being treated as leniently in this matter by Venezuela as French subjects, and upon this ground some satisfactory arrangement may be possibly arrived at.

GENERAL—(COLONIES).

The Confederate vessel "Sumter" at Trinidad. As to exclusion of United States' and Confederate vessels of war or privateers from British Colonial ports.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 29th of August last, inclosing a despatch from the Governor of Trinidad reporting the arrival of the Confederate vessel "Sumter" in that Colony, and what passed during her stay there; and to request that we would take this despatch into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion with regard to the propriety of the course pursued on that occasion by Governor Keate and by the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Cadmus."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship would also be glad to have our opinion as to whether vessels of war or privateers belonging either to the United States or to the so-styled Confederate States can properly be required to leave British ports in the West Indies and British North America, if the state of the weather will admit of their doing so.

The papers referred to in the Colonial Office letter, together with a copy of the letter to the Admiralty, and other offices, which has been laid before Parliament, were inclosed for reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not precisely understand what was the course pursued towards the "Sumter" by the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Cadmus:" there is nothing from this officer; and Governor Keate's despatch of August 7 only states that "Captain Hillyar has verified the character of the 'Sumter' and the Commissions of her officers, and recognized her as a man-of-war."

Governor Keate appears to have carefully avoided any such recognition whatever.

We know not upon what instructions either of these officers may have acted, but, as at present advised, we see no reason to disapprove of the conduct of either. The "Sumter" certainly appears not to be a privateer, and is (we presume) a vessel of war commissioned by a de facto belligerent Government.

Your Lordship's second question must in our opinion be at present answered in the negative.

Although it is competent, by the Law and usage of Nations, to Her Majesty, in common with all neutrals, to place certain restrictions upon the access of the ships of war or privateers of belligerent Governments to British ports, yet Her Majesty has not (as far as we are aware) done so during the present contest, excepting only in case of their being accompanied by prizes in the (printed) instructions of June 1st herewith. At the present time, therefore, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius;" and Her Majesty's Government should determine upon and make public some other general instructions on the point, if this should be considered expedient on grounds of Imperial and international policy; unless, or until this is done, the ships of war or privateers of either party unaccompanied by prizes should not, in our opinion, be required to leave British ports by the local authorities.

UNITED STATES.

Application for removal of Consul Bunch from Charleston. Arrest of Mr. Mure, and seizure and detention of bag of despatches of which he was the bearer.

WE are honoured by your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us copies of two notes from Mr. Adams, United States' Minister at this Court, dated the 3rd September instant: in one of which an application is made for the removal of Mr. Bunch, Her Majesty's Consul at Charleston; and in the other Mr. Adams, by order of his Government, enters into explanations with regard to the seizure and detention of a bag of despatches which Her Majesty's Consul at Charleston had entrusted to Mr. Mure for delivery.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a copy of a note from Mr. Consul Bunch, stating the character of the letters for private individuals which he had placed inside the bag, and which, together with despatches from Her Majesty's Government, were found in the bag on its being opened at the Foreign Office.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that Mr. Mure, who is a British subject by birth, but established for some years in the United States, and is stated to be a naturalized citizen, was arrested by the United States' authorities on suspicion of being also the bearer of despatches addressed to parties in this country in correspondence with the de facto Government of the so-styled Confederate States; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion upon the step taken by the United States' authorities in seizing and detaining, under the circumstances therein set forth, a bag of despatches addressed to Her Majesty's Secretary of State.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 433) on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in answering your Lordship's question, we must assume (in the absence of anything to the contrary), that all the statements made by Mr. Adams are entirely and accurately correct.

From these statements it results that Robert Mure, the bearer of the bag in question, although a natural-born British subject, is a naturalized citizen of the United States; that he has resided in the United States for thirty years; that he holds a commission as Colonel in what Mr. Adams calls "the insurgent forces of South Carolina;" that, together with this bag, he carried with him separately, and on his private account, what Mr. Adams calls "treasonable correspondence between persons acting in open arms against the Government of the United States and their friends and emissaries in Great Britain;" that he had a passport, issued by Consul Bunch, in contravention of the Regulations of the United States, not countersigned by the Secretary of State and the commanding officer of the United States' army, nor having the visa or sanction of any United States' authority; that, under these circumstances, he went from Charleston, on the Southern (or Confederate) territory to New York, and was there arrested when on the point of embarking for England.

Under these circumstances, the United States' Government appears to us to have been justified in arresting him, and in taking possession of all the papers and property in his possession, including the bag in question. They could not be expected to allow one who had voluntarily become a citizen, and who owed them allegiance, to pass out of their jurisdiction unmolested, under such circumstances, merely by reason of his carrying a bag of despatches to your Lordship from Consul Bunch, who is not such a public Minister as to be entitled to the privileges appertaining to that character under the Law of Nations.

With respect to the detention of the bag in question, we are unable to see why it was not at once delivered either to Lord Lyons, or to the British Consul at New York, for transmission, instead of being transmitted to your Lordship (unopened) by the Secretary to the United States' Legation here; but this we are disposed to view rather as a question of form than one of substance.

We observe that Mr. Adams states that "he is directed to express the regret which his Government feels that such a measure had become imperative, and to assure Her Majesty's Government of its earnest desire to make any suitable amends which may justly be required;" and this being so, we submit to your Lordship's judgment that this apology may, under the very peculiar circumstances of the case, and bearing in mind the unfortunate selection of the bearer of the bag of despatches, be accepted as a sufficient reparation, and that no further formal demand of redress need be made upon the Government of the United States.

Legal proceedings against Mr. Donnet. Interference in his favour.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 17, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 31st August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon (Nos. 113 and 120), respecting certain legal proceedings in Portugal in which Mr. Donnet is concerned, and regarding which he has requested the intervention of Her Majesty's Legation.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that your Lordship would be glad to learn my opinion whether there are any grounds for the interference of Her Majesty's Legation in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there are no grounds whatsoever for any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Legation in this matter.

Inclosure in No. 229.

Sir A. Magenis to Lord J. Russell.

(Extract.) Lisbon, August 5, 1861.

THOUGH the whole details of this question have been already transmitted home by my predecessor, I will recall them in a few words to your Lordship's recollection.

Mr. Donnet occupies—I conclude as proprietor—a house in a street leading to the western suburb of this city, with a back yard formerly washed by the Tagus. He obtained permission from the Captain of the Port to build a small wharf at the end of his yard, on the river, for his own convenience, and the ground occupied by what was formerly the wharf is the subject of the present dispute. I have had this ground measured, and it is 9½ yards deep by rather less that 11 yards wide.

The river at the rear of Mr. Donnet's house has since 1857 been embanked, and the yard which was formerly washed by the river is now removed from it at some distance. A road has been laid out on the new embankment leading to the western suburb and to the Palace, avoiding a hill, and is a great improvement: the ground in dispute projects into this road. If expropriated for public utility, no jury would, I believe, assess its value at more than the merest trifle, for it can be of no value now to Mr. Donnet.

I must observe also, that his Portuguese neighbour, who had received 300*l.* for his ground, to whom Mr. Donnet refers, had, I am told, erected large stores on it, whereas there is no building on Mr. Donnet's ground.

The Municipal Chamber, under whose directions improvements are carried out in this city, however, disputed Mr. Donnet's right to the ground in question, on the ground that the Captain of the Port had not the power to grant him the authority to erect the original wharf, and instead of dispossessing him by legal proceedings, pulled down, "illegally and arbitrarily," as the sentences declare, his palings, and removed, without any insult, as I am informed, but on the contrary, with care, the British flag, which I conceive Mr. Donnet had no right to hoist there.

On the sentence being given in Mr. Donnet's favour, he replaced the paling, which, as I said, projects into the unfinished road, where it now remains.

Mr. Donnet, by his voluntary act, has resided in this country about fifty years, and he knows, or ought to know, that he thereby subjects himself to the laws of the country. Those laws have hitherto decided in his favour, and against the Municipal Chamber of Lisbon; and I conceive, and am still of the same opinion, that it was not a case in which I could interfere, nor one in which he could demand my official "protection and assistance."

It is, I believe, an undisputed fact in international law, that a foreigner is subject to the law of the country in which he resides, unless there be any Treaty between the country to which he owes allegiance and that in which he resides to the contrary—as formerly between Great Britain and Portugal—and that the Minister of such foreigner has only the right to interfere when he is treated less favourably than a native subject would, under like circumstances, be treated.

I have hardly a doubt that your Lordship will also concur in my feeling that, by interfering officially when I have no good grounds for doing so, I should materially diminish the weight of such interference, and the consequent protection which I could afford to Her Majesty's subjects resident here, when I felt I had sufficient reason and a just cause to interfere officially with this Government.

P.S.—The Portuguese Government, moreover, are no more responsible for the acts of the Municipal Chamber of Lisbon than Her Majesty's Government would be for those of the Corporation of London.

Communication to father of Mrs. Meade of despatches from Secretary of State to Consul at Bucharest for legal purposes.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Bucharest (No. 25), requesting to be informed whether he is at liberty to communicate copies of the accompanying two despatches with their inclosures from the Foreign Office (Nos. 5 and 7) to the father of Mrs. Meade, an American lady, who was married at Constantinople in 1856 to a Captain John Meade, by whom she was deserted soon after their marriage, and from whom her family are anxious she should now obtain a divorce, and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take the accompanying papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether the application of Mrs. Meade's father may be complied with.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as at present advised, I am of opinion that this question must be answered in the negative.

It does not appear that any legal proceedings have been instituted by Mrs. Meade or her family against her husband (even supposing him to be the person alluded to in the despatches in question, of which there is no proof), and it is not stated that copies of the despatches in question are actually required by her father in the interests of justice, or that their being furnished to him would secure the attainment of any distinct object, such as would warrant Her Majesty's Government in acceding to this request. As the matter therefore stands at present, I see no sufficient reason for giving copies of these despatches to Mrs. Meade's father.

Refusal of the Porte to allow Mrs. Abbott to open a calico manufactory at Smyrna.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th August ultimo, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 26th June last,* respecting the refusal of the Porte to allow Mrs. Abbott to carry on a calico manufactory at Smyrna, he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch (No. 569) and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, containing further particulars on that subject, and to request that I would take these, together with the former papers, into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not consider that the refusal of the Turkish Government to grant the permission in question to Mrs. Abbott can, under the circumstances, be considered as a violation of any Treaty stipulation; or that it can properly form the subject of a formal international demand. The subject is one of serious importance not only to British interests, but to those of all commercial Powers having much intercourse with Turkey; but it is rather a question of policy than of international law. I can only suggest that it should be kept in view, and that possibly a joint representation on the part of the principal Powers interested might be addressed to the Turkish Government on the necessity of laying down and enforcing some general and reasonable regulations favourable to the introduction and carrying on of foreign trades and manufactures in Turkey, by which Turkish interests would be greatly benefited, instead of this important matter being left (as it now is) to the arbitrary or interested caprice of the various local authorities. I believe that it will be found that in some portions of the Turkish dominions, as in Egypt and the Principalities, this subject is on a more satisfactory footing than it would seem to be at Smyrna.

Instructions in the cases of the "Hiawatha" and "Perthshire." Cases of Messrs. Quillan and Fitzpatrick, and question of purchase of enemies' ships by neutrals.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying drafts of instructions which it is proposed to address to Lord Lyons, founded upon my several Reports of the 5th,* 6th,† and 7th September instant,‡ respecting the cases of the "Hiawatha" and "Perthshire," the cases of Messrs. Quillan and Fitzpatrick, and the question of the purchase in the United States of enemies' ships by neutrals.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the draft of a letter which, in conformity with my other Report of the 6th instant,§ it is proposed to send to Mr. McDonald and Mr. Delafield, declining to answer the questions put by them upon the subject of a proposed speculation in cotton.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship is desirous of ascertaining, before they are sent off, whether these instructions to Lord Lyons and the answer to Mr. McDonald and Mr. Delafield are entirely in accordance with the views stated in my above-mentioned Reports; and to request that I would take them into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether, in my opinion, they are right and proper.

Capture of the "Sarah Starr" for alleged violation of the blockade of Wilmington.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 436), respecting the capture at sea, by the United States' ship of "Wabash," of the British brig "Sarah Starr," for an alleged violation of a blockade of the port of Wilmington, in North Carolina.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to me, as bearing upon this question, three despatches and their inclosures, from Her Majesty's Consul at Charleston (Nos. 89, 94, and 95), respecting the alleged inefficiency of the blockade of North and South Carolina; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as I might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the capture of the "Sarah Starr" appears to me to have been a very harsh measure, if not entirely unjustifiable; regard being had to the circumstances of the case.

I observe that Mr. Secretary Seward, in his letter to Lord Lyons of the 16th August, states that instructions have been given for the release of this vessel, in the event of there being no probable cause to suspect her nationality. I presume that there is no such cause.

With respect to the despatch of Consul Bunch, No. 94, and its inclosures, I have only to observe that these seem to show that there has been so much laxity in the maintenance of the blockades of the ports of Charleston and Wilmington, as to leave the validity of any such blockades (at all events previously to the arrival off Charleston of Flag Officer Prendergast, in the United States' ship "Roanoke," and to the publication of his Notification of July 13) open to serious question.

I am not, however, aware that, with the exception of the "Sarah Starr," any British vessels have been recently captured for breach of the above-mentioned blockades.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed to forward to me a despatch from Earl Cowley (No. 1,046), showing the result of his application to the French Government, together with the other papers relative to the case; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether any, and if any, what, steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

Claim of Messrs. Aitken and Grace for expenses in making tender for supply of cloth for Turkish army.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 23, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, which would put me in possession of the circumstances connected with an alleged breach of faith on the part of the late Seraskier towards Messrs. Aitken and Grace, an English firm established at Constantinople, in not accepting a tender made by them for supplying cloth for the use of the Turkish army.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit a further despatch from Sir H. Bulwer (No. 590), inclosing an application from Messrs. Aitken and Grace for the support of Her Majesty's Government to obtain for them repayment from the Turkish Government of the expense which their firm had incurred in order to make the tender in question; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration and report my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to this application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Sir H. Bulwer may be instructed to inform Messrs. Aitken and Grace, in courteous terms, that he regrets to find himself unable to comply with their request.

I do not find in these papers a specific statement of the particular question or questions referred to the decision of the Mixed Commission; nor have I been able to discover what was the formal decision of that Commission, against which "the European Commissioners" protested. I find, however, in Messrs. Aitken and Grace's letter to Sir H. Bulwer of August 17, an admission that the practical result of the Commission was that they were offered the contract. However prudently they may have acted in declining the offer under the peculiar circumstances of the case, or whatever may have been the hardship of the previous portion of their case, I consider that Her Majesty's Government cannot properly support their claim for expenses incurred in relation to a contract which they refused to execute when ultimately offered to them on their own terms.

Capture at sea of the "Herald" for alleged breach of blockade of port of Beaufort.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 24, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me four despatches, and their inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 376, July 29; No. 387, August 1; No. 428, August 15; No. 437, August 12), respecting the British ship "Herald," captured at sea for an alleged breach of a blockade of the port of Beaufort, in North Carolina; and to request that I would take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I can only recommend that Lord Lyons should continue his attention to this case. It is impossible, as yet, to discover the real ground upon which the United States' Government is proceeding (advisedly) to impugn the apparently strong primâ facie proof of the "Herald" being wholly British-owned, and the charge of breaking blockade has been virtually abandoned.

Detention of Mr. J. G. Robinson's yacht "Gipsey" at New Orleans, and oath administered to her crew not to serve against United States during the war.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 24, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 435, August 17), reporting the circumstances under which the yacht "Gipsey," the property of Mr. John G. Robinson, a British subject, residing at New Orleans, was detained for some days by the United States' blockading vessel "Brooklyn," and that the crew of the "Gipsey" were required by the commander of the "Brooklyn" to take an oath not to serve against the United States during the war; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I see no reason for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter. The national character of the "Gipsey," as between the belligerents in America, was by no means free from doubt when she was detained; and she appears (especially from an expression in Mr. Robinson's letter of August 1 to Lord Lyons) almost to have invited detention. Her owner (Mr. Robinson), a British subject, appears to be domiciled at New Orleans, and nothing is stated as to his intention to return to this country, or his having any bond fide intention of completing her registry in a British port.

Under these circumstances, the Consul should be directed to forward full particulars of the circumstances under which he issued a provisional certificate of registry to the "Gipsey," together with a copy of that instrument, and a reference to the instructions (either from the Board of Trade or otherwise) under which he acted in so doing.

He should also state to what British port he was informed, or believed, on issuing the provisional certificate, that she intended to proceed to complete her registry, and at what date she was to proceed thither; and he should fully explain this statement in his despatch of June 26th:—"When Mr. Robinson applied to me to grant this certificate, he informed me that his object was merely to go out on a pleasure cruise, with the object of fishing among the islands which divide the Gulf of Mexico from Lake Borgne," adding "that he cautioned Mr. Robinson against going near the blockading squadron; to which he replied, that he had no intention of going there at all;" from which expressions (without explanation) it would appear that the Consul had irregularly issued a provisional certificate of registry to a pleasure yacht, whose owner was domiciled in a blockaded port during a war, and who never meant to complete her registry.

Time at which notice should be given to terminate Reciprocity Treaty of 1854.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch, and its inclosure, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 340, July 15), and a correspondence between the Foreign Office and the Colonial Office, on the question as to the precise time at which it would be competent for either of the High Contracting Parties to the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 to give notice of its wish to terminate that Treaty; and to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the Treaty in question first "came into operation" on the 16th March, 1855, within its terms and reasonable interpretation; assuming, as we do, that the President's Proclamation of that date was earlier than any of the British Colonial Proclamations. The Treaty "took effect" (that is, became binding, according to its terms, on each of the High Contracting Parties) so soon as the laws requisite for insuring its operation were passed by each of the two Contracting States and by the Provincial Parliaments of the British Colonies which were to be affected by the Treaty. All this was accomplished by the 13th December, 1854, when the Nova Scotian Act (the latest of the series) was passed.

The Treaty having thus become effective and binding, at what date did it "come into operation?" And we think the answer must be sought for in the provisions of the laws which, in the words of the Vth Article, were "required to carry it into operation." By one of these laws (the law of the United States) the President was empowered to issue a Proclamation declaring, in substance, that the Treaty had taken effect; whereupon its various provisions were to "go into effect, and be observed on the part of the United States." Such a Proclamation was actually issued on the 16th March, 1855; and upon that day it is clear that, in the United States, the Treaty "came into operation;" and should the United States' Government select the 16th March, 1865, for determining the Treaty by notice, we are of opinion, under the circumstances, that no objection can be taken to their adopting that course. Should it happen that the British, and not the American Government, should first wish to bring the Treaty to an end, then we should recommend, as a matter of propriety and prudence, that the "ten years" mentioned in the Treaty should be reckoned as ending on the latest day on which, according to the terms of any of the British Colonial Proclamations, it came into actual operation within any Colony; that being, of course, the earliest day on which the Treaty would be in universal operation in favour of the United States.

Consular procedure in Moldo-Wallachian Provinces.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers noted in the margin relative to Consular procedure in the Moldo-Wallachian Provinces, and to explain to us the position in which that question now stands.

That Mr. Green, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Bucharest, having called the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the resistance offered by the Wallachian authorities to the Capitulations with the Porte in favour of British subjects, was directed, both by the Secretary of State and also by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, to offer his suggestions as to the best mode of placing the whole question of Consular procedure in the Principalities upon a satisfactory footing.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that these suggestions, having been considered by Sir Henry Bulwer in concert with Mr. Hornby, the result of their deliberations is stated in the marginal remarks on the inclosure of Sir Henry Bulwer's despatch No. 438 of the 22nd June last.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship desired him to request us to report to your Lordship our opinion in regard to Mr. Green's suggestions, and the observations of Sir Henry Bulwer and Mr. Hornby thereupon, and to inform us that it is the intention of the Secretary of State, if we should be of opinion that the matter ought to be proceeded with, to instruct Sir Henry Bulwer to submit to his colleagues the proposed scheme, as finally approved by us, in order that, if the Representatives of the European Powers at Constantinople concur in it, an identic course may be adopted in the Principalities by all the Powers.

The Capitulations, and the Order in Council concerning Consular jurisdiction, were inclosed.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th September instant, transmitting a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Bucharest (No. 75), containing further particulars relative to the question of Consular procedure in the Moldo-Wallachian provinces.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That before we are in a position to advise your Lordship as to the propriety of adopting the course which is suggested, we must request to be distinctly informed whether Her Majesty's Government is or is not prepared to contend for, and enforce the observance of the existing Capitulations and Treaties with Turkey, on the part of the authorities of the Principalities.

We must observe that the existing Order in Council (August 27, 1860) treats Her Majesty as fully entitled to exercise, and to regulate, and deal with, the peculiar Consular jurisdiction and privileges secured to this country and its subjects by the Capitulations and Treaties "in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte," of which we conceive that the Principalities internationally and legally form a portion. By international law, then, the Capitulations and Treaties are actually in force in the Principalities, whilst in English legal contemplation this Order in Council is also actually in force therein; any British subject therein may appeal to its provisions, and all British subjects therein are bound to carry it out (see our recent Report on the case of Dr. Barbieri and others, and the papers therewith).

The consent of the Sultan will be requisite to any material modification of the existing international compact between Great Britain and Turkey, and the Order in Council would have to be partially revoked, and a new Order issued. It is a subject, therefore, of serious consideration whether (as suggested by Mr. Hornby) these Capitulations and Treaties should not either be enforced in the Principalities generally, and without modification, or at least taken as the common rule relating to Her Majesty's subjects, and as the "basis" and principle of all arrangements or negotiations on this matter with the local authorities, subject only, if necessary, to certain specific modifications, which should be suggested by the authorities of the Principalities, and duly considered.

We are disposed to agree with Mr. Hornby's remarks on this point, and it appears to be obvious that if no great concessions are absolutely necessary on the part of Her Majesty's Government, the present Order in Council (which was carefully prepared and, on the whole, works well) should be either absolutely carried out, or be adapted to the requirements of the Principalities; and that a new and distinct arrangement (such as that prepared by Mr. Green) should only be entered upon, first, in case of absolute necessity, and secondly, in case of there being a strong probability of the cordial assent thereto of the authorities of the Principalities. The arrangement prepared by Mr. Green strikes us as equivalent, in effect, to a new and separate Treaty with the Principalities, on the subject of international jurisdiction; if the authorities are, in effect, in a position to repudiate the Capitulations and Treaties, there seems to be no reason for supposing they will accede to any new arrangement, or carry out the details bonâ fide. If, on the other hand, they are not in such a position, then we see no sufficient reason for entering upon any discussion or consideration of the new arrangement. Your Lordship will not fail to observe in M. Arsaki's note to Mr. Green of August $\frac{10}{22}$, 1861, the inconsistency with which a positive assertion of jurisdiction over Ionians is followed by a request for the modification of the "Capitulations."

Subject to these observations, and if we are, in effect, to sanction a new "Code" for the governance of Her Majesty's subjects in the Principalities, to be followed by the legal machinery necessary for carrying it out in practice, then we concur generally in the scheme as modified by Mr. Hornby; but we respectfully beg leave to reserve for more detailed examination, on further information, its details and phraseology.

Proclamation of President of United States prohibiting commercial intercourse with Seceded States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 27, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 440, August 19), inclosing a copy of a Proclamation issued by the President of the United States, prohibiting commercial intercourse with the Seceded States.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose, for reference, a copy of the Act of Congress under which it is stated that this Proclamation has been issued; and to request that I would take the Proclamation into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as I might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this Proclamation into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this Proclamation appears to me to be within the competence of the President, and in conformity with the law and usage of nations. The existence of a war between two Governments implies and involves, in theory and contemplation of international law, the existence of a war between all the individuals voluntarily domiciled within the territory of either Government, which is supposed to represent and act for all such persons; and one of the immediate consequences of war is the entire interdiction of all commercial dealing between the subjects, citizens, or domiciled inhabitants of the belligerents, excepting by the formal and special license or permission of their Government. With this exception, "war" places every individual living within the territory of either Government, as well as the Governments themselves, in a state of hostility, legally and internationally; and trading with the inhabitants of the enemy's territory, is "trading with the enemy." These principles have been constantly applied inter gentes, by this country, and other foreign Powers, when belligerents.

The fact that the war now existing in North America may, in a certain sense, be viewed as a civil war, and that the President speaks of "the insurrection" of the particular States named in the Proclamation, does not appear to me to make any very material or practical difference; more especially as Her Majesty's Government, and all other Governments, have treated both parties as belligerentes inter se in justo bello, and consider themselves as "neutrals" internationally. It does not appear to me, therefore, that the issuing of this Proclamation requires any international notice on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

It remains to be seen how the "forfeiture to the United States" (imposed by the Proclamation) is to be enforced, and carried out in practice—whether by legal proceedings in Court, or otherwise; upon which point Lord Lyons will, doubtless, send further information.

Inefficiency of blockade of North and South Carolina.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 27, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th September instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 10th September instant, respecting the alleged inefficiency of the blockade of North and South Carolina, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch (No. 83) from Her Majesty's Consul at New York, reporting upon the blockade of the Southern ports, and a letter from the Admiralty inclosing (together with a further Report from Commander Hickley on this subject) a copy of a letter which that officer had addressed to Flag Officer Stringham, observing upon the open state of the inlet and ports in North Carolina specified by him, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I can offer no useful observations on these papers. The material question for Her Majesty's Government is, "Are British vessels captured for breaking blockades which are not effectively maintained, and, if so, of what ports, and at what dates can this be proved?" With the exception of the "Herald" (already brought under my notice), the only British vessel mentioned in these papers as so treated is the "Prince Leopold," apparently seized at New York on the 22nd August, but for violation of what blockade is not stated (see Consul Archibald's No. 93): no representations as to this case have as yet come under my notice.

With reference to Commander Hickley's (of the "Gladiator") note to Flag Officer Stringham of August 15, on what he calls "the open state of the blockade" of the ports of North Carolina therein mentioned, I am unable to see the object or expediency of such communications, or how British interests are thereby promoted. Unless or until British vessels are illegally or harshly treated by the United States' cruizers, Her Majesty's Government has no interest (that I can see) in thus officially calling the attention of the United States' naval officers to the imperfect state of the alleged blockades, and thereby increasing their vigilance, by the want of which British and other neutral interests profit (see Consul Archibald's No. 83).

If, however, Her Majesty's Government, for reasons of which I am not informed, and which do not occur to me, considers it proper to order such communications to be made by naval officers, then I would suggest that they should at least therein set forth accurately and specifically, the material facts and dates within their own knowledge or observation.

Instructions as to termination of Mixed Commission at Rio.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 26, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th September instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 24th June last,* he was directed to transmit to us the draft of an instruction which your Lordship has addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Rio (No. 48), instructing him as to the nature of the communication which should be made to the Brazilian Government as to the termination of the Mixed Commission at Rio.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose a letter from Mr. Youle, dated June 22, 1861, transmitting copy of a decision of the Commission, awarding to him the amount of his claim, and requesting that steps may be taken to obtain its payment, and to request that we would take Mr. Youle's letter into consideration, with reference to the terms of the Convention of the 2nd of June, 1858, and to our Report of the 14th of December, 1860, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course which should be pursued with respect to Mr. Youle's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we presume that the decision of the Mixed Commission in favour of Mr. Youle's claim, dated 20th December, 1859, was made before the suspension of the proceedings of the Commission: if so, it was in time, as having been arrived at within two years assigned by Article III of the Convention for the conclusion of the Commissioners' labours, in the absence of an agreed-on extension of time. Such being the case, we are of opinion that, notwithstanding the absence of a "certificate" in Mr. Youle's favour (as mentioned and explained in Mr. Morgan's letter to Mr. Hill of the 21st September, 1860), the sum adjudged to Mr. Youle ought to have been paid within twelve months after the date of the decision, without interest, and without deductions, save as mentioned in Articles IV and VI of the Convention. Under existing circumstances, we think interest ought to be paid on the same, adjudged from the 20th December, 1860, down to the period of actual payment; and Article VI expressly provides that all amounts decreed by the Commission to be paid to claimants "shall be paid by the one Government to the other." It is competent, therefore, in our opinion, for Her Majesty's Government to demand from that of His Brazilian Majesty, payment of the principal and interest, and subject only to the deduction we have above pointed out; and indeed the case, so far, appears to be a hard one on Mr. Youle. It was, beyond question, a case within the competence of the Commission to decide upon; and, in like cases, in which the decision has been in favour of Brazilian claimants, it has been the Law Officers' duty to advise Her Majesty's Government to submit to the decisions. (See Report of 14th December, 1860.)

We observe that the copy of the Commissioners' decision, which has been laid before us, is not "signed by them respectively," as required under Article II of the Convention. This may not improbably be a mere clerical omission; and even if the signatures were omitted (but such omission was accidental only), and the decision was really a final decision, advantage cannot, in equity or honour, be taken of the circumstance. The wanting certificates, we also think, may be dispensed with, on the Brazilian Government being satisfied as to the authenticity of the decision presented to them as that of the Commissioners.

Claim of Captain Tindle for damage to his brig "Addison," run down in River Plate by the "Don Quichette," of Havre.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 26, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 9th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Richard Brown (dated the 4th September instant), inclosing a statement drawn up by Captain Tindle, of the circumstances under which the British brig "Addison" met with serious injury by being run into by the "Don Quichette," of Havre, in the River Plate, and of the steps which were subsequently taken by Captain Tindle to obtain an adjustment of his claim for damages, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in instructing Her Majesty's Minister to bring this matter before the Government of the Argentine Confederation.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

Liability of British subjects to perform military service in the United States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 30, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that with reference to the Law Officers' Report of the 31st July, 1860, and to the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 18th of March last,* respecting the question of the liability of British subjects to perform military service in the United States, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Charleston, again calling the attention of Her Majesty's Government to this question; and to request that we would take the Consul's despatch into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose, as bearing upon this subject, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, transmitting copies of a correspondence with Her Majesty's Consul at Galveston, respecting the liability of aliens to perform military service in Texas; together with the draft of an instruction which had been addressed to Her Majesty's Minister, approving his proceedings as therein reported.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the question which has now practically arisen under very peculiar circumstances, is one not admitting of a satisfactory solution by being left to the determination of the ordinary municipal laws and Courts of the several States heretofore forming the "Republic of the United States of America," as might be the case under ordinary circumstances.

Whilst Her Majesty's Government might well be content to leave British subjects, voluntarily domiciled in a foreign country, liable to all the obligations ordinarily incident to such foreign domicile (including, where imposed by the municipal law of such country, service in the Militia, or National Guard, or Local Police, for the maintenance of internal peace and order, or even, to a limited extent, for the defence of the territory from foreign invasion), it is not reasonable to expect that Her Majesty's Government should remain entirely passive under the treatment to which we understand British subjects are actually exposed in various States of the former Union; such, for instance, as being embodied and compelled to serve in regiments, perhaps nominally of "Militia," but really exposed not only to the ordinary accidents and chances of war, but to be treated as rebels or traitors in a civil war, involving many questions in which they, as aliens, cannot, simply by reason of their domicile, be supposed to take interest; as to which they may be incompetent to form an opinion; and in the determination of which they are precluded from freedom of choice and action. No State can justly frame laws to compel aliens, resident within its territories, to serve, against their will, in armies ranged against each other in a civil war. A fortiori, in the absence of any such law, they cannot justly enforce the service.

We observe in Lord Lyons' despatch to Consul Lynn, 4th July, 1861 (Inclosure 3 in No. 379), that his Lordship states that in no case, either in the Northern or Southern States, has the discharge of a British subject enlisted against his will been refused or delayed, on proper representations being made by one of Her Majesty's Consuls or by himself; and we, therefore, conclude that the desired exemption is practically conceded. Should this not be the case, we can only suggest that Her Majesty's Government, in common with other foreign Governments interested in this question, should address such communications to the contending parties as may be likely to lead to the securing to aliens the exemptions which would be now so highly desirable. We assume that there is no hope of securing in practice, especially in South Carolina, any legal decision of a competent Court favourable to the exemption as a matter of right.

Proclamation of United States' Government, prohibiting all intercourse with Southern States. Suggestion for keeping up a communication with Charleston by means of Her Majesty's ships.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 1, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th September ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 467), reporting that in consequence of the recent Proclamation issued by the United States' Government, prohibiting all intercourse with the Southern States through the ordinary channels, he has, at the suggestion of Mr. Bunch, proposed to Rear-Admiral Sir A. Milne an arrangement by which Her Majesty's ships might be made the means of keeping up a communication with Charleston.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship considers that, for ordinary communications, this plan is open to objection on political grounds; but that your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with my opinion as to the proposed arrangement.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the proposed arrangement does not seem to me to be desirable; its successful action must depend upon the view which the United States' Government may take of it (which is not stated), and the port of Charleston being blockaded, that Government may well object to its being periodically visited by British ships of war, merely for the purpose of carrying on the British Consul's correspondence with Lord Lyons.

I observe from Consul Bunch's despatch to Lord Lyons, of August 9:

Greek Bill concerning mixed marriages.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 28, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens,* relative to a Bill concerning mixed marriages which has recently passed through the Greek Chambers.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the Protocol having reference to the position of Roman Catholics in Greece, alluded to in Sir Thomas Wyse's second despatch, was signed in the year 1830, and is to be found in the "State Papers," vol. xvii, p. 202, and a further Protocol bearing upon the same subject is to be found in vol. xviii, p. 605; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not find in these papers any statement or explanation of the state of the Greek law as to "mixed marriages," before the passing of the recent Law on the subject, or of the changes (if any) thereby introduced affecting the legal position in Greece of persons not members of the Greek Church who may desire to contract marriage with members of that Church.

I am not, therefore, in a position to offer any material observations on these papers.

No grounds for interference of Her Majesty's Government.

1. I will only add that, generally speaking, it is competent to every country to legislate for, and to alter and regulate, its own matrimonial law, at its own discretion, and to apply such law within its territories by its Tribunals, when their action is duly involved, to all marriages contracted within its territory, by whomsoever, or by its subjects, wheresoever. Great Britain has frequently acted on this principle. On general grounds, therefore, I cannot at present see any reason for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter, and Sir T. Wyse does not suggest any.

2. With reference to the peculiar position occupied by France in this matter, especially under the Protocols of the 3rd February and the 1st July, 1830, I do not perceive what is the French ground of objection to this Law, or how it is at variance with those Protocols. Sir T. Wyse does not point this out, and, therefore, until it is clearly explained, I can form no opinion with reference thereto. Her Majesty's Government is certainly not bound to anticipate the possible action of France under the Protocols. When the intervention of Her Majesty's Government is required by France, the whole case must be fully considered.

3. I cannot at present see the expediency of Her Majesty's Government taking any step in the matter. A similar Law obtains (I believe) in certain Roman Catholic countries, in which the education of the children as Roman Catholics is made a condition precedent to the religious celebration of any marriage between a Roman Catholic and one who is not a member of that Church; however this may be, the Law has been enacted and promulgated, and is in actual operation. Sir Thomas Wyse does not suggest that its repeal should be required, or that, if required, it would be conceded, nor does he suggest what (if any) amendment would be desirable. I cannot, therefore, see to what object or purpose the interference of Her Majesty's Government can properly be directed.

United States be disposed to allow the passage of a cruizer at stated times, it would not be difficult to have the correspondence of the various Consulates in the Southern States sent to this city (as being the most central) and transmitted hence by me to your Lordship."

This seems to me to be so reasonable and convenient a mode of getting over the existing difficulty, that I can scarcely conceive the United States' Government refusing to allow it's adoption. It might be arranged, I should conceive, without difficulty, that one special messenger, carefully chosen, not a citizen of the United States, and recognized by the United States' authorities, should convey to and fro all the foreign Consular correspondence, at stated times, with proper passports, and previous notice.

The restrictions pointed out by Lord Lyons in his letter to Admiral Milne of August 31, should be strictly adhered to; and every precaution should be taken to insure the observance of the strictest good faith, and the avoiding of all suspicion of any clandestine or private communication being carried on under cover of the official communications, or by means of the messenger.

Should the Government of the United States refuse or hesitate to sanction such an arrangement, it will then be open to Her Majesty's Government, in common with other foreign Powers, to consider the propriety of insisting on the right of communicating with their respective Consuls by means of ships of war, or even of recognizing the Confederate Government as a de facto Sovereign Government, and communicating with it, or through it, so as to correspond with all Consulates in its territory, as may be necessary.

Considering, however, the peculiar local and political circumstances now existing, the Government of the United States should, in my opinion, be, in the first place, required to permit the plain and obvious method of periodical communication by a foreign special messenger, exclusively conveying foreign official correspondence, to be resorted to between the foreign Legations at Washington and their respective Consulates in the Confederate States; and that Government should be required forthwith to give a distinct affirmative or negative answer to this requisition. Should the answer be negative the best course to be adopted may be further considered.

Capture and condemnation of the British vessel "Criticado" by Spanish guarda costa on suspicion of smuggling.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 2, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th September ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the correspondence marked in the margin,* relating to the capture by a Spanish guarda costa, in July 1860, of a British vessel, the "Criticado," on suspicion that she was engaged in smuggling.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that I should perceive from Sir John Crampton's despatch No. 75 of the 8th September instant, that the capture has been condemned by the local Judge at Cadiz,† on the ground of its illegality, and that he has ordered the restitution of the "Criticado" and her cargo to the owners; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government should, under these circumstances, support any claim to indemnity that may be advanced on behalf of the owners of the "Criticado" against the Spanish Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I observe from Consul Brackenbury's despatch to Sir J. Crampton, of August 31, that it is still competent to the Superior Tribunal at Seville to confirm, alter, or annul the sentence pronounced by the Judge of Finance of Cadiz, which reversed the decision of the Administrative Board, and revoked the confiscation pronounced by that Board. This sentence cannot, it seems, be carried into effect without the sanction of the Superior Tribunal of Seville. Until, therefore, the legal proceedings have completely terminated, and the sentence is final and definitive, the international question of a demand of indemnity cannot be properly considered.

Assuming that the sentence already pronounced will be finally affirmed (which Consul Brackenbury anticipates), then, if Her Majesty's Government should be satisfied that the vessel was bonâ fide engaged in a lawful voyage, a demand for indemnity to her owners should be made and supported; but I own that my present impression is against the expediency of supporting any claim of indemnity on the part of her owners.

1st. According to the best opinion which I can at present form, the vessel was engaged in a contraband transaction. The master made at least one deliberately false statement as to the date of his departure; he admitted this to the Consul; the position of the vessel when captured (bearing in mind the previous state of the wind), and the very scanty particulars furnished in the owner's Memorial, July 24, 1860 (in which the day of sailing is not mentioned, and the bona fides of the voyage is not alleged), together with the nature of the cargo, and the alleged destination from Gibraltar to Bayonne, confirm my suspicions on this point, which is noticed in the sentence.

2nd. If the case is again to be submitted to me, I must desire a full explanation as to the real nature and design of the voyage, whether contraband or not, together with an explanation of the precise effect of the sentence as to both costs and damages; as whether they were demanded by, or on behalf of, the owners, in either Court, and on what grounds the demand was supported and opposed; whether it was competent to either Court to have awarded them; and so forth.

3rd. As regards the policy and probable result of any such demand, the notoriety and extent of the contraband trade with Spain, habitually carried on from Gibraltar, and the constant differences arising therefrom, must be borne in mind; and Her Majesty's Government would, I apprehend, be somewhat reluctant to insist on indemnity being paid to smugglers who had succeeded in obtaining restoration of their property by a sentence of the Captor's Court (a demand which would scarcely be favourably entertained by Spain).

The important case of the "Ferry Boat," and that of the "Julian," seem, from Sir A. Buchanan's No. 71, to be still pending between the two Governments; and it is possible that the course which Her Majesty's Government may feel disposed to take as to supporting any demand for indemnity in this case, which may be made by the owners (but which has not as yet been made), may in some degree depend on the course taken by the Spanish Government in the above two cases, more especially in that of the "Ferry Boat."

NEW GRANADA.

Decrees of General Mosquera annulling contracts of Central Government of New Granada, and disavowing agreement concluded by Señor Martin with Spanish-American bondholders.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 19th September ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 8th June,* on the various questions arising out of the revolution in New Granada, he was directed to transmit to me the correspondence marked in the margin† respecting General Mosquera's Decrees of the 31st of December and 15th of March last, by which all contracts of a certain class made with the then Central Government of New Granada are annulled, and the agreement recently concluded by Señor Martin with the Committee of Spanish American bondholders is disavowed.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that at the time when the first Decree was issued the Diplomatic Corps at Bogotá protested against it, but no further action was taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter, as it was doubtful what might be the issue of the civil war.

† Mr. Griffith, Nos. 11, 19, 28, 33, and 63; to Mr. Griffith, Nos. 31 and 36.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that since that time, however, General Mosquera, the head of the "United States of New Granada," has overthrown the late Federal Government, taken possession of Bogotá, and is in official relations with Mr. Griffith, who has recognized his Government as the de facto Government of the Republic; and to request that I would take the inclosed correspondence into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to what steps can be taken by Her Majesty's Government for the bondholders and other British subjects, whose interests are seriously compromised by the Decrees in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this correspondence into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I observe that the protest originally made (howsoever) to General Mosquera against his Decree of December 31, 1860, in the shape of a letter of January 31, 1861, from the French Vice-Consul in Honda to Señor Ceron, purported to be made on behalf of France, England, the United States, Peru, and Denmark, jointly; the joint action, therefore, of these Powers should be (if practicable) continued, and if any serious doubt should still exist as to General Mosquera's recognition of that protest, owing to the form and manner in which it was made at the time, Mr. Griffith should, in conjunction with the other Representatives of the protesting Powers, cause such protest to be formally repeated and renewed in the most official manner. As to the application of the Decree in question, I must repeat that some particular facts and circumstances must be either stated or assumed before I can offer more specific advice. It is of little use to discuss abstract principles of international law or justice with General Mosquera; joint action should be adopted as far as practicable, and the particular case or circumstances should be more dwelt upon than the words or spirit of the Decree taken as a whole.

With respect to the arrangement concluded with the British bondholders by Señor Martin, recognized by Decree of December 30, 1860, and disavowed by General Mosquera by Decree of March 15, 1861; this seems to me a matter for settlement between Her Majesty's Government alone and General Mosquera, although the protest above alluded to may be referred to, and invoked in reference thereto; and the formal and complete recognition of General Mosquera as President of the Republic by Her Majesty's Government may be to a certain extent made dependent on his not repudiating the arrangement. His objection, however, seems to be rather one of form than of substance, for I observe (from Mr. Griffith's No. 36) that General Mosquera "offers to make the same concessions as those contained in the arrangement, and will even grant more advantageous terms, if the bondholders will address themselves to his Government."

Inasmuch as the complete success of the General seems nearly approaching, and as Her Majesty's Government has recognized his Government as the de facto Government of the Republic, the adoption of this course seems to me desirable; for it is highly for the interest of the bondholders to avoid a rupture or misunderstanding with him, especially on the subject of his right or "title" to be President, which Her Majesty's Government has recognized de facto.

I observe that the arrangement with the bondholders is stated (in Article 17) not to need the approbation of the Congress, and that it was carried into effect by the simple Decree of the President Ospina; it was not, as far as I am aware, negotiated or concluded through the medium of Her Majesty's Legation or Government.

Adverting to these circumstances, to its peculiar nature, to the fact of its dealing with the national lands and Custom-houses, and consequently depending for its practical working and result upon the actual Government for the time to come, it does not appear to me to be unreasonable that General Mosquera should require it to be renewed directly with and ratified by himself; and Mr. Griffith states no objection to the adoption of this course.

Seizure of the "William Arthur" (alias the "Sarah Anne Roe") by authorities at Portland for alleged violation of the laws of the United States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 3, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th September ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence from Lord Lyons and Her Majesty's Consul at Portland,* relative to the seizure by the authorities of that port, for an alleged violation of the laws of the United States, of the British schooner "William Arthur;" and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there is no reason for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in this case.

The "William Arthur" was originally the United States' schooner the "Sarah Anne Roe." She was purchased, apparently, at Portland (I presume), in Maine or one of the Northern States, and under the United States' Government, on the 8th August last, by John Douglas Merrilees, a British subject, but resident at Wilmington, North Carolina, who thereupon changed her name, and procured a provisional certificate of registry from the British Consulate, and cleared her from Portland for St. Thomas, West Indies, "and a market," with a cargo of salt fish, grindstones, and matches. She was seized by the Custom-house authorities as she was leaving the port.

Under such peculiar circumstances, this seizure seems not to have been made without "probable cause." Her owner seems to be domiciled in the Confederate States. He purchased her flagrante bello, in a Northern State, and changed her name. The mere fact of his having procured a British provisional certificate of registry will not, under such circumstances, of itself protect the vessel from detention in order to an investigation, in legal form, on the part of the United States' Government, into the facts and the legal position of the case.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 3, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th September ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, No. 460, relative to the seizure at Newport of the British schooner "Adelso," for an alleged violation of the blockade of the port of Wilmington, North Carolina; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Lord Lyons appears to me to have taken a correct view of this case in his despatch to Consul Lousada, of August 29; and that adverting to the contents of the Consul's despatch to Lord Lyons of August 24, the case must, at present, be left to be legally dealt with by the Prize Court. It is not as yet apparent upon what precise ground condemnation will be asked; but if any effective blockade of Wilmington existed at the date of the "Adelso's" entering or leaving the port, and if she had notice thereof, she broke it on each occasion, and the facts of there not being any such blockade at either period, or of her having no notice thereof (assuming its existence to be proved), are for the consideration of the Court, upon the evidence which may be adduced.

I presume that the parties interested are represented before the Court; and, if so, the Consul should not officially interfere; if this is not the case the Consul's intervention should be limited to obtaining time to enable them to appear. Every facility should be afforded by the Consul to the British parties interested for establishing the facts as to the inefficiency of the blockade, stated in various despatches mentioned in Lord Lyons' No. 460, inasmuch as the "onus" of proving this inefficiency will probably be cast upon them. The absence of any such "warning" by a cruizer of the United States, as is mentioned in the President's Proclamation, will, doubtless, be duly insisted on as relating to the breach by "ingress," if that should be urged; and the questions both of the existence of the blockade, and of the vessel having due notice thereof, should be raised before the Court. The master and crew should be leniently treated, and only detained in safe custody as long as may be necessary to take their evidence.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 4, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th September last, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 16th August ultimo,* transmitting a draft of Articles fitted to be proposed to foreign Governments in order to carry out the objects of the statute 24 Vict., cap. 11, for the ascertainment of the law of foreign countries when pleaded in Courts in Her Majesty's dominions, he was directed by your Lordship to send us the draft of a circular intended to be addressed to Her Majesty's Ministers at the Courts of those countries with which British subjects have extensive commercial intercourse.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the draft of Articles, and stated that a few verbal alterations had been introduced into it, and that there were some remarks in the margin to which our attention was requested, and requesting that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That (subject to certain verbal alterations which we have introduced) we approve of the draft Articles and draft circular.

We have directed our attention to the questions in the margin of the draft mentioned in Mr. Hammond's letter.

Course to be taken by British authorities in regard to privateers carrying the flag of the Confederate States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 5, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th September ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 10th September ultimo, inclosing a copy of a letter from the Governor of the Windward Islands, reporting a conversation with the United States' Consul respecting the course which would be taken by the British authorities in regard to privateers carrying the flag of the Confederate States.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship presumed that the Governor should be informed, in reply, that Southern privateers visiting colonial ports could not be treated as pirates merely because they sailed under the Confederate flag, inasmuch as Her Majesty's Government acknowledged the belligerent rights of the Southern States.

2. That privateers were subject to the same laws as ships of war sailing under commission; but if they plundered vessels under the British flag, instead of taking them into a port, whether belonging to the Confederate States or to some other country, and bringing them before a Prize Court, they must be treated as pirates.

3. That as regards the illegal or fraudulent use of the British flag, vessels of the so-called Confederate States and of the United States must be treated in the same manner; and that if any question were laid before a Prize Court touching the assumption of the British flag, that Court would, it must be presumed, decide according to the Law of Nations.

4. That if plunder were resorted to by the captors, the capturing vessels, if privateers, must be treated as pirates; if regular vessels of war, the Government by which they were commissioned must be appealed to.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that your Lordship would be glad to be informed by us whether the foregoing statements might properly be communicated to the Governor of the Windward Islands for his information and guidance on the points adverted to in his letter, and whether they might also be communicated, through the Board of Admiralty, to the Admiral on the North American station, for his information and guidance.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Governor of the Windward Islands, and the Admiral on the North American station, may (if your Lordship thinks it requisite) be instructed—

1. That privateers, duly commissioned as such by the Government of the Confederate States, acting under the authority and using the flag of that Government, and capturing and taking into port, for adjudication as "prize of war," vessels either sailing under the flag of the United States, or even British or other neutral vessels, having goods on board belonging to citizens of the United States, or to persons (of whatever origin) domiciled in those States, or strongly suspected of having such, cannot be considered or treated as pirates, either in British waters or elsewhere, by British colonial authorities or naval officers; nor will their being so considered by the United States' Government or laws make any difference in this respect.

A pirate by the law of nations is a "common robber on the seas," acting without any commission from any established authority, but with a general design of indiscriminate plunder, without having recourse to any Court whatsoever; and a privateer capturing, for the purpose of taking in for adjudication by a competent Court, the ships or goods of those enemies of his belligerent Government exclusively, or those reasonably suspected of being such (against which he is commissioned and ordered to act), cannot be treated as a pirate by neutrals, agreeably to the principles of international law, even in the event of his committing certain irregularities in so doing.

In order to justify British Colonial or naval officers in treating as "pirates by the law of nations" vessels commissioned as privateers of the Confederate States, and claiming to act as such, such officers must have either positive proof, or the strongest ground of suspicion, founded on adequate evidence, that those on board of such vessels have not merely been guilty of irregular conduct (for which redress may be required from their Government, or its Prize Courts, such irregularities being too often incidental to the employment of privateers), but of conduct clearly amounting to "piracy" "by the law of nations," as above explained, as (for instance) deliberate plunder, appropriation, or destruction of property, which they well knew was not enemy's property, and which they did not attempt or intend to take before any Prize Court for adjudication.

With respect to the assumption or use of the British flag, it is to be borne in mind:—

1st. That the mere use of a neutral flag cannot, of itself, protect a vessel from capture, if she has enemy's property on board, or is suspected with probable cause of belonging wholly, or in part, to enemies.

2ndly. It must be presumed that a Prize Court will correctly administer the law of nations, and will do right and justice between all parties in such cases, awarding costs and damages where they may be due.

Right of a British subject who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States to receive protection, and consequently a Passport from Her Majesty's Government.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 7, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th September ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 448, August 26, 1861), on the question of the right of a British subject who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States to receive protection, and consequently a passport, from Her Majesty's Government, together with the previous correspondence referred to by Lord Lyons, and the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General, on which the instruction to Lord Lyons, No. 49 of the 1st of March, was founded; and also a correspondence which had lately passed between Messrs. Brown, Shipley and Co., of Liverpool, and your Lordship's Department on the subject.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which it would be advisable to send to Lord Lyons for his guidance.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we observe that Mr. Hunter officially informs Lord Lyons, in answer to his Lordship's inquiry, that "until the final act of naturalization, such a person is to all intents and purposes a subject or citizen of his native country;" and he also states that "foreigners who may purpose leaving the United States, whether they have declared their intention to become citizens or otherwise, must obtain passports from the proper authorities of their own country." (Inclosure 6 in Lord Lyons' No. 448.)

We also observe that Mr. Carlisle, the legal adviser of Her Majesty's Legation at Washington, states, in Inclosure 1 in the above despatch, that such persons remain aliens until the complete final act, owing none of the duties, and entitled to none of the peculiar protections, of allegiance.

Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that Lord Lyons should be instructed to grant passports to the persons in question, as a general rule. It is, of course, understood that the granting of a passport is a matter for the discretion of his Lordship, not one of strict legal right.

Cases of alleged violation of blockade, and the question of proper tribunal for trying such cases.
Cases of the "Sarah Starr" and "Prince Leopold."

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 8, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th September ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 21st September ultimo,* he was directed to transmit to me, together with the previous despatch on the same subject (No. 436), a further despatch (No. 450) and its inclosures from Lord Lyons, respecting the case of the British brig "Sarah Starr," from which it appears that the trial of that vessel for an alleged violation of a blockade of the port of Wilmington is about to be proceeded with, the District Attorney at New York having, on the ground of her suspected nationality, declined to act upon the order of the United States' Secretary of State for her release.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit the accompanying correspondence from Lord Lyons (Nos. 459 and 470), respecting the seizure at New York of the British schooner "Prince Leopold," for an alleged violation of the blockade of the port of New Berne, in North Carolina, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the proper tribunal for trying such cases as those of the "Sarah Starr" and "Prince Leopold," and whether the District Courts can be considered to have authority in questions of international law.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship would wish to be informed whether, in cases of manifest hardship, Her Majesty's Minister should be instructed to employ Counsel to watch over the interests of British owners.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with such information as I at present possess on the subject, I am of opinion that the District Courts of the United States are the proper tribunals for trying this class of cases; and that they are to be considered as having authority in such questions of international law as are incidental to, or connected with, their jurisdiction as Prize Courts. They are not Courts of the several States, nor do they derive their jurisdiction from the Government or Constitution of any separate State. They are Federal Courts, subordinate to the "Supreme Court of the United States," and deriving their jurisdiction from the Federal Government, through the President and Congress; they possess all the powers of Courts of Admiralty (whether considered as "Instance" or as "Prize" Courts), and they have exclusive original jurisdiction of all seizures upon the high seas or waters within their jurisdiction; and also of all other seizures and suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under laws of the United States (see "Kent's Commentaries," vol. i, pages 304, 354, 357). They have (as far as I am aware) always exercised prize jurisdiction, subject (I believe) to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Carlisle, the able Counsel to Her Majesty's Legation at Washington, can doubtless give your Lordship full information on this question. He has never (as far as I am aware) suggested any doubt on this subject.

Your Lordship's last question (although one of discretion and policy rather than of law) must, in my opinion, be answered generally in the negative; subject, however, to certain qualifications. For instance, if in any case the British interests involved are adequately "represented" before the tribunals (as, for instance, by consignees or agents, or other parties in precisely the same position, and having the same interest as Her Majesty's subjects), there is no reason why the British Legation should employ Counsel.

If, on the other hand, the British interests concerned are not represented, but time is required to communicate with them, such applications for "time" may, in pressing cases, be made by the authority, and at the cost of, Her Majesty's Consulate.

Again, if any very practically important question of principle or of international law is involved in a case in which British interests are inadequately represented, or if the non-appearance of Counsel may lead to a plain failure or defeat of justice, the same course may be taken. As a general rule, however, Her Majesty's Legation should, for obvious reasons, be very cautious in employing Counsel to watch over the interests of owners; this should not be done excepting in the absence of notice to the owners, and when they are unrepresented, and in danger of being deprived of their property without a hearing; when it is done, the Consulate only should act, and the Legation should not directly retain or instruct Counsel, or in any way mix itself up in the case, whilst it is pending before the Courts.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 9, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st September ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the further correspondence marked in the margin of his letter,* from which we should learn the circumstances under which Captain Carvell had been forced to take refuge at the French Legation at Lima, in order to avoid being thrown into prison.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to state that your Lordship requested that we would take this correspondence, together with the former papers which were returned therewith, into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion on the present state of the case, and whether any, and if so what, additional instructions to those contained in Lord Russell's despatch No. 31 to Mr. Jerningham, should be sent to Mr. Barton, the Acting British Chargé d'Affaires, in the matter.

We are further honoured by your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st October instant, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with reference to his letter of the 20th ultimo, three further despatches from the Acting British Chargé d'Affaires at Lima,† respecting Mr. Carvell's position at Lima.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those already before us on the subject, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to add that your Lordship would be glad to receive our opinion in time to send instructions to Mr Barton by the mail of the 16th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the only new fact of any importance stated in the additional papers now transmitted is, that Captain Carvell, on being threatened with imprisonment for disobedience to an order of the Peruvian Court (whose jurisdiction and authority he still refuses to acknowledge), took refuge in the French Consulate, by the invitation or with the consent of the French Consul and Chargé d'Affaires, where he would seem to be at present secure from molestation.

We cannot say that this fact necessitates any further instructions to Mr. Barton, or alters the view we have taken in our former Reports, especially in that of the 29th May.

We have already stated that Captain Carvell is not exempt from the jurisdiction of the Peruvian Courts in these proceedings; and we consequently could not have advised Mr. Barton originally to give him an asylum in the British Legation, so as to enable him to evade obedience to the Courts, and to risk a serious international dispute on a question in which, whatever may be the conduct of certain parties in Peru, Her Majesty's Government has not in our opinion a legal right to interfere.

We observe that he was, at the date of the last despatches, still at the French Legation, and there is nothing in these papers to alter or affect the view which we have hitherto taken of the legal portion of the case.

It is evident from all Captain Carvell's letters that his own position has never been correctly understood by him. He mistakes the nature of a British probate, and erroneously imagines himself to be exempted by it from Peruvian jurisdiction, as "the delegate of Her Majesty's Courts;" and, while he takes up ground so entirely untenable, it is not easy to disengage any real ground of complaint which he may have, on the score of official malversation by the Peruvian authorities, from the obvious difficulties in which he has placed himself by denying a legal jurisdiction. The opinions said to have been expressed by some of the Diplomatic Body in Peru are evidently founded upon a confusion between the question of jurisdiction and the question of the law by which the moveable succession of a British subject dying possessed of moveable property abroad ought to be regulated. The latter question ought to be determined according to the law of the deceased person's domicil; but it must be determined, as to all moveable property situate and brought into litigation in Peru, by the Peruvian Courts.

We consider that Mr. Barton was quite right in not acceding to Captain Carvell's proposal to re-deposit any of the property in litigation at the British Consulate.

Bearing in mind the observations on the conduct of the authorities and of Judge Ponce, contained in our Report of the 26th July,* Mr. Barton should continue carefully to watch the case.

Request of Mr. T. Parry that an action, in which he is plaintiff in the Consular Court at Constantinople, may be tried by a jury.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 10, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Thomas Parry dated the 4th of September last, requesting that a certain action in which he was plaintiff, and which was about to be brought into the Consular Court at Constantinople, might be tried by a jury.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take Mr. Parry's application into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as far as our information extends, your Lordship has no power, either under the Order in Council of August 1860, or otherwise, to comply with Mr. Parry's request: and we conceive that it would be proper to inform Mr. Parry that his action must be tried according to the ordinary course of law, as administered in the Consular Court of Constantinople, and that your Lordship cannot interfere therewith.

Claim of Messrs. Whitworth for losses sustained by their vessel the "Boyne" being warned off the whole Southern coast of the United States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 11, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter and its inclosures from Messrs. Whitworth, dated the 26th ultimo, stating the circumstances under which their vessel, the "Boyne," had been warned off the whole Southern coast of the United States, in consequence of which they have incurred large losses for loss of freight and for the non-sale of the cargo; and that Messrs. Whitworth request that their claim for compensation on this account may be brought to the notice of the United States' Government. And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the "Boyne," a British vessel, bound from Fleetwood to Savannah, was "warned off" that port on the 11th May last by the United States' frigate "Niagara," and informed that "the whole coast of the South" was blockaded. She thereupon proceeded to New York (at some date not stated), where she sold her cargo (coal), and shipped another cargo, with which she has, I presume, arrived in England. If this is the first complaint on the part of her owners, the lapse of time is somewhat remarkable, considering the rapid communications with the United States. I find no allusion to any previous statement, and the particulars of the case are very scantily given. I can only suggest that the papers should be sent to Her Majesty's Legation at Washington, and to the Consulate at New York, in order to ascertain—

1st. What report to the Consulate, or what protest, or other formal statement, was made by the master originally, on his arrival at New York, recenti facto?

2nd. What was the fact as to the existence of an effective blockade of Savannah on the 11th May, bearing in mind the warning from the "Niagara," alleged to have been given "seventy miles from the port?"

3rd. If there was no such blockade, what proof of that fact can Her Majesty's Government now bring forward?

Until these points are cleared up, Her Majesty's Government is not in a condition to decide upon the proper course to adopt.

Claim of Messrs. Laurie, Sons, and Co. for restitution of their property seized on board the American schooner "Crenshaw," by United States' blockading squadron.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Messrs. Laurie, Sons, and Co., dated the 16th ultimo, stating the nature of their interest in the cargo of the American schooner "Crenshaw," which has been seized by the United States' blockading squadron and sent to New York for adjudication, and requesting that steps may be taken for the release of their property on board that vessel.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the accompanying despatches from Lord Lyons (No. 321), and from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 76), which contain the latest information on this case; and with reference to my Report of the 18th June last on a similar claim made by Messrs. Gilliat, Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take Messrs. Laurie's letter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, having regard to the facts stated in Consul Archibald's despatch to Lord Lyons of the 20th June, I do not see what more can be done by the Consul in this case.

I observe, however, that the Consul states (under date of the 23rd July) that "Judge Betts is preparing his decisions in these cases," which are therefore, by this time, probably decided.

The fact alleged by Messrs. Laurie, that in the case of the "Haxall," under similar circumstances, a concession was made by the United States' Government, at the instance of the Bremen Minister, should be brought to the notice of Lord Lyons, for his guidance.

No reason to interfere in Mr. Morgell's case. Disposition of property left to him by a deceased relative.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th of October instant, stating that with reference to my letter of the 23rd of August last,* he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying further letter dated the 28th of September last, which has been received from Mr. Morgell, respecting the complaint made by him in regard to the disposition of some property left by a deceased relation in France, and to request that I would take this paper, together with the former papers, into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Morgell.

Case of the "Antagonist," run down at sea by the Belgian mail-packet "Rubis."

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence respecting the case of the British vessel "Antagonist," which was run down at sea by the Belgian mail-packet "Rubis," and to state that as I am acquainted with the early facts of this case, it was sufficient to refer me for its subsequent history to his letter to the Admiralty of the 11th September ultimo.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit to me a letter dated the 27th of September, which has been received in reply from that Board, inclosing a copy of the opinion of the Registrar of the Admiralty Court upon this case, and as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in the matter, and to request that I would inform your Lordship whether I concur in that opinion, and whether I think it would be advisable that Her Majesty's Government should bring the case before the Belgian Tribunal, or leave the owners to seek their own remedy.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the owners should primâ facie be left to seek their own remedy; if they should satisfy Her Majesty's Government that from their poverty or other special circumstances this course would, in effect, prevent their obtaining a fair legal "hearing" in Belgium, it will be open to Her Majesty's Government to reconsider its determination in this respect. It will be observed (from the conclusion of the Report of the Registrar of the Court of Admiralty of the 26th September) that on the 7th August the British sloop "Lily" was run down and sunk by the "Rubis." The owners of the "Lily" were, like those of the "Antagonist," prevented from arresting the "Rubis," owing to the latter being a Belgian ship of war.

As to amount of commuted punishment to be imposed on Giuseppe Camilleri, a Maltese. found guilty of murder by the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 17, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th September last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Hornby, Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 76, September 4, 1861), inclosing a copy of the minutes of proceedings and notes of evidence in the case of the trial of Giuseppe Camilleri, a Maltese, found guilty of the crime of murder, and requesting to be furnished with instructions, under the 37th section of the Order in Council of the 27th of August, 1860, as to the amount and nature of the punishment to be actually imposed by way of commuted punishment, and requesting that we would take Mr. Hornby's despatch into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions to be given to Mr. Hornby in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that, as a general rule, the nature and amount of punishment to be inflicted on persons convicted of crime, before the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, is entirely a matter for the Judge who presides at the trial; and to be determined by him on his own knowledge and discretion.

With reference to the present case, treated as exceptional, we have to observe, that it is not one which, in our opinion, ought to be visited with the extreme punishment sanctioned by the new Order, namely, twenty years' imprisonment with hard labour, the more especially as the jury added to their verdict a recommendation to mercy, which we think ought not to be disregarded. The probability is that the jury, though well (and reasonably) satisfied that the deceased was killed by the accused person, and that without any approach to legal excuse, or any such provocation as would reduce the crime to manslaughter, yet may have thought that the abusive language of an intoxicated man (as there is reason for supposing the deceased to have been) was not wholly unconnected with the fate he met. Moreover, it must, we should suppose, be desirable to conciliate the juries, through whose instrumentality the law must be administered in such cases; and for this purpose, their suggestions, when neither unjust nor unreasonable, may well receive attention on the part of the Judge. At the same time, we concur in the remark of Mr. Hornby, in his despatch to your Lordship,to the effect that the sentence should be sufficiently severe to prove to persons on the spot, and to whom the Order in Council applies, that such crimes as murder will be promptly and adequately punished. But, bearing this in mind, and also taking into consideration the facts of this particular case, we would respectfully suggest, for your Lordship's consideration and approval, that a sentence of seven years' imprisonment with hard labour would meet the justice of the case; and that instructions to that effect may properly be given to Mr. Hornby.

The terms of Mr. Hornby's "charge," in passing sentence in open Court, should be left, it appears to us, to that gentleman himself; and we do not understand that your Lordship desires from us any suggestion on the subject.

Question of compensation to British subjects for losses, or destruction of property, during the civil war.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 21, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 480, September 9), relative to the position of British subjects in the State of Missouri, and requested that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons on the several points adverted to in his despatch.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Lord Lyons appears to us to have taken a correct view of the points adverted to in his despatch.

The first point, viz., the sufferings to which the poorer British subjects are likely to be exposed in the winter, and the probability of their being compelled by want to enlist in the military forces of one or the other of the parties to the civil war, is one not requiring any legal opinion from us.

On the second point, viz., the extent to which Her Majesty's Government will claim for British residents compensation for losses or destruction of property occasioned by the civil war, Lord Lyons may be instructed that, as a general principle, when British subjects become voluntarily domiciled in a foreign country in which a civil war occurs, the de facto Government is not to be held responsible to that of Her Majesty for losses or destruction of property caused by those who are in arms against it, and whose actions it has not the power of controlling. Should the party by whose officers or troops, or under whose authority, such losses or destruction have been inflicted, ultimately succeed in acquiring or retaining sovereign power, and be recognized by Her Majesty's Government as the sovereign Government, it may be open to Her Majesty to insist upon compensation in respect of such losses and injuries; but it is scarcely possible to lay down beforehand, and without regard to the particular circumstances of the case, the principles by which the conduct of Her Majesty's Government would be, in effect, guided, as to the compelling payment of such compensation.

With regard to losses or destruction of property caused to British subjects, exclusively by the officers or troops, or by those acting by the authority or on behalf of the Government under whose authority such British subjects are living at the time, we can only say that, as a general principle, such Government is responsible for them; and that the fact of their having been committed during the existence of a civil war, although it may sometimes palliate or extenuate the conduct of those concerned, will not exonerate the Government from its general responsibility. Our observations on this head are, of course, confined to loss or destruction of property, not caused by accident, or by persons unknown; they do not extend to such losses, as, although consequent upon and indirectly caused by the existence of the civil war, are yet not the result of illegal violence on the part of the authorities, military or civil. Extra taxation, interruption of commerce, legal burdens and restraints, will not afford sufficient ground for a demand of compensation, provided that British subjects are treated with the same consideration as natives. The liability of the Government, arising from the illegal acts of its officers, must be clearly brought home to them, in order to fix the Government with responsibility quoad compensation in respect thereof.

We entirely concur with Lord Lyons in the inexpediency of attempting to take an inventory of British property under the circumstances.

Capture of the British schooner "Aigburth," belonging to Mr. C. Graveley, a British subject residing at Charleston.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 22, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me therewith the accompanying despatches from Lord Lyons (Nos. 501 and 522), and from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 94), stating the circumstances under which the British schooner "Aigburth" has been seized and sent to New York in charge of a prize crew from the United States' ship of war "Jamestown;" and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the precise grounds of the capture of this vessel are not forthcoming; but inasmuch as it is stated by Consul Archibald in No. 128 that "she belongs to a Mr. Colin Graveley, a British subject resident at Charleston," I cannot see that her capture was "vexatious and unjustifiable," as Lord Lyons considers it to have been, or that Her Majesty's Government can justly require her release without adjudication.

Charleston is an "enemy's port" to the Government of the United States; and if the "Aigburth" is owned (howsoever) by any person commercially domiciled there, the fact of her owner being a British subject by birth will not, of itself, prevent her condemnation as prize to a United States' cruizer. The principle that a belligerent has a right to treat as enemies all persons resident or maintaining commercial establishments in a hostile country, without regard to their origin, or nationality by birth, is familiar to English Prize Courts, and has been constantly enforced by them.

I cannot, therefore, advise any further interference in this case on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 23, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th October instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 9th October instant,* he was directed to transmit to us two despatches from the Acting British Chargé d'Affaires at Lima (Nos. 11 and 14), containing further information with respect to Mr. Carvell's case and his position at Lima, together with the draft of the instructions that were sent to Mr. Barton on this case; and to request that we would again take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any further observations we may have to offer thereupon.

The previous papers were annexed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have again taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have nothing to add to the opinion upon the legal character and position of this case, which we have already on more than one occasion expressed; and we can only refer and adhere to our former Reports, especially those of May 29 and October 9.

We must repeat that we do not consider that Captain Carvell is exempt from the jurisdiction of the Peruvian Courts, or that Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima is, in point of strict legality, justified in affording him an asylum in his official residence, for the purpose of enabling him to evade or avoid complying with the orders of the Peruvian Courts, legally made, in a cause pending before them, and over which they have jurisdiction.

At the same time it must be admitted that the circumstances of the case are peculiar; and inasmuch as your Lordship has, in consideration thereof, officially approved of Mr. Barton's conduct, we have only to suggest that he should be instructed to avoid a collision with the Peruvian judicature in relation to Captain Carvell, and to content himself with securing this gentleman from rigorous treatment, involving imminent danger to his health, as far as this may be practicable, and on this object being secured, he should no longer keep him in his house.

Compensation claimed by the "San José" and "Celia," for damage done by the British vessel "Caroline" at Santa Cruz de Teneriffe.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 23, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the inclosed correspondence* relative to a claim preferred by the Spanish Minister at this Court to be paid a sum of money for damage done by the British vessel "Caroline" to the "San José" and "Celia," in the harbour of Santa Cruz de Teneriffe.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that it seems that the Captain of the "Caroline" was condemned in the amount of such damage by the Court at Santa Cruz, but that he left the harbour without paying the money, or giving any security for its payment, and that I should find among the accompanying papers an explanation of the occurrence, in which both he and his employer repudiate any liability in the matter.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon, and as to the answer which should be returned to M. Isturiz.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That before any answer is returned to Señor Isturiz, a copy of his note, and of the inclosure, should be sent to the Consul at Santa Cruz with instructions to send a full explanation of all the circumstances, and copies of all the papers.

The only papers forwarded by Señor Isturiz are (apparently) some declarations taken by the Harbour-Master's authority, unaccompanied by any adjudication, or order for the payment of damages.

It does not appear that there were any proceedings in, or judgment by, a legal tribunal, or that any legal steps were taken to enforce payment of the alleged amount of damage against the vessel, or her master or owners, by arrest or process of any kind. Non constat why this was not done; nor is there anything forthcoming from the Consul, who is stated by Señor Isturiz to have requested that the "Caroline" might not be detained, and whose attention should be directed to these points, and especially to his application to the Naval Commandant in support of a claim for damages on the part of the master of the "Caroline" dated 10th May, 1861.

From the version of the collision given by Mr. Goodyear (the managing owner of the "Caroline"), in his letter to the Board of Trade of the 30th of September, and from the fact stated therein that she was first anchored, and that the "San José," or "Casimiro," anchored too near her, of which complaint was made, but not attended to, it would appear that she was not to blame, and, as at present advised, I can see no reason for complying with Señor Isturiz's request; but the Consul's reply is requisite to the full understanding of the case.

Allen of Belfast, dated the 21st October instant, requesting that with a view to secure his vessel, the "Palinurus," from seizure or detention by United States' cruizers, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington may be instructed to explain to the United States' Government the circumstances under which that vessel has sailed from Calcutta with orders to call off Charleston; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, with my opinion as to any instructions which it will be proper or expedient to address to Lord Lyons on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

Proceedings against British vessels for breach of blockade.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Philadelphia (No. 34), inclosing papers relative to the cases of the British vessels "Albion" and "Herald," which have been captured by the United States' blockading squadron, together with the Report of the District Judge on the American ship "General Parkhill;" and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as I may have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

Case of the "Albion."

First. As regards the "Albion:" this British vessel was apparently captured by a United States' squadron, twelve miles from Wilmington, North Carolina, to which port she was bound, on the 16th of August, for violation of blockade of that port; she has been proceeded against in a Prize Court, and the Consul gives no other particulars. Non constat whether her owners are represented before the Court; what was the nature or ownership of her cargo; whether the case will be contested, or on what grounds; or whether there is, in fact, any legal or substantial defence whatsoever. These omissions should be pointed out to the Consul, the substantial merits (if any) of the case being more important to Her Majesty's Government than the mere legal proceedings and dates.

Under these circumstances I can offer no observations, and I see no reason for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

Case of the "Herald."

Second. The "Herald," a British ship, also under trial in an Admiralty Court: her release was promised by the United States' Government, but she has nevertheless been proceeded against "on some doubts as to her nationality." No further particulars are forthcoming, and I can therefore offer no observations.

Case of the "General Parkhill."

Thirdly. The printed Judgment pronounced by Mr. Justice Cadwallader in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, condemning as prize the ship "General Parkhill," captured for breach of blockade, and claimed on behalf of persons resident at Charleston; this being the only prize case as yet tried in that Court. No British interests were involved in this case, and I will therefore only observe that the general principles laid down in that Judgment do not appear to me to be inconsistent with the law of nations.

Outrage on property of Mr. Lilley, a British subject, trading in the Cameroons river.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the inclosed letter from Commander Bedingfeld, of Her Majesty's ship "Prometheus," reporting, in the absence of Her Majesty's Consul, the particulars of an outrage committed on the property of Mr. Lilley, a British subject trading in the Cameroons River.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter from Mr. Hawker, of Liverpool, who states that he is acting as agent for Mr. Lilley, under a power of attorney, in an action to be brought against certain parties in Liverpool, who are suspected of being connected with the outrage in question, and requesting to be furnished with copies of the documents in the possession of Her Majesty's Government bearing upon this question.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether, in my opinion, it would be expedient to comply with Mr. Hawker's request.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that copies of Commander Bedingfeld's Report have been communicated to the Board of Trade and Admiralty.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it will not, in my opinion, be expedient to comply with Mr. Hawker's request.

The inexpediency of giving copies of official papers to private persons is obvious as a general principle; and I see no such special circumstances in this case as would justify my advising your Lordship in a contrary sense.

I may observe that Mr. Lilley appears to have been on the spot at the time of the inquiry which forms the subject of these papers, and to have attended it, and been perfectly aware of all that passed; he himself makes no application, and does not appear to have authorized, or to be cognizant of, Mr. Hawker's application for these papers; and no legal proceedings in connection with these papers are actually pending.

Consul at Charleston prevented by United States' authorities from communicating with his colleagues and Her Majesty's Legation at Washington.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Mr. Consul Bunch at Charleston (No. 109), calling your Lordship's attention to the circumstance that the authorities of the United States at Louisville had returned his despatches, and that all communication with his colleagues and Her Majesty's Legation in the Northern States has ceased; and to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I assume that Consul Bunch's despatch to Consul Archibald was transmitted either by post or by some ordinary and public mode of conveyance, but I am not aware of the precise state of the facts on this point.

Inconvenient and prejudicial to British interests as the interruption of all ordinary means of communication between Her Majesty's Consulates in the Confederate States with their colleagues, and especially with the British Legation at Washington, may be, I cannot say that Her Majesty's Consuls in the Confederate States are entitled formally to insist upon the transmission of their correspondence with their colleagues in the United States, either by the Post-office communications (which have, I believe, ceased by orders of the Government), or by any ordinary and public conveyance.

The carrying on of such correspondence can only be provided for by special arrangement with the United States' Government, such as its periodical transmission by a special messenger, as suggested by Mr. Bunch, and noticed in my Report of the 1st October instant.

Proposed redemption of duties paid by Belgium to Holland for vessels navigating the Scheldt.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the Treaties and Conventions of April 19, 1839, touching the separation of Holland and Belgium, concluded between Holland and Belgium, and between Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia, on the one part, and Holland and Belgium on the other, together with various Acts which, since the conclusion of those Treaties, have passed between Holland and Belgium, for carrying into effect the provisions of the 3rd section of Article IX of the Treaty of 1839, touching the duties to be paid by Belgium to Holland in regard to vessels navigating the Scheldt.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the Belgian Government have recently made a proposal to some of the Contracting Powers, as well as to other Powers not parties to the Treaties referred to, to relieve Belgium from the payment of the duties levied in the Scheldt on the ships of those Powers, and to enter into an arrangement whereby, for a certain sum to be paid once for all, the navigation of the Scheldt should be exempted from the burthen under which it now labours, of paying a duty to Holland for each vessel passing up and down the Scheldt between the sea and Antwerp.

That the Belgian Government appear to assume that the engagement into which it entered with Holland in 1839, was not merely an engagement peculiar to Belgium, but was one undertaken by Belgium on behalf of other Powers, and from which Belgium may at any time seek to be relieved, by throwing upon those Powers the portion of the burthen resulting from the vessels frequenting the Scheldt under their flag; and that, in virtue of this pretension, the Belgian Government propose that the Powers interested should enter into arrangements for redeeming the Scheldt dues.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion whether this pretension is borne out by the Treaties now referred to me.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the point to be ascertained is, whether the Belgian Government can refuse to bear the burthen of the Scheldt dues, and that the subsequent question of the redemption is, of course, a matter of policy.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th October instant, inclosing all the papers in the possession of the Foreign Office, relating to the proposal for the redemption of the Scheldt dues.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th October instant, inclosing a further despatch relative to the Scheldt dues.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am not in possession of any information as to the origin of the duty or toll in question, or as to the right or "title" thereto (if any) on the part of the Netherlands, previously to the separation of Belgium and the Treaty of 1839, or the object and intention of the parties to that Treaty of 1839, as to the future position of these tolls; and this information is important to the proper consideration of the question which has now arisen, and may, when forthcoming hereafter, modify my present opinion.

I assume that certain Scheldt duties were received by the Netherlands from all foreign vessels previously to 1839. If this was not so, I must request further information. If this was so, the intention of the parties to the Treaty was to preserve to the Netherlands (notwithstanding the separation of Belgium, including both banks of the Scheldt at Antwerp) the duty in question; and I am unable to find in the Treaty itself, or in the "Réglement Provisoire," for the execution of Article IX (approved by Royal Decree, December 12, 1839), any such stipulation as, either by express words or necessary implication, would wholly exonerate the ships of all Powers from the payment thereof to the Netherlands, or as would render such payment to the Netherlands thenceforth an exclusively Belgian obligation.

The right of the Netherlands to receive the duties was secured by the Treaty; and I see nothing in the Treaty which imposed the obligation of defraying them thenceforth on Belgium exclusively, or which exonerated all other nations from their obligations to the Netherlands in this matter.

The Treaty was signed on the 19th of April, 1839: I am not aware of the date of its ratification. On the 5th of June, 1839, a law was passed in Belgium, to the effect that the toll ("péage") to be received by the Government of the Netherlands on the navigation of the Scheldt should be reimbursed by Belgium to the ships of all nations. Primâ facie, and in the absence of anything to the contrary, this reimbursement would therefore appear to have been a spontaneous and voluntary act on the part of Belgium. The word "reimbursement" is not unimportant. as inferring that the tolls were levied by the Netherlands on each foreign ship in the first instance. The law makes no reference to the Treaty; and the Treaty did not expressly bind Belgium to pass any such law. Whether there was (in effect) any understanding or agreement on the part of Belgium, at the date of the Treaty, that such a law should be passed, I am not aware.

Under this law Belgium has, I presume, hitherto (in effect) "reimbursed," or possibly defrayed in the first instance, to the Netherlands, the amount of the Scheldt duty or toll, as regulated by the Treaty, in respect of all vessels, of whatever origin, bound to and from Belgian ports. It does not distinctly appear whether she has paid the duty exclusively and in the first instance, or whether she has only "reimbursed" to each foreign vessel what each has previously paid.

It would thus appear that the obligation now resting on Belgium to pay this duty does not expressly arise under the Treaty, but only under the Belgian Law of June 5, 1839, which law Belgium is about to repeal. Apart from any documents not now before me, and from any considerations of national good faith or equity as to the repeal of a law which has been in operation for twenty years, and on the faith of the permanence of which various international arrangements may have been made, I am unable to discover in the terms of the Treaty, or in the contents of these papers, anything sufficient to prevent Belgium from repealing this law, and thus in effect leaving each foreign nation separately liable to pay the Scheldt duty to the Netherlands.

The Government of the Netherlands does not hold Belgium exclusively liable to the duty under the Treaty of 1839, but considers itself entitled, in default of payment by Belgium, to levy it upon all foreign vessels (see Sir A. Buchanan's No. 62, reporting Baron de Zuylen's statement to this effect).

The near coincidence between the date of the Law and the Treaty of 1839, and the fact that Belgium has for upwards of twenty years paid the duty, in exoneration of all foreign ships, point to the necessity of further inquiry as to what passed on the subject at that date (see especially a reference by Baron de Zuylen de Nyevelt to a Protocol, contained in Sir A. Buchanan's No. 62, August 8, 1861).

If, indeed, according to the view suggested by Count Manderström, in his despatch to Baron Beck-Friis, October 9, 1861, these duties had not any existence before the Treaty of 1839, and were first imposed by and under that Treaty as a charge on Belgium, this may affect my opinion. This view does not, however, seem to be adopted by the Netherlands.

Subject, therefore, to anything which may hereafter be adduced, and as at present advised, I am of opinion that your Lordship's question must be answered affirmatively; and that Belgium, by repealing the Law of 1839, can (in effect) "refuse to bear the burden of the Scheldt dues."

As to Acting Vice-Consul Du Puy, at Samarang, being permitted to act as attorney for Mr. J. H. Summers, who claims property left at that place by Mr. H.V. Summers.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 29, 1861.

I AM honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul in Batavia (No. 10, August 31, 1861), inclosing a copy of one from Mr. Peter du Puy, Acting British Vice-Consul at Samarang, who suggests, with reference to a claim made by Mr. H. V. Summers to certain property left by Mr. James Hervey Summers, and now deposited in the Orphan Chamber of Samarang, that the necessary documents should be sent out to him in support of this claim, and that he should at the same time be furnished with a power of attorney to enable him to proceed in the matter in due form.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the previous papers relating to Mr. Summers' claim, and to request that I would take Mr. Acting Vice-Consul du Puy's despatch into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether there is any objection to communicating to Mr. Summers the suggestions contained in it with reference to the temporary character of the appointment held by Mr. du Puy as Acting British Vice-Consul at Samarang.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, assuming that there is no permanent Consular officer on the spot able to transact this business, and that Her Majesty's Government has no reason to doubt the solvency or the respectability of Mr. du Puy, the Acting Vice-Consul at Samarang, I see no objection to the course suggested.

Having regard to Mr. Summers' statement as to his poverty, it will be desirable for Mr. du Puy to obtain and transmit to Mr. Summers the principal sum which seems to be admitted to be due, without waiting to discuss and settle the question of the amount of interest due thereon, which may be subsequently ascertained.

Request of Nicolo Antippo, that Wallachian Government be required to carry out a Decree of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople respecting the succession of his late uncle.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 30, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th October instant, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, with a translation, from Nicolo Antippo, requesting that the Wallachian Government might be required to carry out a Decree of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople respecting the succession of his late uncle, together with a Report from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Bucharest on this matter.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the previous correspondence referred to in Mr. Green's Report, and to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these papers, as they stand, do not enable us to dispose satisfactorily of the case.

Nationality of Madame Foca.

1. We do not find with them any copy of the Decree of the Supreme Consular Court which the petitioner seeks to enforce; and it is necessary for us to be more accurately informed than we are at present as to the means of executing that Decree, which Mr. Green might have had at Bucharest, if Madame Foca (or Phocas) had not become naturalized in Wallachia, or if his jurisdiction over her had not been afterwards contested. If we rightly understand Mr. Green's Report of the 28th September last, no better result could have been obtained if he had been left free to act in the matter; and, if this be so, it is not easy to perceive what claim can be made against the Wallachian Government.

2. We do not find any sufficient explanation of the grounds on which Madame Foca changed her nationality, and obtained Wallachian naturalization, pendente lite, and in spite of the protest of Mr. Green; nor of the effect, if any, which that change had upon the legal proceedings between her and Nicolo Antippo. We observe that Signor Antippo, in his Memorial of the 10th August last, says that the opposition of Mr. Green to Madame Foca's naturalization was met, at the Wallachian Ministry, by a declaration on her part "that, as far as concerned this suit, she did not intend to appeal to the laws of the country, but would leave the matter to be settled by the English authorities where it began, having other reasons of her own for becoming a naturalized Wallachian;" and the Decree of the Consular Court at Constantinople seems to have been afterwards acknowledged, and treated as binding upon her, by the Wallachian authorities. We are not aware of any reason why an Ionian subject should not be naturalized in Wallachia, unless such naturalization be made a pretext for any violation of the rights secured by Treaty to British subjects; and it is important to ascertain whether it was, in fact, made a pretext for any such violation in the present case.

The case of the petitioner seems very hard. He has obtained a Decree which he is practically unable to enforce. We can only suggest that the papers should be referred to Mr. Hornby, who should be requested to forward a copy of his Decree, and to suggest the best mode of enforcing it, assuming Madame Foca to be subject to British Consular jurisdiction.

Mr. Green should be requested to forward a full explanation of the grounds on which Madame Foca changed her nationality and acquired Wallachian protection, and of the effect of that change, if any, upon the pending litigation.

The case may prove to be of importance in point of principle, and it is certainly one of extreme individual hardship; and every proper effort should be made to obtain execution of the Decree, and to give the petitioner the full benefit thereof.

Claim of Mr. Price for a sum of money deposited by him on receiving the concession of a railway between Samsoon and Sivas, and forfeited for non-fulfilment of contract.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 30, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of an "instruction" which your Lordship addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, on the receipt of our Report of the 28th of November last, respecting Mr. Price's claim on the Turkish Government, in regard to a sum of money which he had deposited with the Porte, on receiving the concession of a line of railway from Samsoon to Sivas; and also transmitting to us, together with the previous papers, Sir Henry Bulwer's reply, and a letter which had since been received from Mr. Napier, applying, on Mr. Price's behalf, for the further assistance of Her Majesty's Government; and requesting that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the further steps which it might be proper for Her Majesty's Government to take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps in this matter.

Mr. Price entered into a foreign contract with a foreign Government, which contract he failed to fulfil, whereby, according to its terms, his deposit was forfeited. The Turkish Government may have acted harshly towards him, but has not acted illegally, or in violation either of the terms of the contract or of the principles of reason or justice; and inasmuch as it is in possession of some opinion of the present Lord Chancellor that the forfeiture was not illegal, we see no prospect of success in any further diplomatic representations. The case was one which justified Her Majesty's Government in making representations in the first instance, with a view, if possible, to induce the Turkish Government to deal with it in a more liberal spirit; but we do not understand either the former advice of the Law Officers of the Crown, or the course taken by Her Majesty's Government in accordance with that advice, to have been founded upon any view of the construction and legal effect of Mr. Price's contract with the Turkish Government, different from that which is insisted on by the Turkish Government themselves.

Consular procedure in Danubian Principalities.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands as signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th October instant, stating that with reference to our letter of the 25th September ultimo,* respecting Consular procedure in the Danubian Principalities, he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposes to address to Sir Henry Bulwer on this subject, and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Inclosure in No. 273.

Proposed Despatch to Sir H. Bulwer.

[The additions suggested by the Law Officers are printed in brackets.]

Sir, Foreign Office, November , 1861.

I HAVE had under consideration, in communication with the Law Officers of the Crown, Mr. Green's suggestion with reference to British Consular jurisdiction in the Principalities, with Mr. Hornby's observations thereupon, inclosed in your Excellency's despatch No. 438 of the 22nd of June last.

The first observation to be made on this matter is, that the proposal amounts substantially to a new Capitulation, the effect of which would, equally with that of the existing Capitulation, restrict, to a certain extent, the jurisdiction of the territorial Tribunals over British subjects. [The basis of the Capitulations, and of the peculiar Consular jurisdiction connected therewith, is the exemption of Her Majesty's subjects from the jurisdiction of the Turkish Courts, more especially in civil causes inter se; the authorities in the Principalities, on the other hand, contend for the application of the contrary principle, as carried out amongst Christian nations. It will be obvious that were Her Majesty's Government to concede this principle, it would amount to making a new and separate Treaty arrangement with the Principalities, to which the consent of the Turkish Government would be necessary; and] if any such restriction as now enforced is objected to by the local authorities, there would be no greater assurance that they would acquiesce in the modified restriction which, under Mr. Green's plan, would continue to exist.

I think it, therefore, more advisable to adhere to the concessions of privileges of jurisdiction as conferred by existing Capitulations, and to endeavour to adapt our procedure so as to meet the difficulties raised by the local authorities, without attempting to obtain a new basis for a modified procedure.

It would be very desirable to ascertain what course other Powers, whose privileges of jurisdiction in the Principalities are, under their Capitulations with the Porte, identical with our own, are prepared to follow; for it is obvious that the attempt of the Government of the Principalities to set aside those privileges may be more effectually resisted, if necessary, by combined than by isolated action.

But assuming that it may be found expedient to comply with the demands of the Principalities, at all events to a certain extent, the question will arise, so far at least as Her Majesty's Consuls are concerned, whether any, and in that case what, modifications should be made in the Order in Council of the 27th of August, 1860, and in the Rules of Procedure issued under that Order, leaving the existing Capitulations untouched.

For this purpose it would be necessary to consider the [precise] nature [and extent] of the alterations which the authorities in the Principalities desire [in the Consular jurisdiction and practice, as now regulated by Order in Council], and then to determine whether our system can be so far modified as to admit of their wishes being met without prejudice to the principles on which our jurisdiction now rests. [The Governments of the Principalities should specify their objections to the present system, with reasons, and should set forth distinctly what they propose to substitute for it in each case.]

I should wish, therefore, that Mr. Hornby, in whose hands your Excellency will place a copy of this despatch, should communicate confidentially with Mr. Green and with Mr. Churchill; and, having obtained their opinions, report to me, through your Excellency, his own as to the manner in which the difficulties which the authorities in the Principalities now raise to the British Consular jurisdiction, and I presume to that also of other foreign Powers, may best be obviated [without assuming any new basis, or, in effect, setting aside the Capitulations]; but I need not tell your Excellency that it would not be desirable to discuss any points with the authorities of the Principalities, or to lead them to suppose that Her Majesty's Government entertain any doubt whatever as to the validity of the rights secured by the existing Capitulations to Her Majesty, or as to the obligation of the Principalities to abide, in this as in all other respects, by the Treaties between Her Majesty and the Porte.

Your Excellency will, on your part, report to me what you can ascertain as to the views and intentions of foreign Powers on this matter.

BELGIUM.

M. Rogier's Memorandum on the Scheldt toll.

I AM honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th of October instant, transmitting a further despatch from Lord Howard de Walden, inclosing a Memorandum on the subject of the Scheldt tolls.

These further papers I have taken into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That M. Rogier's Memorandum makes, for the first time, a distinct proposal on the part of Belgium that Great Britain should pay to the Netherlands 27,031,797 francs (upwards of 1,000,000*l.* sterling) to redeem the Scheldt toll, in respect of which toll the ships of this country have never yet paid one shilling, Belgium having, from 1839 (the date of her independent national existence), defrayed the whole. The Memorandum is, under these circumstances, both in form and substance, a document of a very singular character.

M. Rogier gives no notice or intimation, either of the intention of Belgium to cease from paying the toll, or of her reasons for taking this course. Moreover, if Belgium should adopt this course, Great Britain, in common with other Powers, would be primâ facie liable to pay the Scheldt duties to the Netherlands (a liability which the Memorandum takes for granted); in which event it would be from the Netherlands direct, and not from or through Belgium, that any proposal for their redemption would naturally and properly proceed.

The note assumes the non-liability of Belgium, either under the Treaty of 1839, the Law of that date, or on any ground whatsoever, and also assumes the immediate and direct liability of Her Majesty's Government to the Netherlands; on behalf (as it were) of which Power, and not of his own Government, this proposal seems to be made by M. Rogier.

He remarks that "one of the effects of the French conquest of Belgium was to restore to Belgium its natural outlet to the sea." This is, in effect, an admission that the freedom of the Scheldt toll was in fact only consequent upon the conquest and incorporation of Belgium with France; and it may be inferred that when Belgium subsequently, in 1815, ceased to form part of France and became a portion of the Netherlands, she again became, as such, legally and justly liable to these duties. M. Rogier, however, observes that, "in 1839, after that the principle of the free navigation of rivers had received a solemn consecration at the Congress of Vienna, the Scheldt was placed in a state of demi-servitude." I do not see how this statement is consistent with the real facts and dates; nor did the Congress of Vienna abolish all tolls on rivers, but, on the contrary, it preserved and regulated them.

Neither the "honour nor the interest" of Great Britain appears to me to be in any degree involved in this question (as is suggested by M. Rogier) nor do the "liberal principles, of which the cause is, so to speak, become her own" (i. e., England's), alluded to by him, appear to me to have any bearing on the matter, which, in effect, seems to be rather a question of rival charges and interests between Antwerp and the Netherland ports, than one relating to the honour, the interests, or the liberal principles of Great Britain.

If Belgium is now about to revoke the Law of 1839, and by that means, for the first time, to raise the whole question of her right to do so, and of the right of the Netherlands to receive this duty, and the consequent liability of other foreign Powers in respect thereof (including those who were not parties to the Treaty of 1839), she should do so in regular form and with due notice, and should explain her motives, and her view of her position in respect to this matter. She cannot be permitted to ignore or evade noticing the fact that, ever since 1839, she has taken upon herself the payment of this duty, which she is now, for the first time, and without notice, or any reason assigned, apparently about to discontinue, and, as it were, "in the same breath," to propose, on behalf of the Netherlands, its commutation or redemption by fixed payment.

I can only suggest that M. Rogier's Memorandum should be answered to this effect, subject to my Report of the 29th October instant on this question.

Remonstrances of United States' Consuls in Barbados and the Bahamas against treatment of vessels bearing the flag of the Secession States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 29, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us three letters from the Colonial Office, dated August 19, October 3, and October 4, 1861, inclosing copies of despatches from the Governor of Barbados and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Bahamas respecting the remonstrances which have been addressed to them by the United States' Consuls in regard to the treatment which vessels bearing the flag of the Secession States met with in those Colonies; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to the Governors of those Colonies.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Governor of Barbados and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Bahamas appear to us to have taken a correct view of their position and duty in this matter; and that they may be instructed that no foreign Consul has any jurisdiction or power to seize any vessel (under whatever flag) within British territorial waters; and that the British authorities ought not to take any steps adverse to merchant-vessels of the Confederate States, or to interfere with their free resort to British ports.

With respect to supplies, even of articles clearly "contraband of war" (such as arms and ammunition), to the vessels of either Party, we think that the Colonial authorities cannot interfere, unless anything should be done in violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act (59 Geo. III, cap. 69), which prohibits the equipping, furnishing, fitting out, and arming of ships or vessels for the service of foreign belligerent Powers, and also the supply of guns or equipments for war, so as to increase the warlike force of vessels of war; but does not render illegal the mere supply of arms or ammunition, &c., to private ships or vessels.

If it should be necessary for the Colonial authorities to act in any such case, it should only be done when the law is regularly put in force, and under the advice of the Law Officers of the Crown.

With respect to the supplying, in British jurisdiction, of articles ancipitis usûs (such, for instance, as coal), there is no ground for any interference whatever on their part.

Proposed settlement of Mr. Youle's claim under award of Mixed Commission.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 29, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that as there seemed to be a discrepancy between the course which, in our Report of the 26th ultimo,* we had advised Her Majesty's Government to pursue with regard to the claim of Mr. Youle, who had obtained a favourable award from the Mixed Commission in Brazil, and that pursued last year in the parallel case of Mr. Cox's claim, he was directed by your Lordship to return our Report, and to transmit to us the correspondence marked A, B, C, D, E, F, in the accompanying volumes.

That from the papers marked A, B, C, we should learn the terms of an arrangement which was made in December 1859, between Mr. Stuart, then Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Brazil, and the Brazilian Government, as to the mode in which such adjudicated claims should be paid; and that the letter to Mr. Cox (marked F), based on the arrangement in question, would show us the discrepancy to which he referred, and he requested that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion how far Mr. Stuart's arrangement could be considered as limiting the absolute provisions of Article IV of the Convention, with regard to the payment of such claims, and whether the further papers would induce us to alter or modify the advice contained in our Report of the 26th ultimo.

That with reference to our remark that the sentence of the Mixed Commission on Mr. Youle's claim was not signed as directed by the Convention, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for any observations we might have to make thereupon, a translation (marked D) of that sentence, as originally sent home by Mr. Morgan, the British Commissioner, which appears to have been properly signed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That in our Report of September 26, we expressed our opinion that Mr. Youle's claim should be paid under Article IV of the Convention.

We were not at that time aware of the arrangement now brought under our notice, and made between the two Governments by the note of Mr. Stuart, December 2, 1859, answered by the Brazilian Foreign Minister, December 4th.

This arrangement naturally contemplated the carrying out of the Convention, and did not contemplate its premature termination, which has, nevertheless, taken place.

It was proposed by Her Majesty's Government, and accepted by Brazil, as a mode of carrying into effect Article IV.

We consider that this arrangement should be carried out in good faith by each Government, as far as may now be practicable, under the state of things now existing.

It does not appear to us to be absolutely inconsistent and irreconcileable with Article IV; and, in our opinion, it cannot now be equitably repudiated or "ignored," especially by Her Majesty's Government, upon any such ground. We assume that the carrying out this arrangement will not prejudicially affect Mr. Youle individually.

With respect, however, to the payment of interest on the amount awarded to Mr. Youle, we may observe, that our former Report proceeded on the supposition (naturally made by us while in ignorance of the arrangement of the 2nd December, 1859), that the Brazilian Government were in default for non-payment by the time stipulated in Article IV of the Convention. If (as now appears) there was no such default, we see no ground on which Mr. Youle can claim interest.

We observe that the want of signatures to the sentence or decision appears to have been a clerical omission in the copy transmitted to us.

UNITED STATES.

Right of British vessels to depart unmolested from ports of North and South Carolina, nominally blockaded.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Mr. Bunch, Her Majesty's Consul at Charleston (No. 108), reporting the inefficiency of the blockade of North and South Carolina, and requesting, with reference to the case of vessels which may have entered a nominally blockaded, but really unblockaded port, to be instructed as to the advice which he should give to the parties interested, with regard to the right of such vessels to depart unmolested, and especially as to their right to leave with cargo; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take Mr. Bunch's despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to me to be the duty of, or to be incumbent on, Her Majesty's Consuls to advise Her Majesty's subjects upon such delicate questions of international law, as "how far neutrals are justified in disregarding or violating blockades which have been formally notified, and, at least to some extent, established by a Power which Her Majesty recognizes as a belligerent;" at all events Her Majesty's Government cannot lay down à priori, and without reference to facts and dates, any rules for such cases, and must leave those of her subjects who incline to meddle with such matters to act for themselves, and on their own responsibility.

Unless British vessels or goods are actually captured, no international question arises; if they escape capture (whether the blockade exists or not), they cannot complain, and even when captured, applications for their release are sometimes successful, and the decisions of Prize Courts may be in their favour, and, at all events, cannot be anticipated. Her Majesty's Government cannot, in necessary ignorance of a continually changing state of facts, undertake to say (as it were by the mouth of its Consuls), "Now you may leave this port, or enter that port with impunity, notwithstanding its blockade is notified." It is obviously impossible to deal with such speculations as those of Consul Bunch (paragraph 2) as to Her Majesty's naval forces interfering to break an effective and existing blockade, merely because British vessels are in the port blockaded.

With regard to the right of a vessel which has entered a nominally blockaded, but really unblockaded port, to depart with cargo, the legal answer will be, that, unless the port is effectively blockaded, she has a right so to depart; she ought not to be captured for breaking a mere paper blockade. Neutral ships are also entitled, even in case of blockade, to sail from a blockaded port in ballast, if they entered it before the blockade.

These are the abstract principles of the law of nations, of the violation of which by the United States I have as yet no official information; but it is for your Lordship to consider how far it may be expedient to instruct Consul Bunch so to inform British subjects in North and South Carolina—a course which I do not advise.

Doubtless the uncertain and imperfect maintenance of the very extensive blockade of "all Southern ports," announced by the United States, may be very injurious to British interests, and may form a proper subject for international remonstrance; and it would be very desirable to establish by evidence in any prize case the inefficiency of any nominal blockade: but, practically, British interests profit, to some extent, by the imperfect manner in which the blockade is maintained, and I do not see how they would be advanced by calling the attention of the United States' Government to the inefficiency of any particular blockade. The propriety of addressing any communication on the point to the United States' Government, or of issuing general instructions to be given to Her Majesty's subjects through the Consuls of the blockaded ports, are questions of policy for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government; but I cannot advise the issuing of any such instructions, which will, if issued, probably be misconstrued or misapplied, so as to involve Her Majesty's Government unnecessarily.

I may add that the mere fact that several vessels have succeeded in evading a blockade will not, of itself, establish its invalidity; and that a port may often be effectually blockaded, although the blockading force is altogether out of sight, or is even supposed by those at the port to be absent.

Subject to these observations, I can only suggest that Consul Bunch must be informed that British subjects in attempting to break or evade any blockade which has been notified or established by a belligerent must act for themselves, and that Her Majesty's Government will not issue any instructions or directions in such cases.

Claim of British subjects to be exempt from military service. Position of British subjects in Missouri.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch (No. 536) and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, respecting the position of British subjects in Missouri, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those sent to us on the 5th instant (No. 480), and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we can only refer to our Report of September 30,[*] on the subject of the liability of British subjects to military service in the United States.

We observe, however, that Consul Wilkins (par. 9) thus expresses himself: "Should Mr. Young claim and prove his right to exemption from military service as a British subject?" implying that such an exemption exists, and may be established by law. This should be explained. Those British subjects who, although not naturalized, have exercised the political privileges of citizens of the United States, and own landed property, cannot reasonably complain if they are, under the operation of a general law, treated as liable to contribute to providing substitutes for military service in reasonable proportion to the amount and nature of their property; but until the actual legal position and rights of British subjects in respect of military service, especially as to the obligation to personal service, are defined and stated, it is impossible for us to advise Her Majesty's Government how to act upon this subject.

Claim of Mr. Rahming for compensation on account of his arrest and imprisonment in Fort Lafayatte.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 31, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,[†] and also a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York,[‡] respecting the imprisonment in Fort Lafayette, and subsequent release, of Mr. John Christopher Rahming, a British subject.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe, from Lord Lyons' despatch No. 530 of the 3rd instant, and its inclosures, that Mr. Rahming considered that he had a good claim to be compensated by the United States' Government on account of his arrest and imprisonment.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Rahming appear to us to have been illegal and unjustifiable; and unless a satisfactory explanation should be offered by the United States' Government he will, in our opinion, be fairly entitled to compensation. We would suggest that a full statement of the facts and dates, and a request for a full explanation, should be forthwith addressed to the United States' Government.

Condemnation of the "Hiawatha" and the "Tropic Wind" for breach of blockade.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 31, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th October instant, stating that, with reference to my Reports of the 18th June,[§] 5th and 6th of July,[‖] and 5th September,[¶] upon the case of the "Hiawatha," he was directed to transmit to me the following papers, namely, despatches from Lord Lyons (No. 521) and Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 92), reporting the condemnation of that vessel; a copy of a note from Lord Lyons to Mr. Seward, applying for her release; the sentence of condemnation pronounced by Judge Betts in the New York District Prize Court; and the Judgment of Judge Dunlop in the case of the "Tropic Wind."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Judgment of Judge Betts contains three principal points:—

1. That the blockade was legally and constitutionally valid.

2. That the "Hiawatha" knew of that blockade, and broke it by egress, with cargo laden after the blockade was established, and had come to the knowledge of the parties interested, especially the master.

3. That it was not established to his satisfaction that the United States' Government had permitted or licensed those concerned to act as they did in the case.

As regards the first point (which relates to the constitutional and legal power of the President to establish and enforce the blockade in question by his own authority, and without the action of the Congress), I can only say that this is a question arising under, and to be determined by reference to, the Constitution and law of the United States exclusively; it is peculiarly proper for the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which, I presume, the ultimate appeal in this case lies. I cannot say that the Judgment appears to me to be conclusive on this point; but I do not consider the point to be one on which, under actual circumstances, the Government of Her Majesty, or other foreign Governments, can properly rely in support of the claims of their subjects in respect of vessels captured for breach of any effective blockade.

Foreign Governments are not, as far as I am aware, in a position to adduce any express provision of the Constitution of the United States, or any other clear and decisive authority, explicitly denying this power to the President; they have, at all events by silent acquiescence, and in some cases by express and official communications, in effect, recognized the validity by international law of the blockades in question, where effective; and they have in so many modern instances, especially in cases occurring in South America, recognized the validity of blockades imposed by personages whose strict legal and constitutional authority to impose them was more questionable than that of President Lincoln, that I cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to open this question, and consequently I do not see any reason for offering any further remarks upon this portion of the Judgment.

With reference to the second point, and to the particular circumstances connected with the case of the "Hiawatha" (which are dealt with by Judge Betts at page 47 and following pages of this copy), it is impossible for me to form any decided opinion, in the absence of the evidence and of the arguments adduced to him.

There seems no question that, in point of fact, the cargo was laden after the blockade was established, and that the blockade was, in fact, broken by egress, under the impression that this was permitted to be done by the United States' Government.

With respect to the knowledge of the blockade by the parties concerned, and to its "notoriety," there are some pertinent remarks at pages 52 and 53: they seem to have denied such knowledge; but as far as I can understand the facts, it must have reached them in fact, and certainly did so "in contemplation of law."

The parties concerned seem to me to have been misled as to their right to load cargo after and notwithstanding the blockade; but I am under the impression that they had in fact a knowledge of the existence of the blockade before the ship sailed; or that, at least, they were, in point of law "affected with notice" thereof. However this may have been, I can see nothing to object to in this portion of the Judgment.

With respect to that portion of the Judgment in which the Judge decided, in effect, that the ship did not sail within fifteen days from the commencement of the blockade, I observe that he refers (page 49) to a notification from Commodore Prendergast, dated April 30th (to which I also referred in my Report on this case of July 5th), and he remarks (at page 51) that the Consul "supposed that the time to be allowed for the despatch of vessels would begin from the 2nd May, but he does not assert any authority for naming that as the true day when the period of limitation was to commence." I had also in my Report of June 5, pointed out that the Consul had not suggested any other date than the 30th April, on which day the Judge apparently considers the blockade to have commenced.

The ship commenced her voyage, as the Judge appears to think, on the 16th, and was captured on the 20th May. It was with reference to the blockade having apparently commenced on the 30th April that I made in my Report of June 5, the remark (from which Lord Lyons in No. 521 dissents), that "the case was not within the letter or spirit of the fifteen days' concession." I can only say that Judge Betts appears to have adopted the same view of this point as that which I took of it on the 5th June, and I am unable to see that he is in error. My supposition that the voyage commenced on the 17th May will not affect the conclusion. If the blockade commenced on the 30th April, she did not sail within fifteen days from its commencement.

With reference to the third point (namely, the permission supposed to have been given by the United States' Government, not only for neutral ships to depart within fifteen days after the institution of a blockade, but also for them to load cargo during that period), although I do not, having regard to the contents of Lord Lyons' No. 521, concur with the conclusion at which the Judge has arrived, yet I cannot say that his judgment was erroneous on this point, inasmuch as I do not know precisely what documents he had legally before him. He also, in my opinion, properly suggests (at page 58), with reference to this point, that "her relief is to be pursued, as it was commenced, through equitable considerations addressed to the Government, and not upon a legal defence against the suit in the Prize Court." The effect of this part of the Judgment appears to me to be as follows:—"You suggest that the Government gave you permission to load cargo after blockade, and to sail within a period of fifteen days; I am of opinion you did not sail within such period of fifteen days, and I cannot say that the Government gave you leave to load cargo after blockade; but upon this point you can apply to the Government:" and I cannot say that this part of the Judgment is erroneous.

With respect to Lord Lyons' letter to Mr. Seward of September 28th, I am of opinion that upon the correspondence therein referred to, and more particularly from the fact of his Lordship having (apparently on May 11th) informed Mr. Seward that he had instructed Her Majesty's Consuls to advise masters of British vessels that they were at liberty to take cargo on board as well before as after the blockade, and from his never having received any intimation whatever that he was mistaken in issuing such instructions, he is perfectly justified in again insisting on the release of the "Hiawatha," a concession which appears to me to be incumbent on the United States' Government in point of good faith.

The release, after condemnation, of the ship "Tropic Wind" (a case of the same character therein mentioned), and the suggestion on this point which came from Judge Betts, are also deserving of consideration in favour of Lord Lyons' request, and the "Hiawatha" seems to be the only case in which the same question arises.

I observe from Consul Archibald's letter to Lord Lyons of September 22, that an appeal from the Judgment was in contemplation.

Claim of Mr. Walford for rent of a farm, called Agua Mgra, let by him to the brothers Lacourt.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Walford, dated the 18th October instant, recapitulating the circumstances under which he had been unable to obtain the rent of a farm in Chili, called Agua Mgra, let by him in 1845 to two brothers named Lacourt.

He also inclosed the previous correspondence on this subject, which had passed between your office, Mr. Walford, and Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chili; and requested that we would take the inclosed papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps, if any, which Her Majesty's Government should take in the matter.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased on the 26th instant to send us a further letter from Mr. Walford, dated the 22nd October, relative to his suit against the brothers Lacourt for the recovery of the rent of a farm in the Province of Concepcion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That we do not see how Her Majesty's Government can properly take any steps in this matter, which is a question entirely between private persons, in which the Government of Chili does not appear to have any interest, or to have taken any part.

We observe, moreover, that in Mr. Thomson's No. 24, June 8 (which is apparently the last despatch on this subject from Chili), he states that "Mr. Budge (Mr. Walford's agent) had placed the suit in a proper train, and considered Mr. Thomson's interference unnecessary."

UNITED STATES.

Case for opinion of Law Officers on claim of Messrs. Byrne and Co., for losses sustained by their vessel the "Monmouth" being warned off the Southern coast of the United States.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st of September last, stating that you were directed by Earl Russell to transmit to me the papers specified in the accompanying list respecting a claim preferred by Messrs. Byrne and Co., of Liverpool, to be compensated by the United States' Government for losses sustained by them in consequence of their vessel, the "Monmouth," having, on the 12th of May last, been warned off the "whole Southern coast of the United States, it being blockaded," whereby that vessel was not only debarred access to the port of Charleston, which seems to have been blockaded at that date, but was also prevented entering the port of Savannah (for which the "Monmouth" had an alternative destination), although, as the papers seem to prove, Savannah was not only not blockaded on the 12th of May, but there was actually no blockade of that port until the 28th of May.

That I would observe from Messrs. Byrne and Co.'s letter of June 3, that they estimate their loss by freight at 8,872*l.* 10*s.*, and on the sale of the cargo of salt at 1,700*l.*; and that they request that Lord Russell will take such steps as may be deemed proper, in order that the heavy pecuniary loss which they have sustained may be made good to them.

That in accordance with the suggestion of the Queen's Advocate, contained in his Report of the 17th of August, you were to request that I would put myself in communication with the Law Officers of the Crown, and prepare a case to be submitted to them, with a view of enabling those officers to advise Her Majesty's Government with confidence and certainty as to the demands, if any, which should be made upon the Government of the United States on behalf of the owners of the "Monmouth."

In obedience to Earl Russell's directions I submitted a case to the Law Officers of the Crown for their opinion accordingly, and have the honour to transmit the same herewith, with their opinion thereon.

Inclosure in No. 282.

Case for Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown on the Claim of Messrs. Byrne and Co. for Losses arising from the Blockade of the Southern Coast of the United States.

THE Queen's Proctor received the following letter from the Foreign Office:—

Sir,

Foreign Office, September 21, 1861.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to transmit to you the papers specified in the accompanying list, respecting a claim preferred by Messrs. Byrne and Co., of Liverpool to be compensated by the United States' Government for losses sustained by them in consequence of their vessel, the "Monmouth," having on the 12th May last been warned off the "whole Southern Coast of the United States, it being blockaded," whereby that vessel was not only debarred access to the port of Charleston, which seems to have been blockaded at that date, but was also prevented entering the port of Savannah (for which the "Monmouth" had an alternative destination), although as the papers seem to prove, Savannah was not only not blockaded on the 12th of May, but there was actually no blockade of that port until the 28th of May.

You will observe from Messrs. Byrne and Co.'s letter of June 3, that they estimate their loss by freight at 8,872*l.* 10*s.*, and on the sale of the cargo of salt 1,700*l.*, and that they request that Lord Russell will take such steps as may be deemed proper in order that the heavy pecuniary loss which they have sustained may be made good to them.

In accordance, therefore, with the suggestion of the Queen's Advocate, contained in his Report of the 17th ultimo, I am to request that you will put yourself in communication with the Law Officers of the Crown, and will prepare a case to be submitted to them, with a view of enabling those officers to advise Her Majesty's Government with confidence and certainty as to the demands, if any, which should be made upon the Government of the United States on behalf of the owners of the "Monmouth."

I am, &c.

F. H. Dyke, Esq. (Signed) E. HAMMOND.

The facts in connection with Messrs. Byrne's claim appear to be as follows:—

On the 24th of March, 1861, the British ship "Monmouth," of which Messrs. Byrne and Co. are part owners, sailed from Liverpool for Charleston in South Carolina, the Captain having orders to proceed to Savannah if Charleston was blockaded.

On the 19th day of April, 1861, the President of the United States of America issued the following Proclamation, viz.:—

A Proclamation.

Whereas an insurrection against the Government of the United States has broken out in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, and the laws of the United States for the collection of the revenue cannot be effectually executed therein conformably to that provision of the Constitution which requires duties to be uniform throughout the United States:

And whereas a combination of persons, engaged in such insurrection, have threatened to grant pretended Letters of Marque to authorize the bearers thereof to commit assaults on the lives, vessels, and property of good citizens of the country, lawfully engaged in commerce on the high seas, and in waters of the United States:

And whereas an Executive Proclamation has been already issued, requiring the persons engaged in these disorderly proceedings to desist therefrom, calling out a militia force for the purpose of repressing the same, and convening Congress in Extraordinary Session to deliberate and determine thereon:

Now therefore I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, with a view to the same purposes before mentioned, and to the protection of the public peace, and the lives and property of quiet and orderly citizens pursuing their lawful occupations, until Congress shall have assembled and deliberated on the said unlawful proceedings, or until the same shall have ceased, have further deemed it advisable to set on foot a blockade of the ports within the States aforesaid, in pursuance of the laws of the United States and of the law of nations in such case provided. For this purpose a competent force will be posted so as to prevent entrance and exit of vessels from the ports aforesaid. If, therefore, with a view to violate such blockade, a vessel shall approach or shall attempt to leave any of the said ports, she will be duly warned by the Commander of one of the blockading vessels, who will indorse on her register the fact and date of such warning; and if the same vessel shall again attempt to enter or leave the blockaded port she will be captured and sent to the nearest convenient port, for such proceedings against her and her cargo as prize as may be deemed advisable.

And I hereby proclaim and declare that if any person, under the pretended authority of the said States, or under any other pretence, shall molest a vessel of the United States, or the persons or cargo on board of her, such person will be held amenable to the laws of the United States for the prevention and punishment of piracy.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 19th day of April, in the year of Our Lord 1861, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-fifth.

(Signed) ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President,
(Signed) WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

On the 12th of May, 1861, the "Monmouth" arrived off Charleston, and was then boarded by an officer from the United States' ship "Niagara," who indorsed upon the ship's papers the following:—

"Boarded May 12, and ordered off the whole Southern coast of the United States of America, it being blockaded."

(Signed) R. L. MAY, Lieutenant,
United States' Steam-ship "Niagara."

That in consequence of this notification the Captain of the "Monmouth" considered himself debarred from going to Savannah, and, therefore, proceeded to British North America.

It is stated by Messrs. Byrne and Co., in a letter addressed to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, dated Liverpool, 3rd June, 1861, that the above notification was wrong in fact, Savannah never having been blockaded, ships up to the 23rd of May going in unmolested.

That at Charleston the blockade had not been effective, as ships on three separate occasions, subsequent to the 12th May, went in, and received full cargoes at high freights, viz., 1½*d.* per lb. for cotton; that the "Monmouth" could have had the same rate, and her freight thereat would have amounted to 8,872*l.* 10*s*, and in addition she would have received for her outward cargo of 4,000 sacks of salt, 1,700*l.*

Under these circumstances Messrs. Byrne and Co. consider they have a legal and equitable claim upon the United States' Government for the above sums upon the grounds that the notice was wrong in fact, save as regards Charleston; that in addition the officer of the "Niagara" had only jurisdiction at Charleston, and was, therefore, not warranted in warning off from other ports: and, lastly, that the blockade at Charleston was not an effective one, as is evidenced by subsequent arrivals there.

On the 8th of June, 1861, Earl Russell desired Lord Lyons to obtain all the information he could procure respecting the forces actually blockading Savannah at the time when the "Monmouth" was warned off the whole Southern coast including Savannah.

Lord Lyons accordingly, on the 27th of June, 1861, called upon Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Savannah to report to him with "scrupulous precision" whether any United States' force was actually blockading Savannah on the said 12th of May, or shortly afterwards, and, if so, of what vessels such force was composed, where it was stationed, and whether it was of such amount and so placed as to be able to enforce an effective blockade; and also, whether any notice of a blockade of Savannah was given on or before the 12th of May, or shortly afterwards, and received the following reply from Her Majesty's Acting Consul:—

"That no United States' force was blockading Savannah on the 12th May last; in fact no blockade whatever of this port (Savannah) existed previously to the 28th of that month, on which day the vessels composing the United States' squadron at present (6th July) blockading Savannah made their appearance for the first time."

On the 29th I visited one of these vessels, and was distinctly informed by her Commander that the blockade of Savannah did not commence until the 28th of May. No other notice of blockade has ever been given, and I gathered in the course of conversation that the Commander of the squadron did not deem it to be his duty to give any such notice either to the local authorities of this city, or to the Consular Representatives of foreign Governments resident here; and Her Majesty's Consul adds, "that one of the best proofs that no blockade existed previously to the 28th of May lies in the fact that five British vessels arrived in this port on various days between the 12th and 28th May, the masters of which vessels reported to me that they met with no United States' force off the port."

The several despatches and inclosures relating to the subject were from time to time referred to Her Majesty's Advocate-General, and the following are his Reports thereon:—

It will be observed that Messrs. Byrne's claim is based upon the prices current at Charleston at the time the port was under blockade, and there is an entire omission of the prices prevalent at Savannah, and the amount realized in British North America; but a claim is made for the whole amount of what it is said the sale of the cargo would have fetched, and a homeward freight obtained from a blockaded port.

Under the aforegoing circumstances the opinion of the Law Officers is requested—

As to the demands, if any, which should be made upon the Government of the United States on behalf of the owners of the "Monmouth."

Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown.

The facts, after the full and careful inquiry that has taken place, appear to be these, viz.:—That on the 12th of May, the date of the endorsement by the officer of the United States' steam-ship "Niagara" on the ship's papers of the "Monmouth," the port of Charleston was blockaded; but that the port of Savannah was not blockaded in fact, or by any naval force whatsoever, earlier than the 28th May. Under these circumstances, we think that the master of the "Monmouth" was justified in believing that the officer who made the endorsement did so by the authority of his Government; and if the master gave faith to the representations as to the extent of the blockade, contained in the endorsement, and therefore desisted from going to Savannah, it appears to us that the case of the owners is a fair case for representation of the facts by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of the United States, with the view of obtaining, if practicable, a reasonable compensation for any actual loss that may, in consequence, have been occasioned to the owners.

As to the amount of any ultimate demand, the information supplied does not enable us to advise, with any certainty; and, should the justice of the claim be admitted by the United States' Government, the quantum can be afterwards ascertained without much practical difficulty. The representations, in the first instance, should be general, and not a claim for any specific sum. And even if the representations should fail of any beneficial result to the owners of the "Monmouth," they may not be without their use in inducing greater regularity and correctness for the future.

This also, we must add, is on the assumption that the master of the "Monmouth," after he found himself precluded from going to Savannah, acted bonâ fide. We have assumed (but of this the claimants ought to furnish satisfactory proof to Her Majesty's Government), that, as suggested, the "Monmouth" had an alternative port of destination—Savannah.

Right of minors residing in the United States to British protection, they having been born in the British dominions, but their fathers having become naturalized citizens of the United States.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th October ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 505), from which we should learn that a question has been raised by the United States' Government as to the right to British protection of three persons, named Thomas Daily, O'Connor, and Patrick Crohan, who have been arrested by the authorities at Baltimore.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that it appears that these persons, who are minors, were born in Her Majesty's dominions, but their fathers became naturalized citizens; and the United States' Government assert that such minors are held, by the laws of the United States, to be American citizens: and to request that we would take this question into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Right of Mr. J. Hoy, a merchant of New York, to British protection.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us, as having reference to the same question, the accompanying letter from Mr. Cassell, dated the 2nd October ultimo, respecting the case of Mr. James Hoy, a merchant of New York; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether, under the circumstances mentioned in Mr. Cassell's letter, Mr. Hoy is entitled to the protection of the British Crown.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th October ultimo, transmitting a copy of a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, inclosing a copy of the Opinion which he has obtained from the Legal Adviser of Her Majesty's Legation in regard to the question of the nationality, during their minority, of natural-born British subjects dwelling in the United States, whose parents had, subsequent to their birth, become naturalized American citizens.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, minors who were born in Her Majesty's dominions, but whose fathers have become naturalized American citizens, ought, during their minority, to be considered and treated as between the two Governments, not as British subjects, but as American citizens.

We learn from the opinion of Mr. Carlisle, the American Counsel to the Legation at Washington, that by the Statute Law of the United States minors in this position are regarded as American citizens; and that, in fact, as well as according to the letter of the law, they obtain and enjoy, in the United States, all the rights and benefits incident to that character.

The rule we have propounded is in accordance with that which generally obtains in the somewhat analogous case of domicil; and one which we cannot doubt it will be wise to observe, in the exercise of that discretion which, after all, must govern the interference of one State with the acts of another, bearing on individuals being within the territory of such other State.

As to the case of Mr. James Hoy (whose age is not stated), we take for granted that he is of full age, and has been so for a sufficiently long period of time to enable him, if he had thought fit, to disclaim and renounce the citizenship which, according to the opinion we have above expressed, attached to him during his minority in the United States after the naturalization of his father.

We also infer that no such disclaimer or renunciation took place, and that Mr. Hoy, since he came of age, has carried on his business of a merchant in the United States, and has exercised therein all the ordinary rights of a citizen.

Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that Mr. Hoy is not, in justice or fairness, entitled to the protection of the British Crown against the acts or interference of the Government of the United States.

Mr. Glover's claim against Ismail Pasha, for breach of contract for hire of the steamer "Enchantress."

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 5, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd October ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a copy of the despatch which your Lordship addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 4, January 6, 1860), on the receipt of my Report of the 30th December, 1859, respecting Mr. Glover's claim against Ismail Pasha, for the breach of an alleged contract for the hire of Mr. Glover's steam-vessel "Enchantress."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to me the accompanying despatches which have been received since that date from Sir Henry Bulwer, and the accompanying letters from Mr. Glover, showing the subsequent proceedings in this case, and to request that I would take these, and the previous papers which were also inclosed, into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the further course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That. considering all that has passed in this matter, it seems to me that Her Majesty's Government is justified in peremptorily insisting on the prompt payment of 4,000*l* to Mr. Glover.

Your Lordship's despatch (No. 4) of January 6, 1860, to Sir H. Bulwer, was of a most definite character; and I can see nothing of any weight in the last answer on behalf of the Porte (September 25, 1861); whilst the reply of Sir H. Bulwer (October 2, 1861), appears to me effectually to dispose of that answer.

I cannot see any sufficient reason for the distinction taken by the Porte between its liability as to the sum of 3,000*l*. due to Mr. Glover under the contract (which it has paid notwithstanding the insolvency or default of Ismail Pasha), and its liability as to the sum of 4,000*l*. claimed as damages by Mr. Glover, which it now declines to pay for what appears to me the obviously insufficient reason that Mr. Glover may sue Ismail Pasha for that amount.

The final decision of the case was left to a Board of Turkish official personages, and their award ("bouyourdli"), dated October 3, 1860, does not distinguish between the two claims for 3,000*l*. and for 4,000*l*.; the whole claim is thereby dealt with as being one and the same, against the Turkish Government: it is ordered to "be arranged" or "made smooth;" and the Mushir of the Zaptieh is thereby "requested to make the necessary arrangements for regularizing (literally, making smooth) the same."

On the proposition of Aali Pasha, the question as to the amount due for damages was subsequently referred to Mr. Hornby, and his decision is in favour of Mr. Glover to the full amount claimed.

Sir H. Bulwer now suggests that Mr. Hornby's reasons as stated in his Memorandum, dated the 21st May, 1861, for thus deciding, are not conclusive, but however this may be, the Turkish Government does not insist on this point, on which Mr. Hornby's decision is final; and I see nothing in reason or equity to prevent Her Majesty's Government from insisting that the Turkish Government must forthwith pay this amount. Mr. Glover is entitled to the benefit of Mr. Hornby's decision in his favour, especially as Mr. Hornby was not selected by him, but by Aali Pasha.

The principle involved is important, and the case of Mr. Glover is a very hard one. As to the policy of not pressing it to extremity, for fear of the possible consequences to Turkey as regards other claims, or of accepting a less sum (upon which Sir H. Bulwer remarks), I do not feel competent to give an opinion; but Her Majesty's Government cannot on any account be advised to admit that the claim of Mr. Glover is only valid as against Ismail Pasha. The Porte is, in my opinion, clearly liable; and as to the amount (which is the only question remaining open), I consider that Her Majesty's Government is perfectly entitled to insist on prompt payment of 4,000*l*., the amount decided by Mr. Hornby to be due to Mr. Glover.

ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION.

Claim of Mr. Smith for return freight or demurrage in cases of the "Caledonia" and "Cestus."

Claim arising out of General Rosa's Decree of February 13, 1845.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 5, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd October ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 18th July,* respecting the claims of the owners of the "Caledonia" and "Cestus," arising out of General Rosa's Decree of the 13th February, 1845, he was directed to transmit to me the papers marked in the margin,† containing further information respecting these cases, and the Commission by which they are being tried; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the points submitted by Mr. Thornton.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I cannot advise your Lordship to instruct Mr. Thornton as suggested; namely, to state to the Argentine Commissioners that he is instructed by Her Majesty's Government to support Mr. Smith's claim for return freight or demurrage in the cases of the "Caledonia" and the "Cestus," notwithstanding the decision of the other Commissioners, with the view of ultimately enforcing this claim against the Argentine Government, in case the Commissioners should persist in their refusal to decide in favour of the claim.

The Commissioners have decided in favour of the claim in point of principle—the claimant is to receive compensation; and the only question is the amount of such compensation.

Mr. Thornton states in No. 43 that the Commissioners have positively refused to allow homeward freight or demurrage in either case. I must assume that the claim has been fully stated, argued, and considered; and that the decision is unanimous on the part of all the Commissioners excepting Mr. Thornton.

With respect to demurrage, I am of opinion that the Commissioners have rightly decided; the ships were not, in fact, detained at, or prevented from leaving, Buenos Ayres, or from going elsewhere as they thought fit; they were only forbidden to discharge their cargoes at Buenos Ayres; and I can see no sufficient ground for claiming demurrage.

With respect to the claim for return freight, I observe that the ships were not actually chartered or engaged to carry cargo on any return voyage; they suffered no positive and actual loss; their chance of earning such freight was a matter proper for the consideration of the Commissioners, and they having rejected the claim, I cannot say that such decision is so contrary to reason and justice as to justify the special intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

Imprisonment at Baltimore, and subsequent release, of Dennis Kelly, a British subject.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 6, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th October ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me two despatches, and their inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (Nos. 524 and 525 of the 28th and 30th September ultimo), respecting the case of Dennis Kelly, a British subject, who was arrested at Baltimore, and imprisoned for twenty-one days without any explanation being given as to the cause of his imprisonment.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that Kelly was eventually released from Fort Columbus, in New York harbour, whither he had been conveyed by the police; and that Her Majesty's Consul at New York advanced him six or seven dollars to enable him to return to Baltimore; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which I may have to offer thereupon, and also whether I would advise that the United States' Government should be called upon (as suggested by Her Majesty's Consul at Baltimore) to repay the six or seven dollars advanced by Consul Archibald to Kelly on his being released from Fort Columbus.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in my opinion it will not be expedient, nor consistent with the dignity of Her Majesty's Government, to call upon the Government of the United States to repay the sum of six dollars, advanced by Consul Archibald to Kelly, by way of travelling expenses, to enable him to return to Baltimore, on his release from confinement at New York.

Although my opinion is only requested on this particular point, I may perhaps be permitted to add, that having regard to what is stated by Lord Lyons in No. 525, and especially to his Lordship's statement "that he has hitherto succeeded in procuring the release of every British subject arrested in this way, whose case has been brought to his knowledge;" I entirely concur with his Lordship that it will not be expedient to pursue this case any further at present, or to raise the general question of the right of the United States' Government to arrest foreigners on suspicion, without legal process; more especially seeing that at Baltimore (where Kelly was arrested) the operation of the ordinary law, and of the regular legal Tribunals of the United States, has been (howsoever) deliberately superseded or set aside by the authority of the Executive Government, under the plea of an existing insurrection or civil war, and that martial law appears to prevail there.

I would also observe that it does not appear that Kelly has made any demand for pecuniary compensation.

Claim of Messrs. Piers for compensation for losses occasioned by their vessel the "Susan" having been warned by a United States' cruizer not to enter Hampton Roads.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 6, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammand's letter of the 28th October ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 15th October ultimo, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, together with a letter from Messrs. L. E. and George Piers, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, in which they claim compensation on account of their vessel the "Susan," which sailed from that port about the 19th of April, bound for Norfolk, with a cargo of herrings, having been warned by a United States' cruizer, on or about the 14th May, not to enter Hampton Roads, whereby the voyage was rendered impracticable, and the "Susan" had to return to Halifax.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the grounds upon which Messrs. Piers make their claim are, first, the want of any previous notice as to the blockade, and the consequent absence of any knowledge on their part of the particulars relative thereto; and secondly, the asserted abrogation, on the part of the United States' Government, of the Reciprocity Treaty with this country of the 5th June, 1854 (Hertslet, vol. ix, page 998), by which the United States' Government stipulated that certain articles, including fish, with which the "Susan" was laden, should be admitted into all the ports of the United States duty free.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this claim into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this claim into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to make any demand upon the Government of the United States in this case.

It is not suggested that the port of Norfolk, Virginia, was not effectually blockaded "on or about the 14th May" last, when the "Susan" was, on arriving off Hampton Roads, boarded by a United States' ship of war, and warned, by indorsement on her papers, not to enter Hampton Roads, within which the port of Norfolk is situated.

I presume that the blockade was, in fact, effective; and if so, the notice and indorsement were justifiable.

The other circumstances alluded to in the Memorial are not material.

Protection to be afforded by British Vice-Consul at Messina to an Ionian subject, P. Galeani.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 7, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me two letters from Dr. Galeani, dated the 2nd and 29th October last, stating the grounds on which he requests that his son, who has been employed by him as his agent in regard to some property of his in Sicily, may be protected by the British Vice-Consul at Messina; and to request that I would take Dr. Galeani's application into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which may properly be sent to the British Vice-Consul on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this application into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That inasmuch as Dr. Galeani states that his son was born in the Island of Cephalonia, the Consul at Messina may be instructed that Pancrazio Galeani (the son) is to be considered as an Ionian, and protected accordingly; and he should be desired to state the facts relating to that gentleman, and his alleged ill-treatment in Sicily.

Dr. Galeani should be requested to state the nationality of his father; the place of his own birth; the date of his son's birth; and the date of his own naturalization; and to forward a copy of his certificate of naturalization.

Captain Carvell's case.

Interview with Colonel the O'Gorman Mahon, M.P.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that Colonel the O'Gorman Mahon, M.P., who had recently returned from Peru, where he interested himself on behalf of Captain Carvell, was anxious to have an interview with us upon that gentleman's case.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the O'Gorman Mahon had been allowed to read all the despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima relating to this case, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would have the goodness to name the earliest day when it would be convenient for us to receive the O'Gorman Mahon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to observe that the correspondence relative to the case was annexed for our information.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased, in a letter to Her Majesty's Attorney-General of the 4th instant, to state that he begged to place in his hands an additional paper connected with Captain Carvell's case, respecting which Colonel the O'Gorman Mahon had been appointed to wait on the Law Officers that afternoon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Colonel the O'Gorman Mahon had an interview with us on the 4th instant, and fully discussed the circumstances of Captain Carvell's case; he did not succeed in altering our opinion as expressed in our previous Reports, and did not state any facts of importance with which we were previously unacquainted, excepting that (as we understood him) there are at least nine different suits or proceedings pending in Peru in relation to the effects of Mr. Winder, deceased, in eight of which Captain Carvell does not deny the jurisdiction of the Peruvian Courts; the ninth appears to us to stand on the same footing in this respect, and this agrees with the former Reports.

The papers forwarded to the Attorney-General with Mr. Hammond's note of the 4th November instant are herewith returned.

BELGIUM, &c.

Proposed redemption of the Scheldt duties.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th November instant, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 29th October ultimo* and the 4th instant [31st October ?†], respecting the Belgian proposal for the capitalization of the Scheldt duties, he was directed to transmit to me three Memoranda on the Scheldt duties which have been drawn up in the Foreign Office, and to request that I would take these papers into my early consideration, and report to your Lordship such further observations as I may now have to make upon the question.

The previous correspondence on the case was inclosed for reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the contents of these three Memoranda (No. 1 October 30th, No. 2 November 1st, No. 3 November 4th), especially of that of November 1st, which I have marked No. 2, in pencil, tend strongly to confirm the view which I have taken of this question in my Report of the 29th October.

It appears from these Memoranda, that the subject of these duties was frequently discussed between the different Powers interested, and various modes of settlement were suggested, always without success, in 1831-32, and again in 1838-39. During these discussions the Netherlands always insisted on its right to receive the duty; Belgium contended contra that no duty was due to the Netherlands, the Scheldt being free; and the question was thoroughly sifted. I cannot discover any proof of its having been always assumed or admitted by all the Powers that Belgium was to be held exclusively liable to pay the duty, nor was there any definite compact to that effect.

On the other hand, the right of the Netherlands to receive the duty was generally admitted: it does not seem to have been seriously questioned by any Power but Belgium.

Lord Palmerston appears, on the 24th September, 1832, to have proposed that Belgium should pay this duty on behalf of all nations without distinction (see Draft Treaty, Annex B (1) to Protocol of the 30th September, 1832, State Papers, vol. xix, page 160); but it is stated in Memorandum No. 1, page 9, that these negotiations led "to no final issue."

By the Treaty of May 21, 1833 (Article III), the navigation of the Scheldt was to remain entirely free until the relations between Holland and Belgium were regulated by a definitive Treaty. The question of duties, therefore, was reserved for such Definitive Treaty.

In 1838, during the negotiations for the Definitive Treaty, it appears from Memorandum No. 1, page 13, "that a desire was expressed by the Belgian Plenipotentiaries that Belgium might be allowed to redeem these duties by an annual payment of 150,000 florins to the Netherlands, secured by an Article of the Treaty. The Conference, however, replied that they did not consider the question was one which was susceptible of being treated by them, but that it ought more properly to form a subject for future negotiation between the two countries" (Memorandum No. 3, page 16), and the result of the whole was Article IX of Definitive Treaty of 1839).

It would thus seem that the casting on Belgium exclusively the obligation to pay these duties was a point which had been fully considered: it had been suggested in 1832 by Lord Palmerston, and Belgium had been ready to entertain it as late as 1839; but it was not adopted by the Conference; and, consistently with this state of things, was not stipulated in the Definitive Treaty of 1839.

Thus it results from the history of the negotiations on this subject from 1831 to 1839, that the Powers interested—

First. Admitted and confirmed the right of the Netherlands to receive the duty.

Secondly. Considered and rejected the plan of making Belgium exclusively responsible for the payment.

Thirdly. Settled and signed the Definitive Treaty of 1839, which made the right of Holland to receive the duty clear, but did not make Belgium exclusively liable to pay it.

There remains only for consideration the Belgian Law of June 5, 1839; and on this point there is not only an entire absence of any evidence that this law was enacted in pursuance of any undertaking or arrangement between Belgium and other Powers, but it would appear from Memorandum No. 2, page 8, that the law was a purely spontaneous measure on the part of Belgium, adopted by her, not in consequence of any Treaty obligation or international compact whatsoever, but for her own national objects, namely, the benefit of Antwerp and Ghent.

As to legality of mixed marriages at the British Consulate at Oporto, without the parties having been previously married in a Portuguese church, according to the law of the land.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 11, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th October ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Rev. E. Whiteley, British Consular Chaplain at Oporto, dated the 26th October last, requesting instructions with reference to the question of mixed marriages contracted at the British Consulate at Oporto, when the contracting parties had not been previously married in a Portuguese church according to the law of the land.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the papers bearing on this question which were referred to by Mr. Whiteley, and to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this question into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating with reference to his letter of the 28th ultimo, submitting to the Law Officers a letter dated the 26th October, from the Rev. Edward Whiteley, respecting the question of mixed marriages contracted at the British Consulate at Oporto, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit therewith a further letter from Mr. Whiteley on the same subject, and to request that it might be taken into our consideration with the papers then before us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it would seem from the Rev. Mr. Whiteley's letter that whilst mixed marriages of British and Portuguese subjects are only permitted to be solemnized by the Consul under the Consular Marriage Act at Lisbon, when the parties either have been or are about to be married according to the Roman Catholic form, consistently with the law of Portugal, yet that at Oporto no such restriction is enforced, and such mixed marriages are there solemnized at the Consulate, although they may not be preceded or followed by the Roman Catholic ecclesiastical form of solemnization, and are, consequently, invalid by the law of Portugal. It is obvious that the Consular practice throughout Portugal in this matter should be uniform; and it may be desirable, before finally deciding the question, to procure from that country precise information on this point. As regards the general question, the serious inconveniences consequent upon marriages celebrated under the Consular Marriage Act being considered as invalid by the lex loci have been frequently considered and pointed out by the Law Officers; and in those countries in which, as in France, there is no impediment to marriage on the ground of religious belief, and a civil form of marriage is valid, the forbidding the celebration of any Consular marriage, except where the parties have been previously married secundum legem loci, appears proper. In Roman Catholic countries, however, in which mixed marriages are absolutely invalid (i.e., where no Protestant can contract a valid marriage with a Roman Catholic), the forbidding Consular marriages under the statute, excepting in cases where the Roman Catholic ecclesiastical form has been, or is about to be followed, has been considered as attended with serious hardship to British subjects, more especially to those domiciled in the country. This was (according to the Queen's Advocate's recollection, for the documents are not among those inclosed with Mr. Hammond's letter) the view taken by the Earl of Malmesbury, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in his despatch to Lord Howden, and the circular to Her Majesty's Consuls in Spain of June 1852; and unless your Lordship should think fit, on receiving further information, to adopt a different principle in Portugal, and to place Oporto in the same condition in this respect as Lisbon is stated to be, we do not see how anything more can be done than to direct the Consul to warn the parties, and to leave them to act according to their own discretion, and at their own risk of possibly resulting inconveniences to themselves or their offspring.

UNITED STATES.

On the right of a Federal steamer of war to board a West India mail-packet, and remove therefrom and carry off as prisoners Messrs. Mason and Slidell, accredited to the English and French Governments by Confederate States of North America.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 12, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request our immediate attention to the following case:—

"The Confederate States of North America have recently appointed two gentlemen, Messrs. Mason and Slidell, to proceed to Europe accredited to the English and French Governments respectively.

"These gentlemen embarked on board the steamer 'Nashville,' which vessel appears from accounts in the daily papers successfully to have run the blockade of Charleston, and to have conveyed the two gentlemen to Cardenas, in Cuba.

"It appears also from accounts published in the daily papers that the Federal Government immediately on hearing of the escape of the 'Nashville,' despatched three vessels of war to intercept her.

"Within these few days a duly commissioned Federal steamer of war, mounting eight guns of heavy calibre, made her appearance at Falmouth, and she has since arrived at Southampton, where she has coaled, and is now ready for sea at a moment's notice.

"Private information has been received that the object of this vessel is to capture the two Envoys before they arrive in Europe.

"It is not improbable that Messrs. Mason and Slidell will have embarked at the Havana on board the West India mail-steamer now on her passage to Southampton.

"That steamer is one of those under contract with Her Majesty's Government for the conveyance of Her Majesty's mails, which mails are exclusively under the charge of a commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, acting on behalf of the Postmaster-General. In other respects the steamer is a mere merchant steamer, and is not authorized to display a pennant as a ship of war.

"Assuming, therefore, that the United States' man-of-war steamer now lying at Southampton, or any other similar steamer of the United States, should attempt to intercept the West Indian mail-steamer, with the view of getting possession of the persons of Messrs. Mason and Slidell, or of their credentials or instructions."—your Lordship wished to be informed "to what extent, under the Law of Nations, a man-of-war steamer of the United States would be entitled to interfere with the mail-steamer if fallen in with beyond the territorial limits of the United Kingdom, that is, beyond three miles from the British coast.

"Whether, for instance, she might cause the West Indian mail-steamer to bring-to, might board her, examine her papers, open the mail-bags, and examine the contents thereof, examine the luggage of passengers, seize and carry away Messrs. Mason and Slidell in person, or seize their credentials and instructions and despatches, or even put a prize-crew on board the West Indian steamer, and carry her off to a port of the United States. In other words, what would be the rights of the American cruizer with regard to the passengers and crew and lawful papers and correspondence on board our packet, on the assumption that the said packet was liable to capture and confiscation on the ground of carrying enemies' despatches: would the cruizer be entitled to carry the packet, and all and everything in her, back to America, or would she be obliged to land in this country, or in some near port, all the people and all the unseizable goods?"

Mr. Hammond was further to inquire, "whether supposing one of Her Majesty's ships of war should be sent to follow the movements of the United States' steamer of war, or should have been ordered to meet the West Indian steamer, and escort her into port, such ship of war of Her Majesty would be justified, and to what extent, in preventing the United States' steamer of war from interfering with the West Indian mail-steamer?"

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That your Lordship's first question may, in our opinion, be answered to the effect that the United States' man-of-war falling in with the British mail-steamer beyond the territorial limits of the United Kingdom might cause her to bring-to, might board her, examine her papers, open the general mail-bags, and examine the contents thereof, without, however, opening any bag or packet addressed to any officer or Department of Her Majesty's Government.

The United States' ship of war may put a prize-crew on board the West India steamer, and carry her off to a port of the United States for adjudication by a Prize Court there. But she would have no right to remove Messrs. Mason and Slidell, and carry them off as prisoners, leaving the ship to pursue her voyage.

On the assumption that the West India packet is liable to capture and confiscation, on the ground of carrying enemies' despatches, the cruizer would, in strictness, be entitled to carry her, and all and everything in her, to America; she might, however, and in our opinion ought, under the circumstances, to put on shore, at some convenient port, passengers and their baggage, not being contraband of war.

We cannot say that any of Her Majesty's ships of war would be justified in preventing the United States' man-of-war from interfering with the West India mail-steamer on the high seas. The case is not one of such a character as to justify resistance by force in limine, even assuming that the condemnation of the vessel would not be justified. The questions whether any of the documents on board the mail-vessel are despatches contraband of war, and, if so, whether they are protected either by the nature of the conveyance, or by the character of the persons to whom they are addressed, or otherwise, are all questions which may admit of doubt and controversy, and do not appear to us to be concluded by authority;* but we think that the decision of them, in the first instance at all events, belongs to the Prize Court of the captors.

SWITZERLAND.

Complaint of Mr. Behrens. Action brought against him by a Swiss firm, and sequestration of his property at Lausanne. His claim to be tried by an English tribunal in a question arising out of a contract made in England.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches and inclosures received from Her Majesty's Minister at Berne (Nos. 90 and 92), respecting the complaint of Mr. Behrens, a merchant of Bradford, that in a suit brought against him by a Swiss commercial firm at Lausanne, respecting a contract made in England, property belonging to Mr. Behrens had been sequestrated at Lausanne with the object of forcing him before the Cantonal Tribunal, whereas Mr. Behrens claimed, under the Treaty between this country and the Swiss Confederation, of which a copy was inclosed, to be tried before an English tribunal.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion upon this question, as it at present stands, and with information as to how British law would deal with the converse of the question now raised.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That in our opinion there is no stipulation in the Treaty of 1855 between Great Britain and Switzerland applicable to the case of Mr. Behrens.

We understand the view suggested on the part of Mr. Behrens to be that, under Article III of the Treaty, British subjects generally are entitled to be placed on the same footing in Switzerland, with respect to all civil actions and suits, as Swiss citizens under the 50th Article of the Federal Constitution. But it appears to us that the IIIrd Article of the Treaty applies, in this respect, only to British subjects in Switzerland, i.e., residing in Switzerland for the time being, in conformity with the provisions of the Ist Article. The words of that part of the IIIrd Article are, "The subjects and citizens of either of the two Contracting Parties in the territories of the other." Mr. Behrens being resident in England does not come within this description; and the 50th Article of the Federal Constitution seems itself to require, by the words "ayant domicile" and "hors du Canton où il est domicilié," that the person who claims the benefit of it should be resident in some part of Switzerland.

There is nothing in the Treaty of 1855 which can entitle British subjects to claim as extensive immunities from local jurisdiction in Switzerland as may have been conceded by the Confederation to France or any other nation. The case, therefore, of Mr. Behrens received no aid from the Treaty of 1828, between France and Switzerland.

We must add, however, that, according to the practice of the English Courts, a Swiss citizen, in the converse case, could not be proceeded against in an English Court unless he should happen, at some time, to be present within English terrritory, and to be there served with process of an English Court. For breach of contract (which is the case set up against Mr. Behrens) a foreigner abroad can be sued in the English Courts in those cases only in which the contract was made in England. According to the same practice, moreover, debts due to a defendant cannot be seized or sequestered for the purpose of compelling an appearance or submission to the tribunals of this country, but only in satisfaction after the suit has been decided against the defendant. These, however, are mere differences of opinion between the practice of the Courts of the two countries: and the practice of the Cantonal Court is not objectionable as being opposed to common justice; nor does the Treaty contain any stipulation for uniformity of law or practice.

Mr. Behrens must, in our opinion, therefore, be left to defend himself upon the merits of his case, before the Swiss Courts in the ordinary course of the law administered by them, unless the interposition of the Federal Council should render this unnecessary. The case is not one in which we can advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere.

Imprisonment of Captain Melville White at Lima.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th October last, stating with reference to our Reports of the 25th of June* and 15th of July,† he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the despatches marked in the margin,‡ containing further information respecting the imprisonment at Lima of Captain Melville White, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any further observations which they might suggest to us respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That we regret to observe that this case has made no progress; and that Mr. Barton's despatches throw but little new light upon its true character and legal position.

Mr. White appears from the papers to have been in prison ever since the 23rd March last, without ever having been brought to trial, confronted with any witness, made acquainted with the precise acts charged against him, or (as we understand) receiving a copy of the order for his arrest. He states that he has repeatedly applied for a copy of this order, but always in vain; and it seems to be clear that either his arrest without a written order from competent authority, or the refusal of a copy of that order, whenever asked for, would be a direct violation of the 18th Article of the Peruvian Constitution of 1856. Moreover, according to his own statements, he seems to have been treated with wanton and most disgraceful cruelty during his detention in prison.

It would even appear that he was on one occasion put in irons without reason, by order of Judge Ponce.

It is observable that Judge Ponce (upon whose conduct to Captain Carvell it has already been our duty to remark) should apparently have the sole conduct of this case. Captain White's expressions with respect to this Judge are unfortunately very indiscreet; but the Judge's expressions and conduct appear to us to be very improper, and to show that he is not entirely impartial in relation to Captain White.

The case is, in our judgment, one of great gravity and seriousness; but at present we can only suggest that Mr. Barton should be instructed to use every exertion to carry out the instructions which he received in No. 30, more especially that Captain White's public and legal trial be expeditiously and duly proceeded with; and to send home such particulars as he can collect with reference to the real facts and merits of the case, and to Captain White's guilt or innocence of the charge upon which he has been imprisoned; or as to the existence of any probable grounds for the accusation; and also as to the legal right of the Peruvian Government, according to the law as generally administered and acknowledged in Peru, to treat Captain White as they have done by imprisoning him so long, and apparently for an indefinite period, without trial, and without even communicating to him the particulars of the charge made against him, or bringing the case to a hearing.

Refusal of New Granadian authorities to grant a passport to Mr. Wills.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the correspondence noted in the margin,* respecting the refusal of the New Granadian authorities to grant a passport to Mr. Wills, and the steps taken by that gentleman to obtain the support of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in the matter; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship such observations as I may have to offer on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the authorities of New Granada appear to me to have been justified in refusing, under the special circumstances of the case, and during a civil war, to grant a passport to Mr. Wills.

It appears that Mr. Wills' house was in that portion of the country occupied by, or under the control of, General Mosquera, who was in arms against the Government, and was expected to march on the capital. The existence of a truce for a few days is unimportant. There was apparently a General Order not to grant passports for that part of the country, under which a passport was refused to Mr. Wills.

No serious imputation appears to be made against Mr. Wills' character or conduct by Mr. Griffith, or any other person, and there is no necessity for Her Majesty† to interfere in the case, or to enter into Mr. Wills' differences with Mr. Griffith.

NEW GRANADA.

Imprisonment and subsequent liberation of Mr. Bonitto, for furnishing arms to opponents of Government of New Granada. As to Mr. Bonitto thereby having forfeited claim to British protection.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the two despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in New Granada (Nos. 72 and 82), respecting the imprisonment and subsequent liberation, by the New Granadian authorities, of Mr. Bonitto.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that Mr. Griffith requests instructions whether, under the circumstances of the case, Mr. Bonitto is entitled to be considered as a British subject; and to request that I would take this subject into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Griffith on this point.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Bonitto, having apparently furnished arms by contract to the opponents of the present Government of New Granada during a civil war, was imprisoned, and in danger of being tried by that Government. He has been liberated upon his own petition, or memorial, dated September 4, 1861 (Inclosure No. 1 in Mr. Griffith's No. 82), in which he states "that he had compromised himself, politically, against the cause upheld by the United States of New Granada," and he has thereby entered into an engagement "of refraining in future from acting, either directly or indirectly, in opposition to the Government of the New Granadian Union, to which he submits, inasmuch as the same emanates from the popular will." He also engages "not to institute any claims of any nature whatever against the Government for losses or damages which may have accrued to him on account of his imprisonment."

A certain Señor Otero thereby binds himself to pay 4,000 dollars into the Government Treasury, in the event of Mr. Bonitto violating his engagement. All claims against the Government of New Granada on the part of Señor Bonitto are consequently at an end, and the only question on which Mr. Griffith now requests an answer is, whether he is any longer to consider Mr. Bonitto as entitled to British protection.

In answer to this question I can only say, that Mr. Bonitto has certainly not lost all right to British protection for all future time; he has behaved with great imprudence, and has placed himself, to a great extent, in the power of the existing Government, and Mr. Griffith should be very cautious in interfering, if he should again come into collision with that Government; but he has not "forfeited his right to British protection," and I know not on what grounds General Mosquera's Government maintains this position, or suggests that he must return to England in order to recover this position.

As to Mr. Bransby being entitled to British protection, he having accepted an appointment in the civil service of New Granada.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the correspondence noted in the margin* respecting the proceedings of Mr. Bransby, a British subject resident in New Granada, and from which I should perceive that that gentleman has finally accepted an appointment in the civil service of New Granada; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the question put by Mr. Griffith, whether Mr. Bransby is now entitled to be treated as a British subject.

That I observe that Mr. Bransby in his postscript to his letter of July 17 to Mr. Griffith, thus expresses himself: "I have only to add, that whatever claim I might consider myself entitled to urge against the fallen Government, I pretend to none against the patriot one which has replaced it." He admits that "he pretends to no claim against the existing Government;" this therefore disposes of his previous claims and the correspondence thereon.

With respect to the question of Mr. Griffith, "if at any future time he is to consider Mr. Bransby as a British subject," and to his suggestion "that as long as he is in the New Granadian service (as interpreter in the employment of the Foreign Office) he has forfeited his British allegiance," Mr. Griffith may be informed that Mr. Bransby has not by accepting such an employment forfeited his allegiance, or ceased to be a British subject; it is not suggested that he has formally renounced his British allegiance, or taken any oath of allegiance to the Republic of New Granada.

His rights to protection as a British subject in all matters not immediately connected with his employment as interpreter are unimpaired, and excepting as to such matters, he is as much entitled to British protection as he was before he accepted that employment.

I do not understand on what grounds General Mosquera maintains the doctrine, "that in order again to obtain British protection, he must previously return to his native country." No Treaty of stipulation, or Law of New Granada, or any other authority, is cited or alluded to in support of this doctrine.

I do not, however, see any pressing necessity for raising, at present, any discussion with New Granada on this (so-called) "doctrine" at present.

UNITED STATES.

Right of Confederate States to confiscate, by Act of Congress, the property and debts of alien enemies; subjects of Great Britain and other neutral Powers domiciled in Northern States being comprised in that designation.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 13, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence with Messrs. Copestake, Moore, and Co., and a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul at New York, respecting an Act of Congress of the so-styled Confederate States, confiscating the property and debts of alien enemies.

That to this Act was appended a letter of instructions issued by Mr. Benjamin, the Attorney-General of the Confederate Government, from which it would appear that the subjects of Her Majesty, and of other neutral Powers, having their domicile in the Northern States, were comprised in that designation.

That it was your Lordship's intention to have deferred consulting us upon the subject until it had been ascertained whether the Act of the Confederate Government had been put into active operation, but as that measure had produced some excitement among British subjects owning property in the South, and Mr. Dennistoun, of Glasgow, having requested an interview with your Lordship in regard to it, your Lordship was pleased to request that we would at once take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That we understand your Lordship's question to refer to the confiscation, in the Confederate States, of property and debts belonging and due to British subjects resident, or having a commercial domicile, in the United States. In our opinion, no distinction can, in strictness of international law, be taken, for the purposes of this question, between such British subjects and citizens of the United States. The general question, whether belligerents may, by the law of nations, confiscate the property of, and debts owing to, private persons, subjects of the enemy, within its territory, has been the subject of controversy, and a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, in the time of Lord Ellenborough, is adverse to the existence of this right.* It appears to us, however, that this decision is outweighed by a considerable preponderance of authority among the writers on international law; and that the power of confiscating such property and debts is, in the abstract, recognized by the law of nations. The instances, however, of its exercise, in modern and civilized times, are so rare, and have been so generally condemned, that it may almost be said to have become obsolete. The conclusion of Wheaton ("Elements," 6th edition, p. 369) is thus expressed:—

"It appears, then, to be the modern rule of international usage, that property of the enemy found within the territory of the belligerent State, or debts due to his subjects by the Government or individuals at the commencement of hostilities, are not liable to be seized and confiscated as prize of war. This rule is frequently enforced by Treaty stipulations, but, unless it be thus enforced, it cannot be considered as inflexible, though an established rule."

The rule, as it has been beautifully observed,† "like other precepts of morality, of humanity, and even of wisdom, is addressed to the judgment of the Sovereign. It is a guide which he follows or abandons at his will, and although it cannot be disregarded by him without obloquy, yet it may be disregarded. It is not an immutable rule of law, but depends on political considerations, which may continually vary."

These observations assume the existence of an ordinary state of war between two independent and foreign nations. The present case is infinitely stronger against the exercise of the right in question, being one of civil war between the different parts of one Confederation, during whose union the citizens of foreign States were invited and induced to settle indiscriminately in its various States, without the possibility of their contemplating such a disruption as has occurred. No notice has been given to them, or time allowed, which would enable them to prepare for such an emergency, or to separate their affairs from those of the citizens of either belligerent; and though liable, technically, to be deemed enemies, it is impossible to treat them as such, in this respect, without gross injustice, and a breach of that faith to which every State of the American Union was originally a party.

We think, under these circumstances, that the case is one for urgent remonstrances, in which it would be, of course, desirable to secure the concurrence of the other Great Powers, who, in common with Great Britain, are deeply interested in the question.

As to instructions to be given to British Post Office Agent at Panamá with reference to payments under the Postal Convention, in the event of Panamá ceasing to be a member of the New Granadian Confederation.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Post Office dated the 11th instant, in which the Postmaster-General has requested your Lordship's opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to the British Post Office Agent at Panamá, as to the course which he should pursue with reference to payments under the Postal Convention, should Panamá cease to be a member of the New Granadian Confederation.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that, under the present uncertain and distracted state of affairs in New Granada, Her Majesty's Government have, as yet, abstained from any formal act of recognition of the Government of General Mosquera, who appears to have succeeded in establishing his authority at Bogotá, and to have been named Provisional President of "The United States of New Granada."

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that, under these circumstances, your Lordship would be glad to learn my opinion, at my earliest convenience, as to the answer which should be returned to the question put by the Postmaster-General, in order that Mr. Henderson's instructions may be sent out by the mail of the 17th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, I have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the event alluded to as approaching by Mr. Henderson, namely, of the State of Panamá formally and actually "ceasing to be a State of the Confederation of New Granada," and of "the Postmaster at Panamá, named under the Constitution, ceasing to hold office in virtue of it," it will not be proper for Mr. Henderson, without the assent of the Government of the Republic of New Granada, to pay to such Postmaster the transit duty under Article XX of the Postal Convention of May 24, 1847.

In the event of such Postmaster ceasing to be an officer in the service of the "Republic of New Granada," and of the Post Office at Panamá ceasing to be a Post Office of the Republic, it would be, in my opinion, inconsistent with the text, spirit, and intention of the Convention, for Her Majesty's Government to pay (in effect) to the State of Panamá the transit duty which is accruing, and payable under the Treaty to the (Federal) Republic of New Granada, and not to any separate State.

The Convention being one between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the "Republic of New Granada," the payment should be made, not to any separate State, but to that Government which Her Majesty recognizes as being, de facto, the Government of the Republic; I presume that the Government of General Mosquera, who has established his authority at Bogotá as Provisional President, is entitled to be so considered. If this be so, and if his Government assents to the payment being made to the Post Office at Panamá, this will justify Mr. Henderson in continuing the payment.

In the event, however, of the State of Panamá formally separating herself from the Republic, and of there being no Government which Her Majesty's Government is prepared at present to recognize as the Government of the Republic, I can only suggest, in the last resort, that the payment should be withheld until such a Government exists; and that it should then be made to the officer at Panamá appointed to receive it by that Government.

ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION.

As to sons of British subjects born in one part of the Argentine Confederation being exempt from military service in the other during war against the territory in which they were born.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister to the Argentine Confederation (No. 88), in which he requests instructions whether under present circumstances in the River Plate, where two sections of the same nominal Confederation are actually at war with each other, the sons of British subjects born in the one part are entitled to exemption from military service in the other during a war against the territory in which they were born; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the question put by Mr. Thornton.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That no copy of the Law of the Confederation of 1857 is with the papers, and that this may be very material for the decision of the question, inasmuch as it would seem that this Law allows to the sons of British fathers born in the Argentine Provinces, the option of choosing their nationality between that of their actual birth and that of their parentage. If this be so, the sons of British fathers born in the Argentine Confederation should, in order to entitle themselves to British protection, exercise this option in the manner required by the Law.

If both the contending Parties are looked upon by Her Majesty's Government as belligerents, and one is not considered as in revolt against the other, Mr. Thornton may be instructed to urge upon the Government of the Confederation the argument which he suggests for the exemption of the class of persons in question, it being very desirable that the sons of British fathers born in the territory of the Confederation, although not internationally British subjects, excepting under the Law in question, should, if possible, be exempted from military service; but the actual state of this question, which has formed the subject of many previous Reports (see especially my Report of December 15, 1857, and Law Officer's Report, February 26, 1858), is left in some obscurity by Mr. Thornton's letter, and I cannot, therefore, frame any more distinct instructions to him.

I fear that if the local law affords to the sons of Englishmen born in the Argentine territory the means of choosing their nationality, they can only be entitled to the protection or intervention of Her Majesty's Government on their duly resorting to those means.

GREECE.

Succession to the Throne of Greece.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 9th February, 1860, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying papers respecting the succession to the Throne of Greece, together with a Memorandum which has been prepared in the Foreign

1861

Office showing the past history and present position of this question; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion (1) whether Prince Luitpold of Bavaria must be considered to have irrevocably renounced for himself and his children his and their right of succeeding to the Throne of Greece next after King Otho and his descendants, so that Prince Adalbert of Bavaria and his descendants are the next successors; or (2) whether (as Sir John Milbanke suggests in his despatch No. 101 of the 2nd January, 1860) Prince Luitpold could not legally prejudice the rights of his children, so that the question of succession must remain open until his Royal Highness' youngest child shall have attained his majority.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to draw our particular attention to the question (3) whether the succession is to take place from male to male, so that females should succeed only in the event of the entire failure of male heirs, or whether the succession of females is to take place indiscriminately with that of males in the order of primogeniture.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. That there is nothing to show that Prince Luitpold's renunciation (which is not before us, and of which we know not the precise tenour or form) is irrevocable even as to himself, or that it had any effect or operation whatever as to his children. Sir J. Milbanke's information would rather lead us to a contrary conclusion.

2. As at present advised, we are of opinion that there are no sufficient grounds for considering that this renunciation was binding and irrevocable, even as to Prince Luitpold himself, and we think that it could not prejudice the rights of his children.

Until the death of the present King of Greece the question, as it seems to us, must unavoidably remain open; and when that event happens we think that the right of succession will belong either to Prince Luitpold himself, or to the eldest of his sons then living, who may then be willing to accept it upon the terms of professing the Greek religion, as prescribed by the Constitution.

If any person who under the Convention and Treaty would at the time have a preferable right to the succession (if of the Greek religion), should decline to accept the vacant Throne upon these terms, we think that the effect of his non-acceptance and disqualification will be the same as if he were naturally dead, and that the next of the male line in the order of primogeniture who is duly qualified will be called to the succession.

In the meantime, and during any interval of absence or minority, the rights of the lawful succession would be protected, and the Kingdom governed by the Queen as Regent, or by another Regency duly appointed under the Greek Constitution; we think, therefore, that Prince Adalbert of Bavaria and his descendants cannot, in the present state of circumstances, during King Otho's lifetime be assumed to be the next successors.

3. As to the succession of females, we do not see how, under the circumstances stated, the Kingdom of Greece can be considered bound by the explanatory and supplementary Article of 1833; this Article was never formally communicated by any of the Powers parties to it to the Ministers of Greece, then an independent Kingdom, although governed by a Bavarian Regency. This Regency appears to have purposely concealed the Article from the Greek Ministry; this Article, moreover, has been formally repudiated (at what date we know not) and rejected by the Greek National Assembly, and apparently so treated with the acquiescence of the Powers parties to it.

It was designedly, and with the knowledge of the British and French Ministers at Athens, not only disregarded but expressly contravened by the Greek Constitution of 1844, and this without protest or objection on the part of these Powers; and it was not cited, mentioned, alluded to, or incorporated in the Treaty of 1852, although it would seem (from the Protocol of November 20, 1852), to have been at that time brought forward on the part of Bavaria, under protest on the part of Greece.

Under these circumstances the Crown will, in our opinion, descend to females as "descendants and heirs in order of primogeniture," though not until all the descendants and heirs of the male line of the common ancestor shall have been first exhausted.

If therefore King Otho should leave a daughter, and no male issue, such daughter would succeed in preference to Prince Luitpold or Prince Adalbert, or any of their issue.

DENMARK.

Permission to the Thames Shipbuilding Company to build two steam-vessels of war for Danish Government.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Home Office (dated the 1st November instant), forwarding a petition which has been addressed to Sir George Grey by the "Thames Iron Works and Shipbuilding Company," praying for the leave and license of Her Majesty to build two steam-vessels of war for the Danish Government, and to request that I would furnish your Lordship at my earliest convenience with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to this petition.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That section 7 of the statute 59 Geo. III, sec. 69, only (in effect) forbids the equipping, &c., of vessels for the service of foreign Princes or States "in order that they may be employed in the service of such Princes or States as transports or store-ships, or with intent to cruise or commit hostilities against foreign Princes," States, Governments, subjects, or citizens, with whom Her Majesty shall not then be at war.

The object of the enactment is not to prevent Her Majesty's subjects from building or equipping vessels for foreign Governments generally, but only to prevent their doing so when the ships are intended to be employed in hostilities against other foreign Governments with which Her Majesty is at peace.

I am not aware that Denmark designs to commit hostilities against any other Power; and I do not therefore see that, in the case suggested, any license is requisite. I believe that vessels of war are not unfrequently built for foreign Governments, without any license, and without any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

If it should hereafter turn out that the ships are in fact intended to be employed by the Danish Government, or by any other Government or person, in contravention of the Statute, Her Majesty's Government will doubtless revoke any license which might now be granted.

I observe that there has been no application from the Danish Government, and I would therefore suggest that, under the circumstances, no license should be issued in the case.

Request of Mr. A. Parsons to be furnished with two copies of the "Rules of Practice" for the British Consular Courts in China.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Ambrose Parsons, dated the 7th instant, requesting to be furnished with two copies of the "Rules of Practice" for the British Consular Courts in China; that your Lordship presumes that the Rules referred to are those forming Inclosure No. 1 in Mr. Bruce's despatch No. 19 of the 5th April last; and to request that I would take Mr. Parsons' letter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether, under the circumstances stated by him, his request ought to be complied with.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, I have taken this letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the application ought, in my opinion, to be complied with, if this can be done.

The applicant appears to be acting as the legal agent of a Chinese named King Kee, who is stated to have been an unsuccessful plaintiff in a suit against the executors of the late S. C. Beale, recently decided in the British Consular Court at Shanghae (the date of the decision is not given). He states that the Rules of Practice for the British Consular Courts in China are referred to in the record of the proceedings, that the Consul's "reading" of them is a material point, and that he is advised by Counsel whom he desires to consult on the case, that a perusal of them is essential to the fair consideration of the case. He has no means of procuring them excepting through the Foreign Office.

Under these circumstances, if the Foreign Office can furnish him with two copies of the "Rules of Practice" recently in force in the Consular Court at Shanghae, this should, in my opinion, be done.

If there are no copies of these particular Rules in the possession of the Foreign Office, this should be stated to the applicant, and the Consul should be forthwith required to forward several copies of them.

The establishment of such Rules of Practice is provided for in Section 37 of the Order in Council of June 13, 1853, and there can be no doubt but that, under the circumstances stated, some such Rules are in force at Shanghae, and that copies of them may be of material importance to the interest of the applicant's client, and of other parties in future cases.

I cannot recall to mind the contents of Inclosure 1 in Mr. Bruce's despatch No. 19 of the 5th April last.

I have frequently invited attention to the necessity of procuring copies of all such Rules from Consuls in Pagan and Mahometan countries.

UNITED STATES.

Permissive powers to subdue, seize, &c., to be granted under Act of Congress to the propeller "Pembroke," a private steamer about to proceed to China.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosure from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 563, October 17), respecting certain permissive powers to subdue, seize, &c. (in the nature of, but differing from, ordinary letters of marque), which it was in contemplation to grant, under an Act passed in the last session of Congress, to the propeller "Pembroke," a private steamer about to proceed to China; and requested that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer with regard to it.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose the volume of Statutes at large containing the Act of Congress.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of October the 1st from Mr. Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy of the United States, to Mr. Secretary Seward, alludes to certain communications from "R. B. Forbes, Esq.," and from "Messrs. J. and R. Forbes and Co.," and others, stated "to be therewith transmitted" (of which no copies are forthcoming).

We observe that Mr. Secretary Welles states that, under the second section of the Act of Congress of August 5, 1861, "Letters permissive, under proper restrictions and guards against abuse, might be granted to the propeller 'Pembroke' to meet the views expressed by Mr. Forbes;" but inasmuch as it does not appear what, in fact, were the views expressed by "Mr. Forbes," the real object and purpose of the "letters permissive" to be granted to the "Pembroke" is not apparent, nor is it apparent whether any and what authority to capture any vessels whatsoever has been or is about to be granted to her Mr. Secretary Welles adds, "This would seem to be lawful, and perhaps not liable to the objections," &c.; so that the legality of the President's issuing any instructions as to captures to the "Pembroke" seems open to question in Mr. Secretary Welles' opinion.

Subject to these observations, and in the somewhat imperfect shape in which the case is thus presented to us, we may observe that the Act of Congress of August 5, 1861 (37th Congress, section 1, chapter 48), is, in terms of section 1, expressly limited to the seizure of vessels built, purchased, fitted out in whole or in part, or held for the purpose of being employed in the commission of any piratical aggression, search, restraint, depredation, or seizure, or in the commission of any other act of piracy as defined by the Law of Nations. And the 2nd section only authorises the President to instruct public armed vessels, vessels sailing under the authority of any letters of marque and reprisal granted by the Congress of the United States, or the commanders of any other suitable vessels, to subdue, seize, and take, and if on the high seas to send into any port of the United States, any vessel or boat built, purchased, fitted out, or held as in the 1st section of the Act mentioned.

From this it appears to us that the "Pembroke" can only be authorized to make captures of vessels intending to commit, or actually guilty of, piracy, as "defined by the law of nations;" and we have already expressed our opinion that Confederate privateers cannot rightly be so considered: but whatever may be the construction which the Courts of the United States (especially the Supreme Court) may put upon this act, there is nothing in it to authorize or justify the President to instruct commanders of private vessels, not having letters of marque and reprisal granted by Congress, to make captures of neutral vessels, or even of merchant-vessels the property of citizens of the Southern or Confederate States, or of merchant-vessels the property of citizens of the United States, not intending to commit, or being guilty of, acts of piracy as defined by the law of nations. Non constat that the President entertains any such intention; and it is probable that it is only his intention to instruct the "Pembroke" to capture (Southern) Confederate privateers—a design with which Her Majesty's Government will not probably be disposed to interfere.

It is observable that the first paragraph of Mr. Welles' letter contains a statement that he is not aware that Congress, which has the exclusive power of granting letters of marque and reprisal, has authorized such letters to be issued against the insurgents.

Draft of Convention between Great Britain and France, for the mutual extradition of convicts escaping from British and French Guiana.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th November instant, stating that the Ordinance passed by the Legislature of British Guiana for the extradition of criminals convicted of certain crimes, who may escape from Cayenne into that colony, which formed the subject of our Report of the 22nd May last,* having been confirmed by the Queen, your Lordship instructed Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris to communicate it to the French Government, with a request that they would cause reciprocal arrangements to be made in their colony; that your Lordship has received from his Excellency a despatch in reply, in which he incloses a copy of a note from the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, submitting, for the approval of Her Majesty's Government, a draft of Convention between the Queen and the Emperor of the French, for the mutual extradition of convicts escaping from their colonies in Guiana.

No. 1,248, and the correspondence which has taken place on this subject since our Report, and to request that we would state to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the proposal of the French Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That throughout the former correspondence on this subject the Law Officers' Reports and the Colonial Ordinance, February 18, 1861, the passing of a similar French Colonial Ordinance, and not the negotiation of an international Convention, has been contemplated and provided for, as the best mode of securing the common object (see section 7 of the above Ordinance), for which no Convention appears to us to be necessary or expedient.

On the passing of a Colonial Law in French Guiana, such as is contemplated by that section, the British Colonial Ordinance will at once come into operation and effect the object in view; and no Convention will dispense with the necessity for such a law.

We must observe, moreover, that Article 4 of the "Projet de Convention" is not in conformity with section 2 of the Ordinance, under which the conviction of a named individual can alone be proved by the production of a document, namely, a certified copy of the "arrêt de condamnation."

The other requisite facts, such as the identity of the person charged before the Magistrate with the person named in the "arrêt de condamnation," and the fact of his escape from French Guiana after conviction, must be proved by extrinsic evidence.

We would suggest that an explanatory statement to this effect should be returned to the proposal of the French Government.

Claim of Dutch Consul at Jerusalem for the delivery to him of a Jew named Eliakim, sentenced to imprisonment by the British Consular Court whilst under British protection.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 19, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying two despatches from Mr. Finn, Her Majesty's Consul at Jerusalem (No. 33, June 21, and No. 47, September 30, 1861), relative to the demand made by the Consul of the Netherlands in that city, for the delivery to him of a Jew named Eliakim, a Dutch subject, but who had hitherto been under the protection of the British Consulate, and who had been sentenced to imprisonment by the British Consular Court; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be given to the Consul in regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That Eliakim, the person who has been imprisoned by Consul Finn, is admitted by the Consul, in his despatch No. 47, to be a Dutch subject, and he is claimed as such, and his release demanded by the Netherlands Consul.

Under these circumstances, the fact of his having apparently, in the absence of any Netherlands Consulate at Jerusalem, enjoyed (howsoever) British protection for many years, and of his not having disputed the jurisdiction of the Consul, or claimed exemption from it on the ground of his national character, will not operate so as to justify the Consul in detaining him in custody, and he should, in our opinion, be forthwith liberated, and should no longer be considered as subject to British jurisdiction or entitled to British protection.

We do not find in the papers any very clear statement of the circumstances of the case, or of the precise terms or grounds of the sentence or order of the Consul under which Eliakim has been imprisoned. Although the Consul uses the words "prisoner," "sentence," "offence," prosecutor," and so forth, yet we collect that it was, in fact, an order made in a civil suit, and not in a criminal prosecution, and that the imprisonment was in the nature of a committal for contempt for not producing certain accounts. Under these circumstances, we cannot express any opinion upon the merits of the case, or the propriety or legality of the Consul's proceedings, and we do not understand that our opinion is desired on the subject of the Consul's proceedings as to the Jews in general, in connection with their system of excommunication. Refusal to permit the "Alliance" and "Gondar" to leave the port of Beaufort, although these vessels sought to leave the port within fifteen days from the commencement of the blockade of that port.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 20, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 560, October 17th), inclosing, with other papers, a note which he had addressed to the United States' Secretary of State, requesting that orders might be issued to permit the British vessels "Alliance" and "Gondar" to leave the port of Beaufort, in North Carolina, on the ground that the time at which these two vessels sought to put to sea was within fifteen days from the commencement of the effective blockade of that port.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a despatch from Lord Lyons, inclosing a copy of a note from Mr. Seward, declining to comply with his Lordship's application; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I might have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add, for my information, a letter and its inclosure from the Admiralty, showing that the "Alliance" is the vessel, the master of which applied to Rear-Admiral Milne for advice in regard to the blockade under the circumstances stated in the Admiralty letter of the 19th of August. This letter, as well as my Report thereon, were also sent therewith.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I regret to say that I cannot see what more can be done in either of these cases with any prospect of success.

The United States' Government refuses to give leave for the unmolested egress of these vessels, not admitting that the blockade of Beaufort only commenced, as suggested, on the 6th September. If it be true that this port was never, in fact, blockaded at any time previously to the 6th September last, such refusal is at variance with the official announcement of the United States (which, however, I have not before me), to the effect that vessels would be allowed to leave blockaded ports unmolested for fifteen days after the commencement of the blockade.

But Mr. Seward, in his letter to Lord Lyons of October 18th, in effect, suggests that the blockade of Beaufort commenced at some previous period—at what date he does not state; and he suggests that it may have been "accidentally interrupted" at the time when they entered it.

If the fact was as suggested by Mr. Seward, I consider that his refusal is justifiable.

With respect to the "Alliance," it unfortunately appears that on the 13th August she cleared out from St. John's, New Brunswick, for Havana (see the Controller's certificate, Inclosure 12 in Lord Lyons' No. 560), but she entered Beaufort on September 22nd (Forest, the master's, affidavit, Inclosure 7 in Lord Lyons' No. 560). Her master had, on the 6th August, applied to Admiral Milne for advice, representing that he was bound to the Havana (Inclosure in Admiralty letter of August 19th); and it also appears that she had been, on the 27th May, boarded by the United States' steamer "Union," and "informed of the existing blockade of all the coast of the United States south of Maryland," which notice was indorsed on the ship's manifest.

This notice would not have justified her capture, if bound to Beaufort when no blockade of that port existed; but inasmuch as, after such notice, her master appears to have misrepresented her destination, both to the British Admiral and to the British Custom-house authorities, there is a presumption that he designed to break some blockade, and as she is now (howsoever) in the port of Beaufort, which is actually blockaded, I do not consider that Her Majesty's Government can properly take any further steps in her behalf.

Condemnation of the "William Arthur," alias "Sarah Ann Roe," and cargo, belonging to a British subject, Mr. D. Merrilees.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 21, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us three despatches and their inclosures, from Her Majesty's Consul at Portland (Nos. 46, 48, and 49), respecting the sentence of condemnation pronounced by Judge Ware, in the United States' District Court, upon the British schooner "William Arthur" and her cargo; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th November instant, transmitting the previous papers in the case of the "William Arthur."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That John Douglas Merrilees, who appears to have been the owner of the "William Arthur," and was the claimant before the Court, although a natural-born British subject, and never having renounced his allegiance, appears to have been long domiciled in the United States, and to have been resident at Wilmington, North Carolina, in the Confederate States; when, on the 7th August, he purchased at Portland, in Maine, the vessel then called the "Sarah Ann Roe" (a United States' vessel), and procured from the British Consul a provisional certificate of registry for her; he partially loaded her at Portland with cargo; she was cleared for the Danish island of St. Thomas in the West Indies; and she was seized by the Customs' Collector at Portland on the 23rd August, as she was leaving that harbour. Her owner was domiciled in the United States, and every material fact, down to, and including, the seizure of the vessel, took place within the territorial limits of the United States; and we do not consider that, under the circumstances, the mere fact of her having a provisional certificate of British registry will entitle her to be considered (internationally) a British ship, whatever the effect of her being so considered might be.

She was proceeded against not as a prize, but for confiscation under the Municipal Law, as contained in two Acts of the Congress of the United States: one of August 6, 1861, cap. 60, apparently called the "Confiscation Act;" another of July 13, 1861, cap. 3, prohibiting all commercial intercourse between the United States and the Confederate States; and on the ground that her destination for St. Thomas was only colourable and false, and that she was really destined for Wilmington, North Carolina.

The Judge appears, from Consul Murray's No. 49, to have ultimately condemned her on both grounds; in other words, for violating both the Acts of Congress referred to. His printed Judgment refers only to the Act of August 6, 1861.

Not having these Acts at the present time before us, it is impossible for us to offer any remarks upon the Judgment, so far as it relates to the construction of the Act of August 6, 1861; and the terms and reasons of the Judgment relating to the Act of July 13, 1861, are not before us.

There appears, however, to have been evidence before the Court to warrant the conclusion that the real destination was not St. Thomas but Wilmington; and we are of opinion that it is competent to the Legislature of the United States to forbid, under penalty of confiscation, all trade and intercourse between ports in its own possession and under its own actual dominion and the Confederate States; and for the Municipal Courts, upon adequate proof, legally to enforce this penalty against ships seized within their territorial limits, and owned by persons resident, or commercially domiciled, in the Confederate States. The prohibition of "aiding, abetting, and promoting" the insurrection, so far as such acts should, or might, be committed within such actual possession and dominion, and by persons so resident or domiciled, was also within the competence of the United States' Legislature, and equally, therefore, enforceable by the Court. We therefore see no sufficient ground in this case for any intervention by Her Majesty's Government.

If the Judge has misconstrued the Municipal Law of the United States, or if he has misapprehended the facts, we conceive that an appeal is open to the claimants. The Consul makes no communication to this effect.

There are some observations of the Judge—more especially as to neutrality and insurgents—which are open to criticism, but we see no practical object to be gained by offering any remarks thereon under the circumstances.

In the above observations we have confined ourselves to the actual case and circumstances; and we have not felt ourselves called upon to express any opinion as to what the position and right of Mr. Merrilees would have been if he, being a British subject, had not been resident in the (originally) United States, or commercially domiciled there.

Application for Government Grant towards erecting a Scotch Church at Paris.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 21, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 14th of May, 1860, approving, with certain amendments, the accompanying draft of an instruction which your Lordship proposed to give to Her Majesty's Consuls at ports and places where Church establishments were formed and maintained under the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Convener of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, inquiring whether subscriptions of British subjects who neither resided at nor resorted to Paris could be taken into account in determining the amount of the contribution which Her Majesty's Government might by law be enabled to grant towards the erection of a Scotch Church in that capital; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, under the 10th and 11th sections of the Act, such subscriptions could be so taken into account.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

GENERAL.

Subscriptions of British subjects who neither reside at nor resort to Paris cannot be taken into account.

That in our opinion the subscriptions of British subjects who neither reside at nor resort to Paris cannot be taken into account in determining the amount of the contribution which Her Majesty's Government may by law be enabled to grant towards the erection of a Scotch Church in that capital. The question arises under the 11th section of the 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87; and although the words "resorting to or residing at such foreign port or place," occurring in the 10th, are not to be found in the 11th section, it appears to us that the intention with reference to the classes of private subscribers was the same, both as regards the current expenses of supporting Chaplains and the like, and the cost of erecting or hiring churches and other buildings and premises, within the scope of the Act of Parliament. In principle, and in point of convenience, there is no apparent difference between the two cases; and the provision in section 11, that the annual accounts to be transmitted to the Consul under that clause are to be of such sums of money only as are "actually raised at any such port or place as aforesaid" appear to us to place the meaning of the section, in this respect, beyond the reach of any reasonable doubt.

Arrival at Southampton of the Confederate steamer "Nashville," having on board the crew of a vessel destroyed at sea.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, therewith, the inclosed letter to the Admiralty covering telegrams received from Southampton, by which it appeared that the Confederate steamer "Nashville" had arrived at that port, having captured two days before, and destroyed at sea, an American vessel bound to Havre, and having on board her, at that time, the crew of the said steamer; and to request that we would take the matter into our immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship what instructions should be given to the naval or other authorities on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we infer from the expressions used by Captain Patey, R.N.,—"Confederate war-steamer 'Nashville,' of two guns and eighty men, just arrived from Bermuda: she is commanded by Captain Pegram,"—that the "Nashville" is a regularly commissioned war-steamer, in the service of the Confederate Governuent, and that Captain Pegram is a commissioned officer in their service. Unless, on further inquiry, this should not appear to be the case, we see no necessity for any instructions being given to the naval or other authorities on the subject. Her Majesty's Government has recognized the Confederate States as a belligerent Power; and the official letter to the Admiralty and other Departments, reported on by the Law Officers June 1st ultimo, only prohibits the ships of war of either belligerent from carrying prizes into British ports.

If any attempt should be made, in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act, to increase her warlike force within British jurisdiction, it should be prevented.

Case of the "Nashville."

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 23rd November instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 22nd November instant,* upon the case of the "Nashville," he was directed to transmit to us the following papers, viz.:—

Not to be allowed to equip more completely as a vessel of war in a British port.

1. The draft of a letter which was addressed, on the 22nd of November instant, to the Admiralty and Home Office, requesting that directions might be given that the "Nashville" should not be allowed to equip herself more completely as a vessel of war, or to take in guns or munitions of war.

Destruction of the "Harvey Birch" by the "Nashville."

2. A note from Mr. Adams, the United States' Minister at this Court, inclosing papers received from the United States' Consul in London, respecting the destruction by the "Nashville" of the American vessel "Harvey Birch," and requesting that Her Majesty's Government will cause an inquiry to be made into the circumstances attending that proceeding, and will adopt such measures as the case, upon investigation, may seem to demand.

3. The draft of the note in which your Lordship has acknowledged the receipt of that communication; and

4. Letters received from the Admiralty giving particulars respecting the "Nashville" and her officers and crew.

Proceedings in 1793–94 with regard to privateering. Case of the "Maury."

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state to us, with reference to the observations in the concluding portion of Mr. Adams' note, that your Lordship has given directions for the preparation of a Memorandum respecting the case of the barque "Maury," referred to by him; and that your Lordship directed Mr. Layard to call our attention to the proceedings as to privateers, which occurred in the United States in 1793-94; and to request that we would take Mr. Adams' note into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to any proceedings which it is incumbent upon Her Majesty's Govenment to take in compliance therewith, and generally with our advice as to the course to be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose the correspondence respecting the case of the "Bermuda," referred to by Mr. Adams.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, subject to any questions of Imperial policy which are beyond our province, we are unable to point out any steps which it is incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to take in compliance with Mr. Adams' letter, other than those which it has already taken, namely, to satisfy itself as to the character of the "Nashville," and of her officers and crew; and to give directions to prevent her from being fitted or equipped, or from augmenting or increasing her force within Her Majesty's jurisdiction, in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

The "Nashville" appears to be a Confederate vessel of war; her commander and officers have Commissions in the Confederate navy; some of them have written orders from the Navy Department, Richmond, to report to Lieutenant Pegram "for duty" on board the "Nashville;" and her crew have signed articles to "ship in the Confederate navy;" her having captured and burnt a United States' merchant-vessel on the high seas cannot, under these circumstances, be considered (to adopt Mr. Adams' words) as "voluntarily undertaken by individuals not vested with powers generally acknowledged to be necessary to justify aggressive warfare;" nor does it at all "approximate within the definition of piracy;" nor is it "an unauthorized act of violence;" and if (as Mr. Adams suggests) Her Majesty's Government is called on in this case, "either to recognize a belligerent, or to denounce a wrong doer," Her Majesty's Government must, upon the facts and documents now appearing, adopt the former course.

With reference to the allegation that some of her officers are to be put in command of vessels now fitting out in British ports for hostile purposes against the United States, we can only say that if reasonable evidence can be procured that such vessels are being so fitted out in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act, all parties concerned therein should be legally proceeded against, with the view to their being personally punished, and to the forfeiture of the vessels.

We may add (generally) that it will be competent to Her Majesty, as a neutral Power, either to designate the particular ports to which alone the national ships of the belligerents are permitted to resort, to limit the time for which, or to define the circumstances under which, they may so resort thereto; or to make and publish such general regulations with reference thereto as she may think proper: but, subject to such limitations, Her Majesty cannot interfere with the national ships of one party resorting to her ports in respect of hostile acts done on the high seas to the ships of the opposite party.

Italian Government not responsible for damage done to Mr. W. Taylor's property by the "Orwell."
No further steps should be taken in proceedings and sentences against Mr. and Mrs. Taylor.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 23, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th November instant, stating that with reference to former correspondence upon the subject of Mr. Watson Taylor's claim against the Italian Government, he was directed to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Turin upon this matter (Nos. 401 and 402), and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with any observations I might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as this case now stands, Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to take any further steps therein. It appears to me to be clearly established that the Italian Government is not responsible for the damage done to Mr. Taylor's property by the persons on board the "Orwell." With respect to the institution of the proceedings against Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, and the sentences passed on them, although I adhere to the view which I have hitherto taken of the character of such proceedings and sentences, yet, considering the opinion of the Advocate Chiapusso, October 10, 1861, the despatch of Sir J. Hudson, No. 401, and the statements of Baron Ricasoli upon the case, reported in Sir J. Hudson's No. 402, I cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps as to such proceedings and sentences.

Request of Messrs. Oliverson and Co. that a warrant may be served on Captain Peagrim, of the "Nashville," to deliver up the property taken from the "Harvey Birch."

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 26, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th November instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Oliverson, Lavie, and Peachey, of the same date, acting on behalf of Captain Nelson, the Commander of the American vessel "Harvey Birch," requesting that the Magistrates at Southampton may be authorized by Her Majesty's Government to issue a warrant or summons, for service upon Captain Peagrim, commanding the ship of war "Nashville," under the flag of the so-called Confederate States, calling upon him, by production of the authority under which he acts, to show cause why he should not deliver up to Captain Nelson the property belonging to his owners, which is alleged to be detained on board the "Nashville;" and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the answer which it may be proper to return to Messrs. Oliverson and Co.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we observe that this application comes from the attorneys of the party proceeding (Captain Nelson), who do not state that the Magistrates have directed them to address your Lordship.

Messrs. Oliverson may be informed that your Lordship has no jurisdiction or power to give any authority to the Magistrates either to issue any summons or warrant, or to do or abstain from doing anything in relation to the matter in question; and that your Lordship accordingly declines to interfere therein.

The law having been appealed to, it must take its course in the ordinary way; though (for your Lordship's guidance) it may be proper for us to add that, by law, no English Magistrate has jurisdiction over the Commander or crew of the "Nashville" in respect of acts done or property taken by her at sea, as a ship of war of a belligerent Power, acknowledged as such by Her Majesty, which character, from her papers (which have been produced), the "Nashville" appears undoubtedly to possess.

Forcible seizure of Messrs. Mason, Slidell, Mc Farland, and Eustis, from on board the Royal mail-steamer "Trent," by United States' screw-steamer "San Jacinto."

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 28, 1861.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th instant, stating that with reference to our report of the 12th instant,† giving our opinion upon certain questions put to us on the subject of the supposed intention of an United States' cruizer to intercept the West India mail-steamer with the view of getting possession of the persons of Messrs. Mason and Slidell, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing a Report from the Admiralty Agent on board the Royal mail steam-packet "Trent," of the circumstances under which Messrs. Mason and Slidell, together with their Secretaries, Messrs. Mc Farland and Eustis, were forcibly taken on the 8th instant from out of that steamer by an armed force from the United States' screw steamer "San Jacinto;" and to request that we would take this matter into our immediate consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this matter, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the conduct of the United States' officer commanding the "San Jacinto," as set forth in Commander Williams' letter, was illegal and unjustifiable by international law.

The "San Jacinto" assumed to act as a belligerent, but the "Trent" was not captured or carried into a port of the United States for adjudication as prize; and under these circumstances cannot be considered as having acted in breach of international law. It follows, that from on board a merchant-ship of a neutral Power, pursuing a lawful and innocent voyage, certain individuals have been taken by force. They were not, apparently, officers in the military or naval service of the Confederate Government. It does not appear that any papers whatsoever were demanded or taken by the captors, nor upon what charge or imputed offence (if any) the delivery of the prisoners was enforced. Her Majesty's Government will, therefore, in our opinion, be justified in requiring reparation for the international wrong which has been on this occasion committed.

Imprisonment, in irons, of nine British seamen in Fort Lafayette, found on board vessels captured for breaking blockade.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 2, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th November ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying papers,* respecting the case of nine British seamen who were confined for several days in Fort Lafayette, in irons, on the ground of their having been found on board of vessels captured for attempting to run the blockade.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that Lord Lyons was instructed to make a representation against the treatment to which those seamen were subjected, and to express the hope of Her Majesty's Government that due compensation would be awarded to them, but that the United States' Secretary of State maintains that that treatment was under the circumstances justifiable, and declines to award the compensation asked for; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to how far international law justifies the proceeding complained of, either on the ground that those seamen were prisoners of war, or on any other ground.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although the seamen in question appear to me to have been treated with most unjustifiable severity during their confinement, more especially by being put in irons, yet I observe that they have been set at liberty on the application of Lord Lyons, and I regret to say that I cannot, under the circumstances, advise Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps in the case.

They appear to have shipped and served voluntarily on board Confederate merchant-vessels, which were captured by United States' ships of war; and I am of opinion that the United States' Government was, under these circumstances, entitled, by strict international law, to treat them as prisoners of war. This abstract right was maintained by the Admiralty during the late war with Russia, even when relaxations were allowed in practice, on special applications from neutral Powers, whose seamen had been captured in Russian prizes.

In the first instance, and until the British Minister interfered on their behalf as being British subjects, the United States' Government only acted in accordance with international law and usage in treating them as prisoners of war; upon such intervention they were promptly set at liberty. I do not consider that, under these circumstances, the United States' Government has been guilty of any violation of international law or usage, or that any demand for compensation can be properly maintained by Her Majesty's Government.

Claim of D. Charlton (alias John Bull) for interference of British Government to obtain release of his wife and children from slavery, as British subjects.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 3, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th November ultimo, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 22nd January, 1858, in which I stated that Dimmock Charlton (alias John Bull), who was sold into slavery, and claimed compensation from the United States' Government, was not entitled to the interference of Her Majesty's Government in his behalf, owing to his not being a British subject, he was directed to transmit to me a correspondence which has passed between the Colonial Office and the Foreign Office,* by which it will be seen that Charlton now claims the interference of the British Government to procure the release of his wife and children, who are stated to be British subjects, and detained in slavery in the United States.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in interfering to procure the release of Charlton's wife and children.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, assuming the facts to be as suggested (that is to say, that the wife of Dimmock Charlton, otherwise John Bull, is the daughter of Francis and Mary Cox, who were free people of colour, natives of Nassau, Bahamas, and natural-born British subjects), I am of opinion that your Lordship's question must be answered in the affirmative.

These papers do not contain sufficient proofs to establish these facts; but the case appears to me to require, and deserve, a thorough investigation, which I would suggest should be undertaken, in the first place, by the Attorney-General at Nassau. With the assistance of Charlton, and the printed "Narrative" (with the papers), this officer might prepare a specific and intelligible statement for the guidance of Her Majesty's Government, and of the British Consuls at Savannah, New York, and Philadelphia, in their ulterior proceedings; more especially with regard to the proof of the necessary facts which can now be adduced.

Although this "Narrative" is, from want of specification of dates, places, and so forth, not such as will enable me to make use of it with effect, yet there are many persons and facts alluded to therein, by which it may, with Charlton's assistance, be rendered available for the purposes in view. (See, for instance, the statements at pages 12 and 13 of the liberation of Charlton's grand-daughter Ellen from slavery, by judicial proceedings before the Hon. Wm. Robertson, Judge of the county of Westchester, which were instituted and conducted by Mr. John Jay, District Attorney, apparently in 1859.) Charlton may be able to refer to other persons at Savannah, or elsewhere in the United States, and to suggest some measures which can be taken there to attain the object in view.

The Consul at Savannah (where the persons in question are apparently in slavery) should receive a copy of the papers and of the Attorney-General's statement, when it is prepared, and should be required to report fully on the case, taking a legal opinion if needful.

The suggestion (at page 6 of the "Narrative," which is also noticed by the Colonial Office, in Mr. Elliot's letter of October 16) to the effect that Consul Molyneux, of Savannah, himself holds slaves, requires serious attention.

Upon the whole I would observe, that although the case is at present presented in a very imperfect shape, and although there has been an extraordinary lapse of time and long acquiescence or silence on the part of the persons in questions, yet these circumstances are, to a great degree, explained by the very peculiar state of facts now disclosed. Charlton's extraordinary story is apparently credited both in the United States and by the Governor of the Bahamas, and is not without corroboration; he has recovered his freedom, and is within British jurisdiction; he states a primâ facie case on which he has long insisted, to the effect that his wife is a natural-born British subject, who is, together with her descendants, now unjustly held in slavery; and if this should turn out on investigation to be the fact, no effort should be spared to secure their liberation.

PORTUGAL.

Messrs. Yuille and Shortridge's claim.

Decision of the Senate of Hamburgh.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th November ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, inclosing a copy of the award of the Senate of Hamburgh, to whom the case of Messrs. Yuille and Shortridge was referred for arbitration by the Government of this country and of Portugal.

That this award has been communicated, by your Lordship's orders, to Mr. Gedge, the agent of Messrs. Yuille and Shortridge.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose a letter from him dated the 4th November ultimo, from the last paragraph in which it will be perceived Mr. Gedge has requested Her Majesty's Government "to require that the property in Madeira shall be forthwith authoritatively declared free from the Judgment registered against it;" and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, together with the previous correspondence, and report to your Lordship whether Her Majesty's Government are called upon to take the step requested by Mr. Gedge.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th November ultimo, transmitting therewith a copy of the "Identic Memorandum" upon this claim presented to the Senate of Hamburgh on the 8th March last, and also a letter from Mr. Gedge, supplying further particulars regarding the points raised by Mr. Gedge in his letter of the 4th November ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that your Lordship's question must receive an affirmative answer.

By the "Identic Memorandum" (dated March 8, 1861), "the whole case, including the question as to the amount of damages," was referred by the British and Portuguese Governments to the arbitration of the Government of the free city of Hamburgh; and by the first Article of that Memorandum, "the decision of the Senate on the matters submitted shall be considered absolutely final and conclusive, and shall be fulfilled without any objection, evasion, or delay whatever."

The "Judgment" (or decision) of the Senate, 21st October, 1861, in its first paragraph "recognises as law that the Portuguese Government is obliged to satisfy the British Government" that the sentence "given in the case of Senhor José d'Oliveira against Murdock, Shortridge, and Co., on the 1st of December, 1838, by the Tribunal of Commerce of the Second Instance in Lisbon, shall be treated as a legal and final judgment, and also to pay within the time fixed by the agreement of arbitration the damages which arose to the said British subjects in consequence of that sentence not having been hitherto treated as such a final judgment (that is to say, 20,296*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*)

The Senate has, therefore, decided:—

1st. That the Portuguese Government shall treat the sentence of the 1st December, 1838, as a legal and final judgment.

2nd. That it shall pay the above amount of damages which arose in consequence of that sentence not having been hitherto treated as such.

The Portuguese Government is bound to "fulfil" this decision on each point "without any objection, evasion, or delay whatever;" and it is as much bound so to do quoad the judgment as quoad the payment of the damages.

Under these circumstances we consider that Mr. Gedge's contention, in his letter of November 20th, is substantially well founded; and that any subsequent judgment to a contrary effect (or rather assuming to reverse the Judgment of 1838), such as that of November 10, 1848, must be treated as of no effect; and that the Portuguese Government may be properly called upon to take all such formal and legal steps as are necessary to "fulfil without any objection, evasion, or delay whatsoever," the decision of the Senate of Hamburgh; and as will, in accordance therewith, render the judgment of 1838 "legal and final" as regards all the property and rights of the claimants in Portugal.

The precise form of doing this is a matter for the consideration of the Portuguese Government; if (as suggested by Mr. Gedge) the removal of the former Judgment of 1848 from the register is competent to the Government, and if this step is also legally essential to the object in view, then such removal should be required by Her Majesty's Government.

It is obvious that unless and until the Judgment of 1838 is practically made legal and final in its operation so far as the claimants are concerned, the "decision" of the Senate will not be "fulfilled" within the terms or spirit of Article 1 of the "Identic Memorandum."

Case of Walter Foreman, a British subject, called upon to serve in the Norwegian army.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th November ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul-General in Norway (Nos. 48 and 49 of November 2, 1861), respecting the case of Walter Foreman, a British subject, who has been called upon to serve in the Norwegian army, and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion upon the steps to be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I presume there exists no Treaty stipulation on this subject, none being alluded to by the Consul.

No dates or facts are given as to the Norwegian domicil of Walter Foreman (the son), the person in question; it is not stated when he first came to Norway; whether he came animo manendi, or what he is doing there; it would seem that he is employed, in what capacity does not appear, in some factories belonging to Messrs. Sewell and Godman, British subjects, of which his father is foreman.

I cannot, in the present state of the facts, express any definite opinion on the legal operation of the Norwegian Military Service Law of 1857, or on the precise effect on this case of the words "foreigners who have acquired a fast domicilium in the country," therein. I can only suggest that the case should be referred to Her Majesty's Legation at Stockholm, with instructions to obtain the necessary information as to the facts and dates, and to take the best professional advice on the question of the probable decision of the Supreme Court as to the legal liability of Mr. Walter Foreman to military service under the particular law in question.

If such opinion should be adverse to his liability, the question may, in the first instance, be raised before the Supreme Court, in accordance with the provision to that effect in the Law of 1857. If otherwise, the case can only be represented to the Swedish Government on the ground that, inasmuch as all foreigners in England are practically exempt from compulsory service in the army (which service is voluntary in this country), the principle of reciprocity would seem to require that a similar exemption should be accorded to British subjects in Sweden and Norway.

If a Convention existed, British subjects would be exempt by the express terms of the Law of 1857; but, inasmuch as Norwegians in England in fact enjoy the exemption without a Convention, the principles of international comity and equity ought to secure to British subjects in Norway a similar exemption.

If this argument should fail, the exemption in question can only be secured by the negotiation of a Convention.

It will be desirable for Her Majesty's Government, in discussing this case, to know what course other foreign Governments, whose subjects are placed under the same liability by the Law of 1857, have taken, or are disposed to take, on this subject.

British Consul at Havre cannot withhold a clearance to the British ship "Bermuda" for a British port, although she may have violated Proclamation of Neutrality in American war.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 5, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Havre (No. 74, December 2), inquiring what course he is to pursue in regard to a request made to him by the master of the British ship "Bermuda," for a clearance to enable him to leave that port; and with reference to the circumstances detailed by Mr. Featherstonhaugh respecting the previous voyage of the "Bermuda," and to her having, as stated, violated Her Majesty's Proclamation of the 13th May last, relative to the hostilities in the United States, Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, with my opinion as to the instructions to be given to the Consul in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I cannot see any sufficient reason stated in the Consul's letter for his refusing to grant a clearance to the "Bermuda" from Havre to "a British port."

He does not state whether she intends to sail with cargo, or, if so, with what cargo, or to what port; nor does he state any other ground for refusing her a clearance than the fact that she sailed from West Hartlepool to Savannah, in August last, with arms and military stores, having cleared thence for "the Havana, the West Indies, and a final port of discharge in the United Kingdom or the continent."

This fact will not, in my opinion, of itself justify the Consul in now refusing her a clearance from Havre to a British port, and for thus detaining her (I presume indefinitely) at Havre.

I assume that she cannot leave Havre without a Consular clearance; if this be so (which should be explained), the Consul should, in my opinion, grant her a clearance for any British port, unless he has strong and specific grounds for suspecting that she is not, in fact, destined for any British port; in which event, he should state the grounds on which he relies, and again apply for instructions.

Memorial of Archbishop of Canterbury to the Queen to grant the Royal Licence for the consecration of the Rev. T. N. Staley as Bishop of the Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 6, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a Memorial from the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Queen, praying that Her Majesty would be pleased to grant her licence, under Her Royal Signet and Sign-Manual, authorizing and empowering his Grace to consecrate the Rev. Thomas Nettleship Staley, M.A., a British subject, whose sufficiency in good learning, soundness of faith, and purity of manners he has fully ascertained, to be Bishop of the United Church of England and Ireland in the Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands, and all the other dominions of His Majesty the King of Hawaii; and further praying that Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to assign the Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands, and all other the dominions of His Majesty the King of Hawaii, as the limit within which the said Rev. Thomas Nettleship Staley may exercise spiritual jurisdiction over the Ministers of British congregations of the United Church of England and Ireland, and over such other Protestant congregations as may be desirous of placing themselves under his authority, subject to such alterations in respect of the limits of the jurisdiction so to be exercised as may hereafter be made by Her Majesty's authority.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the draft of a licence to the effect prayed for by the Archbishop; and to request that I would take the Memorial of the Archbishop, as well as the draft of licence, into consideration, with reference to the Act 5 Vict., cap. 6, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion, at my earliest convenience, whether Her Majesty can properly be advised to issue the Royal licence, as prayed for by the Archbishop, in the terms of the proposed draft.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the expediency or propriety, in point of ecclesiastical or national policy, of Her Majesty being advised to issue a Royal licence for the consecration of a Bishop in the Sandwich Islands, I am not in a position to express any opinion; no particulars respecting this particular case being stated in his Grace's Memorial of the 23rd November, or being otherwise within my knowledge. I am not aware of any instance in which such a licence has been granted, excepting in the case of Jerusalem, hereafter mentioned.

Assuming that Her Majesty's Government is of opinion that it is proper to sanction the consecration in question upon general considerations of expediency, then Her Majesty may, in my opinion, be advised to issue the Royal licence, as prayed for by the Archbishop, in the terms of the inclosed draft, which appears to be legally in accordance with the statute 5 Vict., cap. 6 (referred to therein), empowering Her Majesty to issue such licences, and which, with the exception of two slight verbal alterations which I have noted in the copy herewith returned, appears to follow the precedent of a similar licence, dated the 6th November, 1841, for the consecration of Dr. Alexander as Bishop of the United Church of England and Ireland in Jerusalem, an instrument which was, I believe, settled by the then Law Officers of the Crown (see their Report of the 4th November, 1841).

Exemption of English mail-steamers, under Postal Convention of 1848 between Great Britain and the United States, from liability to seizure for six weeks after declaration of war.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 7, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying letter from Lloyd's, dated December 5, 1861, requesting information whether, under the Postal Convention between Great Britain and the United States of America, signed in December 1848, mail-steamers are especially exempted from liability to seizure for six weeks after a declaration of war; and to request that I would take this paper into consideration and report to your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, my opinion thereupon.

A copy of the Postal Convention was also inclosed for my information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the XXth Article of the Convention applies, in my opinion, to the ships themselves, and to the mails on board them; but I do not consider that it extends to the exemption of their cargoes or passengers, in case of war, from "impediment or molestation," absolutely, and without regard to their nature or character.

The mail-packets, for instance, could not rightfully claim to carry articles or persons "contraband of war," by virtue of this Article, without "impediment or molestation" flagrante bello; and inasmuch as all "trade with the enemy" in war, without the Royal license, is illegal in England, and in all probability will be considered illegal in the United States also, I do not see how the mail-packets could rightfully claim to carry any cargo between the belligerent countries in that event.

The operation of the XXth Article of the Convention appears to me to be limited to the specific object which was immediately in contemplation by its framers, namely, the conveyance of the mails by the mail-packets "without impediment or molestation," for the period specified, and the safe return of the vessels at the determination of that period; and it cannot be considered as having introduced any specific stipulations, so far as regards cargoes or passengers on board such vessels, in case of war.

NEW GRANADA.

Fundamental law of New Granada affecting the rights of foreigners, and more particularly their right to acquire real property.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 3rd December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in New Granada (No. 93), inclosing copy of a "Pact of Union," or Fundamental Law, issued by the Congress of State Plenipotentiaries sitting at Bogotá, and calling attention to the manner in which the rights of foreigners resident in New Granada may be affected by the articles of this law; and to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and report to your Lordship such observations as I might have to make thereupon, and more especially as to the question regarding the right of foreigners in New Granada to acquire real property.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there is no stipulation in the Treaty of Bogotá (1825) (which I assume to be the Treaty now in operation with New Granada) in favour of the acquisition of real property by British subjects; and the "most favoured nation clause" in Article IX does not extend to this subject. I do not, therefore, see how Her Majesty's Government can insist upon any alteration in favour of British subjects of the 9th Article of the "Pact of Union" of the 20th September, 1861, on the ground suggested by Mr. Griffith, namely, that by a Treaty between New Granada and France the right to acquire landed property is secured to Frenchmen.

Internationally speaking, and independently of Treaties, New Granada appears to me to be entitled to alter her own law in this respect; but if by such law, antecedently to the "Pact of Union" of the 20th September, 1861, foreigners possessed the right in question (which is not distinctly stated), the sudden abrogation of this right might give foreign Governments a just ground of remonstrance.

In this event, however, the combined action of the principal foreign Governments represented at Bogotá would be desirable, and the probability of success should also be considered.

Unless there is some prospect of securing such combination, and obtaining such success (as to which nothing is said by Mr. Griffith), and in the absence of any statement to the effect that British interests are seriously prejudiced by the 9th Article of the "Pact," I cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere, more especially considering that aliens are, by the law of England, subject to certain serious disabilities in respect to the acquisition and holding of real estate.

Threat of Dr. Barbieri to assassinate Prince Couza, unless his claims on the Moldavian Government were satisfied.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that with reference to our opinion of the 6th [9th] of September last,* on the case submitted to us by the Queen's Proctor, in regard to the complaint of Dr. Barbieri and others against the Moldavian authorities, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Jassy, inclosing a copy of a letter from Dr. Barbieri, who threatened to assassinate Prince Couza unless his claims on the Moldavian Government were satisfied; and requested that we would take Mr. Churchill's despatch and its inclosure into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be given to the Consul-General in regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That, although it is possible that Consul-General Churchill has been mistaken in treating the expressions used by Dr. Barbieri, in his letter of the 8th November, 1861, as evidence of a serious purpose of assassination, yet we cannot say that Mr. Churchill was not fully justified in communicating to Prince Couza the parts of the letter relating to him. Nor, under these circumstances, as it appears to us, can the conduct of the Moldo-Wallachian Government, in taking precautions against Dr. Barbieri's entering the Roumain provinces, be made matter of international complaint, or, indeed, of any fair exception.

We understand that Dr. Barbieri and others refused to present themselves at Ismail, on occasion of a proposed investigation of their grievances; and we further collect that, under existing circumstances, Dr. Barbieri would be absolutely debarred from admission to Ismail.

In the event of Dr. Barbieri changing his mind, and desiring to appear at Ismail in support of his claims for compensation for alleged grievances, we would suggest the propriety of Her Majesty's Consul-General at Jassy using his best efforts with the Moldo-Wallachian Government for the purpose of obtaining permission, under proper precautions, to Dr. Barbieri to appear at Ismail, to remain there during the prosecution of his demands, and, after that, to retire, in safety, beyond the frontiers. Further than this, it does not appear to us that Her Majesty's Government can be fairly called upon to interfere.

Claim of Mr. D. Gangardi against the Turkish Government for value of jewels, plate, &c., supplied to widow of late Sultan Mahmoud.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th November last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from Mr. D. Gangardi, dated the 9th October last, calling upon Her Majesty's Government to interfere with the Porte in order to obtain the settlement of his claim for the value of jewels, plate, and other articles, supplied to a widow of the late Sultan Mahmoud.

Mr. Hammond likewise transmitted to us a despatch which had been received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople on the subject of this claim, and requested that we would take the inclosed papers into our consideration, and report our opinion to your Lordship as to the manner in which Her Majesty's Government should deal with Mr. Gangardi's case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That Sir Henry Bulwer, at page 7 and following pages of his despatch No. 730, states reasons which appear to us very forcible for acting upon the general principle of leaving tradesmen, who supply goods to the Sultanas, to do so at their own risk, without officially interfering in their favour; and it appears from Mr. Grech's letter to Sir Henry Bulwer, February 27, 1861 (P.), paragraph 5, that in August 1858, and in December 1859, his Excellency (very properly, in our opinion), issued warnings to British subjects against giving credit to the ladies of the Imperial harems without the sanction of the Comptroller of the Sultan's household. Yet, in this particular case, it is urged (and not denied by Sir Henry Bulwer), that these goods were supplied previously to those dates (in 1856 and 1857), at a time when the Sultana's credit had not been questioned or controlled; and it appears that the Sultana, to whom these jewels were supplied (Hussum Melek), gave bonds for the amount of the debt, the validity of which bonds is not disputed; the Consular Court appears to have no jurisdiction; the Turkish Government has omitted either to restore any of the jewels, as suggested by Mr. Gangardi, or to enforce the debt against the separate property of the Sultana.

Lastly, we observe that Sir Henry Bulwer has formally taken up the claimant's case; that the Turkish Government has never disputed the amount, or formally contested its own liability in respect thereof; and that the Grand Vizier (page 5 of Sir Henry Bulwer's No. 730) in September last is stated to have "admitted the validity of the claim;" Mr. Gangardi is brought to the verge of insolvency by the long delay which has occurred, in a case formally taken up by Her Majesty's Legation.

Under these peculiar circumstances, we see no sufficient reason why the Turkish Government should not be pressed to settle this claim, against its liability in respect of which it has shown no ground whatsoever; which the Grand Vizier has admitted to be valid; and which cannot, apparently, be enforced by any legal proceedings.

Draft Order in Council conferring Consular jurisdiction on Her Majesty's Consul in the Delta of the Danube.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th November ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 21st November, 1860, he was directed to transmit to us for our consideration, together with the former papers, a letter from the Treasury dated the 18th November last, inclosing a draft of an Order in Council for conferring Consular jurisdiction on Her Majesty's Consuls in the Delta of the Danube.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the accompanying despatches from the British Member of the European Commission for the Danube (Nos. 25 and 26 of 1861, Nos. 14 and 18 of 1860, and No. 3 of 1861), showing how the power of jurisdiction over British subjects on the part of the Commission has, in a recent case, been repudiated by the Consular Court at Sulina, and to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion regarding the accompanying draft Order in Council, and advise your Lordship as to the further steps which it may be proper to take for the purpose of carrying out the object in view.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this draft Order into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Welsby, having attended us in conference, has, in accordance with our instructions, amended the draft Order in Council in question so as to carry out the object in view.

We approve of the Order as thus amended, which we herewith transmit.

We would suggest the expediency of the present Commissioner, and his successor for the time being, receiving an appointment as Vice-Consul, with jurisdiction over a district embracing the Delta of the Danube, for the purpose of enforcing, against British subjects and Ionians, the regulations of the Commission in accordance with the provisions of this Order in Council.

Refusal of Governor of Sierra Leone to allow a French merchant-vessel to proceed up the Sierra Leone River beyond Freetown.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th December instant, stating that he was directed to inform me that upon the receipt of my letter of the 14th June last, your Lordship requested Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies to give the necessary directions, in order that the Governor of Sierra Leone might furnish information on the several points referred to in regard to his refusal to accede to the application of the French Vice-Consul at that place for permission for a French merchant-vessel to proceed up the Sierra Leone River beyond the harbour of Freetown.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to me a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of the Governor's further report on this subject; and to request that I would again take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my further opinion thereupon.

The previous correspondence was inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have again taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these papers (although they afford but very little additional information) tend rather to confirm than to alter the opinion which I have already expressed upon this case.

There appear to be no "regulations in force" (such as are alluded to by the French Consul), permitting foreign vessels to proceed up the river; only one French vessel (the "Messager de Sénégal") appears hitherto to have done this, but at what date or under what circumstances she did so does not appear.

Freetown is the only recognized port of import and export in the colony; and foreign vessels seem to be legally excluded from the coasting trade (if the vessel in question designed to engage in that trade, which is not clear). There is nothing additional forthcoming from the French Consul or Government in support of the application, and non constat that France intends to make any claim of right in the matter.

Under these circumstances, the Governor's refusal of the "preliminary authorisation" sought for by the French Consul, "in accordance" (as he alleged) "with the regulations in force," for the French ship "Aréquipa" to take cargo up the Sierra Leone River, appears to me to have been proper; and I would suggest that he should be instructed to pursue the same course with respect to all foreign vessels until he receives further instructions.

Bequest of Miss Rebecca Hussy for the redemption of slaves.

BY direction of Earl Russell you, on the 10th December, addressed a note to the Solicitor-General and myself, accompanied by a copy of a note from Mr. Fearon to you of the 15th November, and relating to a bequest by Miss Rebecca Hussy for the redemption of slaves; the money so originally bequeathed, with accumulations, now amounting to upwards of 21,000*l*. You desired that the Solicitor-General and I would favour Lord Russell with our opinion upon the point raised in your letter. I have to request that Lord Russell will excuse my expressing any formal opinion in the matter; seeing that Mr. Fearon was, in his own words, "acting for the Attorney-General" in addressing to you his note of the 15th November. Mr. Fearon is the Solicitor employed by the Attorney-General for the time being, with reference to all charities; and, in applying to you as he did, he was, in fact, seeking for information by the possession of which he might be the better enabled to make suggestions to me as to the adoption of a proper "scheme." Of the fitness of any such scheme, as a matter to be proposed to the Court of Chancery, I must, in the end, of necessity judge. Under these circumstances, I trust Lord Russell will accept my excuse for non-compliance with the letter of your request.

Liability of a British female to the jurisdiction of the Consular Court in the case of her husband's bankruptcy.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 18, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th December instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence inclosed respecting questions which had been in discussion between Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople and the Judge of the Consular Court touching the liability of a British female to the jurisdiction of the Consular Court in the case of her husband's bankruptcy, in respect to her interest in landed property, which, as a female, she was allowed, by a fiction of the Turkish law, to hold, but which her husband could not hold; and (touching) the further question, incidentally raised in the discussion, as to the rights of British subjects to have recourse to a Turkish Tribunal in the first instance, thereby setting aside the jurisdiction of the Consular Court. On the latter point, Mr. Hammond was pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to refer us to the 15th and 16th Articles of the Capitulations; and, on the former point, to observe that there did not appear to be any recorded agreement between this country and Turkey, but that the marked passage of the Hatti-Humayoun of 1856 (inclosed therewith) would throw some light on the principles by which the tenure of land by foreigners in Turkey is regulated.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion on the points raised in them, and on the instructions which should be sent to Sir Henry Bulwer and Mr. Hornby respectively.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the Consular Court cannot act directly in rem, or give possession of the land to any person against the title recognized by the Turkish law, nor can the Turkish authorities be required to do so, because their law treats all British subjects as incapable of holding land in Turkey. For this reason, Mr. Logie's demand upon the Governor of Smyrna seems to us to be untenable. And although, as against a person capable of contract, the Consular Court might, in accordance with the English law, enforce, in personam, the performance of all competent acts necessary for the purposes of justice, even as to Turkish land, yet an insuperable difficulty appears to arise in a case between husband and wife, from the circumstance that, by English law, a married woman is incapable of binding herself by any personal contract, and cannot be compelled to execute any conveyance or do any act as if she were so bound.

According to the strict construction of the 16th Article of the Capitulation (2 Hertslet, 350), it appears to us that the British Government would be entitled to object to any Turkish Judge, or Governor, intermeddling with any difference or dispute between British subjects, whether relating to land in Turkey or to any other matter whatsoever; and thus it is, accordingly, incompetent for the Governor of Smyrna to entertain such an application, by one British subject against another, as that which has been made to him on behalf of Mr. Crampton, as Mrs. Whittall's mortgagee. But whether it would be expedient for Her Majesty's Government, in such cases as the present, to insist on the strict letter of the Capitulation, having regard to the fiction under which alone English subjects can hold land in Turkey, and to the inability of the Consular Court to exercise jurisdiction with reference to such land, is a question of public policy which it is not for us to decide.

Seizure and confiscation of vessels in time of war.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 18, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 688), inclosing copies of a circular issued on the 12th ultimo by the United States' Secretary of the Treasury, with regard to the seizure and confiscation of vessels under the 6th section of the Act of Congress of the 13th July last; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose, for my information, the further documents referred to by Lord Lyons (Nos. 477 and 507); and to state that the Act of Congress alluded to would be found at page 255 of the volume of Statutes at Large which forms an inclosure in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 477 of the 9th September last.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as regards the general principle involved in this case, the practice of confiscating in time of war (as res hostium) all enemy's interest in merchant-vessels is in accordance with the law and usage of nations.

Her Majesty's Government acted upon this principle during the last war with Russia.

Persons having commercial domicil in enemy's territory considered and treated as enemies.

All persons having commercial domicil in the enemy's territory are legally considered and treated as "enemies," so far as regards their property or interest in enemy's ships, whatever may be their nationality by birth or descent.

This principle is, by the 6th section of the Act of Congress of July 13, 1861, applied to "any ship or vessel belonging, in whole or in part, to any citizen or inhabitant of any State or part of a State whose inhabitants are declared by the President's Proclamation to be in a state of insurrection." Her Majesty's Government has, in effect, admitted the right of the United States' Government to act towards the Confederate States as its enemies in war.

The circular in question is founded on, and in accordance with, this section of the Act in question; it contains directions as to legal proceedings against such vessels, it provides for their discharge on bail "according to the course of Admiralty proceedings," their release before the commencement of proceedings on bond, and so forth, under certain circumstances. These instructions do not appear to me illegal or unreasonable. Lord Lyons does not suggest that any particular difficulties or objections to the working of the Act, or to the effect of the circular, are likely to arise, or that any special injury to British interests is to be apprehended; and, under these circumstances, I see no reason for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

Illegal arrest of a British subject, Mr. W. B. Forwood, at New York.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 19, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 694), reporting the circumstances attending the arrest of Mr. W. B. Forwood, a British subject, at New York; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

The previous correspondence which has taken place on this subject was inclosed for my information.*

* To Lord Lyons, Nos. 389 and 438; Mr. Forwood, October 25; to Mr. Forwood, November 4; Mr. Forwood, November 6; to Mr. Forwood, November 11; Mr. Forwood, November 16; to Mr. Forwood, November 29, 1861.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the arrest of Mr. W. B. Forwood was, in my opinion, illegal and unjustifiable; yet, under existing circumstances, I cannot advise your Lordship to make any formal demand for reparation on the United States' Government.

Mr. Forwood was arrested on landing at New York from England, on the morning of the 9th October, apparently without any warrant, and on no definite charge. His person was searched, and he was kept in confinement at the police station until the evening of that day, when he was spontaneously discharged by the Superintendent, without any application having been made on his behalf.

On the 12th October he wrote to the Consul stating the facts, and saying that he "did not look for any redress."

On the 13th November he again wrote to the Consul, as follows:—

"I am sorry to see, by the papers, that my father has taken the subject of my arrest up very warmly; but however, as he has done so, I shall be happy to do anything I can that you may think will be of service to you in the matter."

Lord Lyons did not hear of the case until three weeks after it had occurred, and his Lordship and Consul Archibald have, in my opinion, rightly abstained, under these, circumstances, from making any official application to the United States' authorities on the subject of Mr. Forwood's arrest.

Mr. Forwood himself did not at the time, and has not as yet made any distinct request that his case should be taken up by Her Majesty's Government; he has, on the contrary, intimated that he has personally no such desire or intention; and I can see no prospect of any satisfactory result from any official application being now made by your Lordship to the United States' Government on the subject.

This case is one of a much less aggravated character than others which have already occurred in the United States in which Her Majesty's Government has not been able to obtain any satisfactory explanation or redress; and upon the whole I cannot advise your Lordship to take any further steps in it.

Privileged position of the "Trent" as a subsidized mail-packet.
Difference recognized by law of nations between postal packets and merchant-vessels.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 21, 1861.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying communication from Mr. Murlock (dated December 11), relative to the privileged position of the "Trent" as a subsidized mail-packet, and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether the difference between postal packets and other merchant-vessels is recognized by the law of nations.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That your Lordship's question must, in our opinion, be answered negatively. We are not aware of any recorded case in which any substantial difference between postal packets and other merchant-vessels has been recognized by the law or usage of nations, so far as regards the exercise of belligerent rights over them. In expressing this opinion, however, we assume that the postal packets alluded to, are, in point of fact, and by the municipal law of the country under whose flag they sail, the property of private individuals, firms, or companies; and that they are not, by charter-party or otherwise, engaged or employed generally by the Government, or on its behalf, or in its service exclusively, for a definite period; but that their owners merely contract specifically with the Government, in consideration of certain payments, to carry the mails, and one or more officers in charge thereof, at certain times, between certain places. Under such circumstances, we are of opinion that, by the existing law of nations, and independent of Treaty, the vessels in question are not entitled to be recognized in any other character than that of ordinary merchant-vessels.

We may observe that the peculiar class of vessel in question has (in effect) had its inception in modern times; and that the question of their international character, or status inter gentes, has not (as far as we are aware) as yet been seriously considered.

The notorious character and employment of such vessels, their regular periodical voyages between certain defined ports, and their carrying by special contract with their Government, and in its interest and service, the Post Office mails and Government despatches, in charge of a naval officer, including (we believe), in many cases, the mails and official despatches of many different nations, entitle them, by international comity, to peculiar consideration; more especially as regards the exercise of belligerent rights over them when they are neutrals. It is obvious, for instance, that as regards visiting, searching, detaining, or capturing them, their mails, despatches, passengers, and cargo, many considerations arise which would not apply to the case of ordinary merchant-vessels; but we cannot say that they are entitled, by international law, to the peculiar rights and privileges of those ships which are either the property of, or in the exclusive service of, the State; or that they can be said to hold any peculiar or intermediate status between such ships and ordinary merchant-vessels. We beg to call attention to some observations on this subject in Hautefeuille, "Droits et Devoirs des Nations Neutres en temps de Guerre Maritime," vol. ii, page 463 et seq., and to a note thereupon in Mr. Laurence's (sixth) edition of "Wheaton's Elements of International Law," at page 567.

We may add that, in a letter just published by M. de Hautefeuille himself, the doctrine that packet-boats of this class are to be deemed public vessels, and as such exempted from the right of visit and search in time of war, appears to be expressly denied; and the doctrine laid down, and acted upon by Lord Stowell, as to neutral vessels sailing under convoy (the "Maria," 1 C. Robinson, 340), seems to us to be quite inconsistent with the supposition that the character of the "Trent" could be altered so as to exclude the exercise against her of any belligerent right which might otherwise have been competent by the mere presence on board her of an officer of Her Majesty's navy in charge of the mails.

GENERAL.

Question as to the greater safety of goods shipped in neutral vessels, in time of war, than if carried in ships belonging to belligerents.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 21, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying letters from the Secretary to the General Shipowners' Society (dated the 14th and 18th December), requesting to be informed whether goods shipped in neutral vessels would, in the event of war, be safer than if carried in ships belonging to the belligerents; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship. at my earliest convenience, with my opinion as to the answer which your Lordship should return to the Society.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That an answer may (subject to your Lordship's discretion) be returned to the Society to the following effect:—

"That with respect to the question in Mr. Bonar's letter of December 18th, as to the prevailing 'opinion being either doubtful or unfounded, that goods shipped in neutral vessels will, in the event of war, be safer than if carried in the ships belonging to the belligerents;' it must be obvious that in the event of war, goods shipped in neutral vessels will be safer than goods shipped in vessels of either belligerent; the vessels of each belligerent being in war subject to capture on the high seas by the cruizers of the opposite party generally, without regard to their cargoes or destination, whilst the vessels of neutrals will only be subject to capture under certain peculiar and defined circumstances.

"That with respect to the suggestion in Mr. Bonar's letter of the 14th December, as to 'the prevalence of a general impression among merchants that, in the event of a war between this country and America, goods shipped in neutral vessels will be free from capture,' and to his request therein, 'that in consideration of the extreme anxiety so extensively felt on the subject, your Lordship would have the goodness to communicate to the Society such information or opinion as may appear to your Lordship not inconsistent with your public duty,' your Lordship can only say that you must decline to define or explain generally the various circumstances and conditions under which neutral ships will, by the existing law and practice of nations, be liable to or exempt from capture in war; which will obviously depend upon many considerations connected with their destination, cargoes, and so forth; more especially as the various questions connected with their liability to, or exemption from, capture, are questions arising under the Law of Nations, upon which the Society is not without the means of informing itself without the assistance of Her Majesty's Government.

"That it is not in your Lordship's power to communicate to the Society any information as to any special or peculiar concessions as to immunity from capture, either under certain qualifications and conditions, or generally, which in the unfortunate event of war between this country and the United States, either or both belligerents may see fit to make in favour of neutral vessels."

I consider it my duty to point out that, adverting to the position and information of the General Shipowners' Society, Mr. Bonar's letters are of a very vague and indefinitive character. No allusion is made therein either to general law and practice of nations as to capturing neutrals in war; to the relaxation thereof in favour of all neutrals without exception, made by Great Britain and France in the last war with Russia; or to the Declaration of Paris (all of which must be well known to the Society). Nor is it suggested that the Society has taken any legal advice (as might have been expected), or that it requires information upon any one or more specific points: the general question whether property in war is safer on board a neutral than on board a belligerent vessel, is one which shipowners might answer for themselves without resorting to Her Majesty's Government; and the object of the letters appears to me to elicit for publication any information which your Lordship may be inclined to give them.

Under these circumstances it is for your Lordship to consider whether the letters should receive any answer; and in the event of your Lordship's considering that an answer should be given, I have endeavoured to frame one in cautious and general terms.

Declaration of Paris, of April 16, 1856, "Neutral flag covers enemies goods." Not acceded to by United States.

I must also point out (for your Lordship's guidance confidentially), although the point is not alluded to by Mr. Bonar, and therefore need not, in my opinion, be alluded to by your Lordship in answering his letters, yet that the Declaration of Paris, April 16, 1856, according to my present impression of its effect (2. "The neutral flag covers the enemy's goods, with the exception of contraband of war"), will preclude Her Majesty's ships, in the event of war, from capturing the (neutral) vessels of any Power which has acceded thereto, even when laden with enemy's goods not contraband of war; whilst the United States not having acceded to that Declaration, their ships of war and privateers may capture all neutrals, without exception, having British goods on board. It will of course remain to be seen whether this right will be exercised without exception or modification.

The international position and belligerent rights of Her Majesty's Government in regard to this Declaration, in the event of war with the United States, are matters requiring grave consideration, as to which I would suggest that it will not be desirable for Her Majesty's Government to publish its opinion until absolutely necessary.

GUATEMALA.

Decision of Nicaraguan tribunals on claim of Hilario Gonssen, British subject, against Don Juaquin Chamorro, for interest on moneys borrowed.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th December instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch, and its inclosures, from the Acting British Consul-General at Guatemala (No. 27, October 5), reporting the particulars of the claim of a British subject, named Hilario Goussen, upon Don Juaquin Chamorro, and the decision of the Nicaraguan tribunals upon the claim in question; and to request that I would report to your Lordship what steps, if any, Mr. Hall should be instructed to take in regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere in this case; and consequently I cannot suggest that any instructions should be given to the Consul.

The only question is that of Mr. Goussen's right to receive interest upon certain advances of money made by him to Messrs. Chamorro in 1855 and 1856 (the principal sum having been repaid to him); his right to the interest thereon appears to be a question of a purely legal character, arising between two private individuals, in which the Government of Nicaragua is not interested, and has not interfered in any manner.

Mr. Goussen having instituted proceedings for this interest before the Tribunal of Commerce, that Court, by its Judgment of the 4th December, 1858, decided that he had no right to recover the interest which he claimed.

It is to be observed that the only reason assigned in the Judgment for this decision, namely, the general distress and confusion caused by the dominion exercised by Walker and his "filibusters," is not very satisfactory; but Mr. Goussen appealed from this decision to the Supreme Court of Justice, and this latter Court, by its Judgment of December 20, 1858, confirmed the Judgment appealed from, with costs.

This Judgment of the Supreme Court sets forth that "in regard to interest nothing was stipulated between the Messrs. Chamorro and Goussen; nor did the latter, when Messrs. Chamorro failed to meet their payments when due, notify them judicially for default of payment; nor did he make the necessary protest." It also sets forth that compound interest is demanded by Mr. Goussen, and refers to certain articles of the Code of Commerce and to legal authorities, in order to show that compound interest is prohibited by the law of Nicaragua.

It is not suggested that Mr. Goussen was not fully heard, or that the Supreme Court acted under any corrupt or undue influence. Not only are no reasons whatsoever suggested by Mr. Goussen or the Consul to show that the Judgment of the Supreme Court is contrary to law or natural justice, but the truth and relevancy of the reasons expressly adduced by the Court in support of the Judgment are not impugned or questioned by Mr. Goussen or by the Consul.

The Consul, moreover, states that he has consulted a legal adviser, "on whose opinion he has much reliance;" and he cites this opinion, which is decidedly in favour of the correctness of the decision of the Supreme Court, and appears to be founded upon the same reasons as those adduced by that Court. This opinion is adverse to Mr. Goussen on every point. The Consul merely observes upon this opinion "that he does not quite concur in it," for which he assigns no reason.

There is nothing forthcoming from Mr. Goussen or his legal advisers to impugn the decision of the Supreme Court, or to support his claim to the intervention of Her Majesty's Government, for which intervention, under the circumstances of the case, I am unable to suggest any reason whatsoever.

I have, &c.

VENEZUELA.

Application of Messrs. Cutler and Turner for original will of Mr. F. A. Hamilton, handed over to a Venezuelan Court in 1858.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 27th February ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter, dated the 9th February ultimo, from Messrs. Cutler and Turner, setting forth the circumstances under which they request to be placed in possession of the will of Mr. Hamilton, a British subject, deceased, in Venezuela.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a Memorandum which had been prepared in the Foreign Office, showing the steps which have already been taken as to this will, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Messrs. Cutler and Turner.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from the Memorandum that the will is now in the possession of a Venezuelan Court, and that Messrs. Cutler and Turner may therefore be informed that the original will of the deceased is, according to the best information of which your Lordship is possessed, in the custody of a legal tribunal at Caracas, to which it was delivered over by Mr. Orme in the year 1858,* and that your Lordship will instruct Mr. Orme, if Messrs. Cutler and Turner so desire, to furnish them, in reply to their written request addressed to him, and setting forth fully the character in which, and the purpose for which, they apply for it, with the precise date and particulars of its delivery to that tribunal; and Mr. Orme may be instructed to act accordingly on hearing from Messrs. Cutler and Turner.

Memorandum relative to the Will of the late Mr. F. A. Hamilton.

Mr. Bingham, Nos. 20 and 21, August 15 and 20, 1855.

IN August 1855 Mr. Bingham reported the decease of Mr. F. A. Hamilton, and stated that he had died under very suspicious circumstances.

Mr. Bingham had himself drawn up the will of Mr. Hamilton shortly before his death, wherein he had bequeathed a sum of 200*l.* (but which sum, he had been informed, had been changed to 2,000*l.*, without any codicil to the will) to a Mrs. Nelson, against whom certain suspicions existed with regard to the death of Mr. Hamilton.

Mr. Bingham also stated that Mr. Hamilton's affairs had been left in a deplorable state of confusion.

Mr. Hamilton's will and papers were delivered over to the local authorities, who refused to deliver them to Mr. Bingham on his applying for the same.

This refusal on the part of the authorities to deliver the will and papers of the late Mr. Hamilton to Mr. Bingham was referred to the Queen's Advocate for opinion, who reported that he was of opinion that Mr. Bingham's demand could not be maintained upon general principles of international law or usage; that the existing Treaty with Venezuela did not support it, and that unless such demand should be founded upon and be in accordance with the law or practice of Venezuela, the authorities of that State would be justified in refusing to accede to it.

Queen's Advocate, October 17, 1855.

To Mr. Bingham, No. 8, October 30, 1855.

Instructions to the above effect were sent to Mr. Bingham.

Mr. Younghusband, November 26, 1856.

In November 1856 a Mr. Younghusband, who stated himself to be trustee for the children of the late Mr. Hamilton, requested that Mr. Bingham might be authorized to furnish him with a copy of the will of the deceased, which request, after reference to the Queen's Advocate, was granted, and Mr. Bingham was directed to procure and forward to Mr. Younghusband an official copy of the will in question.

Mr. Bingham, No. 83, November 28, 1857.

After considerable delay Mr. Bingham in November 1856 sent to the Foreign Office a bundle of papers, which he stated he had received from Government House, and which he believed contained the will.

Mr. Bingham also sent copies of his despatches to the Foreign Office (Nos. 20 and 21) of 1855, which he stated would explain his unwillingness to take charge of the papers and affairs of the late Mr. Hamilton.

To Queen's Advocate, January 7, 1858.

Mr. Bingham's despatch, as also the previous correspondence, was sent to the Queen's Advocate to report his opinion as to the steps which should be taken for making over the papers to the parties who had applied for them.

Queen's Advocate, January 26, 1858.

The Queen's Advocate in his reply reported that under the peculiar circumstances of the case he could not advise the Secretary of State to deliver the papers to Mr. Younghusband, who appeared only to require an official copy of the will of the deceased.

He also recommended that copies of the will should be given to Mr. Bingham, who had been appointed sole executor, and to such other persons as were chiefly interested therein; and that they should also be informed of the place of deposit of the original.

To Treasury, January 29, 1858.

The will and also the correspondence were sent to the Treasury, who were requested to direct their Solicitor to take the neeessary steps to carry out the views of the Queen's Advocate.

Treasury, April 28, 1858.

The Treasury in reply sent to the Foreign Office a copy of the Report of their Solicitor, in which they concurred.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his Report stated that the Treasury had no authority or interest in the matter.

That he had communicated with Mr. Younghusband and had given him a copy of the will, and that he had also given one to Messrs. Johnston, Farquhar and Leech, Solicitors, of 65, Moorgate-street, who represented the next of kin of Mr. Hamilton.

He also forwarded to the Foreign Office a copy of the will to be sent to Mr. Bingham, who he recommended should be instructed to give a copy to Mrs. Nelson, and also to the children mentioned in the will or to their representatives.

It appeared also from the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury that a suit in Chancery was at that time going on regarding the property of the deceased.

To Queen's Advocate, April 30, 1858.

Before acting upon the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, the question was again referred to the Queen's Advocate, more particularly as to whether Mr. Bingham, under the terms of the will, could be held to be trustee and executor in his official or only in his private capacity.

Queen's Advocate, May 12, 1858.

The Queen's Advocate in his reply reported that he was of opinion that Mr. Bingham was, under the terms of the will, to be considered as a trustee and executor in his individual, and not merely in his official capacity; and that under the peculiar circumstances of the case it would seem to be consistent with Mr. Bingham's duty to prove the will as executor, and to endeavour (at least) to carry out its provisions as trustee and guardian to the children mentioned therein.

With regard to the disposal of the original will and other papers, the Queen's Advocate suggested that they should be sent back to Mr. Bingham for the purpose of enabling him to act as executor, trustee, and guardian of the children, and that in the event of his declining to do so he should restore the will and papers to the custody of the Venezuelan Administration or Tribunal from which Mr. Bingham originally obtained them.

Throughout his Report the Queen's Advocate referred to the case as one of a private nature, in which Mr. Bingham was concerned in his private and not official character.

To Mr. Orme, No. 6, May 31, 1858.

In 1858 Mr. Orme, who succeeded Mr. Bingham as Chargé d'Affaires in Venezuela, received charge of the will and papers, and was instructed to communicate with Mr. Bingham on the subject of them, and to inform him that Her Majesty's Government was advised that, by the terms of the will, he was to be considered as trustee and executor in his individual and not merely in his official character; and it would therefore seem to be his duty to take steps for proving the will, and to endeavour to carry out its provisions.

Mr. Orme was also instructed to inform Mr. Bingham that as he appeared unwilling to take charge of the papers or affairs of Mr. Hamilton, that he (Mr. Orme) was directed to return the will and the papers to the Venezuelan authorities, from whom Mr. Bingham had received them, and to give Mr. Bingham a certified copy of the will, and to communicate another copy to Mrs. Nelson.

Mr. Orme, No. 66, November 17, 1858.

Mr. Orme, in compliance with these instructions, furnished Mrs. Nelson and Mr. Bingham with copies of the will, and handed over the original will, together with all the papers, to the tribunals of the city of Caracas.

From inquiries made by Mr. Orme, it appeared that although Mr. Hamilton in his will referred to certain property which he believed himself to be possessed of, bequeathing amongst other things a sum of 200*l.* to a Mrs. Nelson, and making allusion to claims on the Venezuelan Government, no property whatever belonging to Mr. Hamilton was to be traced after his death, and Vice-Consul Stacey was obliged to advance the sums necessary for his burial. It also appeared that Mr. Hamilton was in debt to many persons in Venezuela.

To Mr. Younghusband, December 16, 1858.

Mr. Younghusband was informed of the facts contained in the above despatch, and that the will and papers had been handed over to the proper tribunals at Caracas.

NEW GRANADA.

Complaint of Chief of insurgent party and President of Bolivar against proceedings of British officers.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Lord Wodehouse's letter of the 20th February ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the correspondence marked in the accompanying list, relating to certain proceedings on the part of British officers in New Granada, which have been complained of by Señor Nieto, Chief of the insurgent party, and President of Bolivar, in the letter and its inclosures of which translations were inclosed.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to state that the first case referred to by Señor Nieto is that of the schooner "Liberty," which was seized by Señor Nieto's party at Carthagena, and ultimately delivered up upon Commander Lyons' requisition. That the second case, that of the steamer "Mompox," seized by the authorities of the same party at Barranquilla, is similar to that of the "Liberty."

That Señor Nieto further complains of Commander Lyons' proceedings at Santa Martha, and of the detention by Her Majesty's Consul at Carthagena, of property and documents belonging to the Custom-house at that port, after the flight of the Government officials.

Lord Wodehouse was also pleased to state that I should find among the annexed papers all the correspondence which the Foreign Office possesses upon these subjects; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the justice of Señor Nieto's complaints, and further as to what instructions should be sent to Rear-Admiral Milne upon the subject of Commander Lyons' proceedings, as referred to in the letter from the Admiralty of the 2nd October last.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in dealing with these cases I must assume that Señor Nieto, whatever may be his correct title or precise position, was at the period in question, July 1860, and still is, de facto in possession of independent and sovereign executive power at Carthagena, and is acknowledged and treated by Her Majesty's Government in this character. He appears to be President of certain States which have seceded from the Federal Government of New Granada. I observe that the charges and demands made in his letter of September 4, 1860, have not apparently, as yet, been communicated to Vice-Consul Druce, or Commander Lyons, who have had no opportunity of answering them.

Subject to these observations, I proceed to deal with these four cases as they stand; (1) schooner "Liberty;" (2) steamer "Mompox;" (3) conduct of Commander Lyons in breach of neutrality at Santa Martha; (4) conduct of the British Consulate at Carthagena, in retaining certain Custom-house documents and securities.

Conduct of Vice-Consul Druce and Commander Lyons:—
1. Case of the "Liberty."

1. With respect to the case of the "Liberty," I consider that Vice-Consul Druce and Commander Lyons conducted themselves towards Señor Nieto with unnecessary want of consideration and with excessive rigour, and that they had no sufficient reason for so doing. It is beyond my province to decide how far Commander Lyons may be considered as personally responsible, seeing that he acted throughout at the instigation of the Vice-Consul; but, subject to this observation, and to any explanations which the Vice-Consul may offer, I consider that the request of Señor Nieto, that Her Majesty's Government should express its disapproval of the conduct of its officers in this affair, with a view to prevent the repetition of similar demands, is well founded.

The "Liberty," a small schooner of 34 tons burthen, belonging to a citizen of New Granada, appears to have entered the port of Carthagena under the New Granadian flag and with New Granadian papers, in June 1860; she is alleged to have been sold there by her New Granadian owner, apparently named Bellodi, to Thomas Stevenson, her British owner, on the 25th of June. Vice-Consul Druce gave her a provisional certificate of registry on the 26th June, 1860. On the 13th of July she was pressed into the service of Señor Nieto, under the impression, on his part, that she was a New Granadian vessel; her re-delivery was demanded and enforced on the 17th July by the Vice-Consul and Commander Lyons, without any explanation to Señor Nieto of the peculiar circumstances of the case. This provisional certificate of registry does not strictly follow the form of an ordinary certificate of registry (see form appended to statute 17 and 18 Vict., cap. 104); but it may possibly be sufficiently correct; the Consul should, however, explain this, and state what form he followed, and by what instructions, or circular, he acted in issuing this provisional certificate.

By the "declaration of ownership" appended thereto, J. E. Stevenson, the sole owner, states himself to be a "natural-born British subject, born at the city of Carthagena." The Consul must of course explain this, and state who and what Stevenson is; and he must also explain the special design or object with which he granted this provisional certificate to him; as (for instance) to what British port the "Liberty" was then intending to go for registry. However this may be the Treaty with New Granada (Colombia), April 18, 1825, Article VII, which apparently defines what shall constitute a British vessel, and under the definition of which Article it could not be pretended that the "Liberty" came, was especially referred to by President Nieto, and this observation was never noticed or answered by the Vice-Consul or by Commander Lyons. This omission should be explained by the Vice-Consul. Above all, neither the provisional certificate of registry, nor the declaration of ownership, was ever, as far as I can discover, communicated to Señor Nieto; why this was not done I cannot understand, and this requires particular explanation. The whole affair has the appearance of a device to obtain British protection for a vessel either not entitled bonâ fide, or at least doubtfully entitled to the legal character of a British vessel. Rear-Admiral Milne appears to entertain a similar suspicion (see his letter to Admiralty, 20th September, 1860). I own that I can see no excuse for the non-explanation to Señor Nieto by the Vice-Consul of the circumstances, particulars, and documents of the transfer, and as little for the withholding from him any answer whatever as to his reference to the Treaty. The VIIth Article of the Treaty may possibly require modification owing to the changes in the British law as to property in British ships; but the Consul, when a Treaty was invoked by Señor Nieto, should have at least attempted to give an answer or explanation, and a grave question of international law arises, whether a mere provisional certificate can, under the Treaty, entitle any vessel not fulfilling the conditions thereof to a British character in New Granada.

2. Case of the "Mompox."

2. In the case of the steamer "Mompox" the conduct of the Vice-Consul and Commander Lyons was much more unjustifiable. The schooner "Liberty" was, howsoever, a British vessel, in a certain sense, when pressed; but there was not the least pretence for considering the "Mompox" as a British vessel. She was avowedly a New Granadian vessel to every intent and purpose.

Two British subjects, named Clark, the master, and Campbell, the engineer, seem to have owned two-fifths of her, and were, perhaps, thus paid out of her earnings, instead of receiving monthly pay. Her owners (Hamburgher and Bates) appear either to have offered her services to the Government, or to have been inclined to acquiesce in her impressment upon certain terms, and they did not contend or suggest that she was a British vessel. She was pressed into Señor Nieto's service on the 15th July, and on the 29th her re-delivery, together with the payment of 3,000 dollars indemnity to Campbell and Clark for her detention, was enforced by Commander Lyons, at the Vice-Consul's instigation, under threat of laying an embargo upon all the vessels belonging to or carrying the New Granadian flag.

Commander Lyons, in his note to Señor Nieto of July 28, 1860, spoke of a "great indignity having been inflicted against the persons" of Clark and Campbell, and damages caused to their property "in direct violation of the Law of Nations and in opposition to the Treaty;" and stated that the seizure brought upon the authorities of Barranquilla "the responsibility of an act of piracy." Señor Nieto demands (in this case) "a proper satisfaction, the punishment of the offending officers, and the restoration of the 3,000 dollars so unduly demanded." I am of opinion that these demands are internationally well-founded; but it will be for Her Majesty's Government to determine what course to pursue under the circumstances. I have seldom seen an instance of such arbitrary and inconsiderate conduct as this on the part of British officials; and there may, of course, be some peculiar circumstances with which I am unacquainted.

3. Conduct of Vice-Consul Druce and Commander Lyons in breach of neutrality at Santa Martha.

3. The next case, mentioned at page 13 of Señor Nieto's note, relates to a charge made by him against Vice-Consul Druce and Commander Lyons, in respect of certain acts on their part, and particularly of the latter, at Santa Martha in August 1860, which are alleged to have amounted to a breach of neutrality in a civil war then raging, and by which the capture of that place by the forces of the States of Bolivar and Magdalena is said to have been prevented or delayed. It would seem as if the naval force of one party took refuge behind Her Majesty's ship "Racer" and another of Her Majesty's ships not named, and were thus in effect sheltered or protected; men were landed in Santa Martha from Her Majesty's ships: but I can find nothing in these papers throwing any light upon these facts excepting this statement in the note of Señor Nieto. I am therefore at present unable to offer any opinion thereon.

4. Conduct of Vice-Consul Druce at Carthagena in retaining certain Custom-house documents and securities.

4. The last case is one apparently having no connection whatsoever with either of the three former cases; it relates to the deposit and retention at the British Consulate at Carthagena, of certain Custom-house documents and funds, probably consisting of bonds, securities, or paper money, which has already formed the subject of my Report of May 17, 1860, and as to which the Consulate was instructed accordingly, May 31, 1860 (No. 6). The Consul apparently still persists in that extraordinary system of withholding all the necessary information upon which I have remarked in the above Report, and upon which I have so often felt it to be my disagreeable duty to remark in other Consular cases. It appears, however, from Vice-Consul Druce's note to Señor Nieto of the 20th of August, 1860, that the papers were received into the Consulate according to instructions received from Her Majesty's Minister at Bogotá, which directed that they should "not be given up to any person but an Agent nominated by the Federal Government" (which Señor Nieto is not). I can, therefore, only say that Señor Nieto's demand that these documents should be delivered to him, as President of certain seceding or separate States of New Granada, is a matter for the decision of Her Majesty's Government, whensoever it may succeed in extracting, either from the Consulate at Carthagena, or the Legation at Bogotá, the necessary information with facts and dates bearing on this subject, which information has now apparently been withheld for more than twelve months. Any remark of mine upon such remissness on so important a matter on the part of British functionaries would be useless. I can only leave the subject to your Lordship's consideration.

There is a separate bundle of papers marked "Admiralty" inclosed in Rear-Admiral Milne's despatch to the Admiralty of November 15, 1860, No. 288, which relate to the conduct of Captain Hillyar, R.N., of Her Majesty's ship "Cadmus," at Carthagena and Santa Martha, and the withdrawal of Vice-Consul Cano from Rio Hacha, which papers do not appear to me to have any connection with Señor Nieto's note, and upon which, therefore, I can offer no opinion. It is possible that Señor Nieto may mean to complain of Captain Hillyar, but if so the points intended to be raised require elucidation.

SPAIN.

Claim of certain persons in Spain to exemption from military service, on the ground of their alleged British parentage.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 11, 1861.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 3rd December instant, stating that with reference to Sir John Dodson's Report of the 21st October, 1841, therewith inclosed, and to the concluding portion of my Report of the 15th December, 1859, he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Sir Andrew Buchanan (No. 543), and also three despatches from Her Majesty's present Minister at Madrid (Nos. 148, 150, 151), respecting the cases of certain persons in Spain who have claimed exemption from military service in that country on account of alleged British parentage; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as the instructions which should be addressed to Sir John Crampton in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report,—

That Sir J. Crampton appears to me to have taken a correct view of this case in No. 148; and that I can see no sufficient grounds for instructing him to interfere in any of the cases herewith transmitted.

GENERAL.

Grandchildren of natural-born British subjects, when both they and their fathers have been born and domiciled abroad, cannot claim exemption from military service on the sole ground of their descent from British grandfathers.

The grandchildren of natural-born British subjects, when both they and their fathers have been born and domiciled in Spain, cannot, in my opinion, rightfully claim to be exempted from military service (as being themselves British subjects) in Spain, merely by reason of their descent from British grandfathers. British law would certainly not admit this principle, nor extend any reciprocity to this class of cases.

The persons in question are (by statute) British subjects in the Queen's dominions; but this will not make them British subjects in Spain; nor protect them, whilst in the country of their birth, from being dealt with as its natural-born subjects.

This general principle has been frequently considered by the Law Officers (see, for instance, their Report of the 1st May, 1856, on this same question, and their Report of the 26th February, 1858, on a question submitted by the French Government with reference to Julian Walewski).

I do not understand upon what principle, after and notwithstanding the despatch of the Earl of Clarendon to Lord Howden of the 8th May, 1856 (in accordance with the Law Officers' Report of May 1, 1856), Her Majesty's Consuls in Spain have persisted in claiming for the persons in question, on the ground that they are British subjects, the absolute right of exemption from military service, and also apparently have registered them and granted them passports as being such. Sir J. Crampton offers no explanation of this practice, which should, in my opinion, be discontinued.

I have, &c.

Notice for "Gazette" respecting latest date for presentation of claims before Commissioners.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 2, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th December ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 18th May last,* he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Grey Town (No. 21, November 16th), inclosing a record of the proceedings of the Commission which has been appointed to meet at that place, in accordance with the provisions of the Treaty of Managua of the 20th January, 1860, from which it will be seen that the Commissioners propose to issue a notice, "that after the 1st March next, they will cease to receive claims which may not have been presented within opportune time, under the conditions expressed in the notices published in the 'London Gazette' of the 19th April, 1861;" and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether the publication of such a notice would be right and proper.

The Treaty of Managua and the "London Gazette" of the 19th April were inclosed for my information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That considering the time occupied in communicating with Mr. Green, and the probability that the notification in question may have been already published by the Commissioners, I am of opinion that its publication in the Gazette will be proper under the peculiar circumstances of the case.

The advertisement should, however, in my opinion, be more extensive than this particular notification, it being apparent that the Commissioners intended the publication of at least a portion of the Minutes of their second meeting, 15th of November (see Record, page 10).

I would suggest that the Gazette advertisement should commence as follows:—

"Honduras Claims.—With reference to the notification on this subject inserted in the 'London Gazette' of April 19, 1861, the following extract from the Record of the proceedings of the Commissioners is published for the information of all parties interested in such claims.

"Second Meeting, 15th November, 1861.—Memorandum," (and thence, verbatim, as marked in pencil to the end of Record at page 12).

I would also suggest that Mr. Green should be instructed to send full information as to the number and character of all claims, as far as hitherto known, both those (1) presented, and (2) not presented; together with any information in his possession as to the reasons for which any claims have not been presented; and to consider and report as to the expediency of publishing any further and more definite notification, to the effect that no claim whatever will be received unless presented on or before the 1st March, 1862. This will depend in some degree upon the number and nature of claims still remaining unpresented. The Notification of November 16, 1861, is not as explicit as could be desired, possibly from inadequate translation, of which there are instances in the Record.

* See Reports for 1861, page 97.

I presume (although this is not distinctly stated) that the proceedings of the Commissioners, or at all events those of their third meeting (November 16, 1861), containing the notification alluded to, have been duly published in Grey Town. Mr. Green's attention should be directed to the necessity for such publication.

Interpretation to be put upon Article III of Treaty of Managua of 28th January, 1860, respecting the territorial rights of the Mosquito Indians.

Doctors' Commons, January 3, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th of December ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence (Mr. Green's No. 21 of 1861), relative to a difference of opinion which has arisen between Her Majesty's Consul at Greytown and Señor Saeroz, the Governor of that port, as to the interpretation to be put on the IIIrd Article of the Treaty of Managua of the 28th of January, 1860, respecting the territorial rights of the Mosquito Indians; and to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this discussion seems to have commenced accidentally in the course of a conversation which took place in July 1861, between Consul Green and Señor Saeroz (reported in the Consul's No. 17). This conversation was followed by Consul Green's note to Señor Saeroz of July 22 (Inclosure 5 in No. 17), which note apparently led to that from Señor Marcoleta to your Lordship of November 7. There is nothing in writing from Señor Saeroz.

It does not appear that any particular case has occurred calling for a decision; that the Indians have made any claim or done any act which the Nicaraguan Government has refused to authorize; or that any British interest is concerned. The British Protectorate of the Mosquito territory has ceased under the Ist Article of the Treaty; and the Indians have made no complaint or representation whatsoever to Her Majesty's Government in relation to the question thus raised.

Under these circumstances it does not appear to me to be either incumbent on Her Majesty's Government, or expedient for it, to enter upon any abstract discussion of the precise effect and operation of the Treaty upon the right of the Indians to deal with their "reserved district" or territory as absolute owners, independently of the control of Nicaragua, not merely by disposing of the produce of the soil, but also by its permanent or temporary alienation; as by sales, leases, grants of minerals and mining privileges, and so forth.

The particular position or version of the Treaty which Her Majesty's Government is called upon either to maintain or to controvert, is not apparent. Consul Green's note was founded on his previous conversation with Señor Saeroz; and on that gentleman's claim, on the part of Nicaragua, as understood by the Consul. Señor Marcoleta's note is founded on the note of Consul Green, but takes widely different ground from that taken by Señor Saeroz in his reported conversation, to which Señor Marcoleta does not allude.

Subject to these observations I am of opinion:—

1st. That the position alleged to be maintained by Señor Saeroz (see Consul Green's No. 17), namely, "that Nicaragua alone has the right to give privileges for collecting the native products of the reserved territory, such as cutting timber, collecting india-rubber, cocoa-nuts, and other natural productions," cannot be maintained consistently with the Treaty. The absolute ownership of this territory is in the Indians; and they are entitled to exercise all such acts of ownership (including those above mentioned) as are not "inconsistent with the sovereign rights" of Nicaragua. On this point I concur generally with Consul Green's remarks in No. 20.

2ndly. The permanent alienation of lands or minerals by the Indians, without the consent of Nicaragua, or the grant of exclusive privileges thereto (more particularly to foreigners) without such consent (if this question is to be considered), is subject to different considerations, into which it is not, in the present state of things, desirable for Her Majesty's Government to enter.

Señor Marcoleta, in his note of November 7, does not put forward any such claim as that of Señor Saeroz; he does not allude to the exclusive right to give privileges for collecting the native products; he confines himself to grants of land and mines, and contends "que les concessions dont il s'agit (concessions de terres, exploitation des mines, &c.), ne pourraient être faites que d'accord avec le pouvoir souverain;" and he asks for your Lordship's opinion upon this particular question. Thus, whilst Señor Saeroz apparently claims for the Nicaraguan Government the exclusive right to give privileges for collecting the native products, Señor Marcoleta seems only to claim for that Government a joint right of concurring in grants of lands and mineral privileges. The wide practical difference between these two positions is apparent.

Grants of lands or mines made by the Indians without the concurrence of Nicaragua, especially to foreigners resident out of its dominions, may, under certain circumstances, be inconsistent with the sovereign rights of the Republic, and at variance with the true intent of the Treaty.

Her Majesty has, by Article I of the Treaty, "recognized, as belonging to and under the sovereignty of the Republic, the country hitherto occupied or claimed by the Indians." By Article II the reserved district "may not be ceded to any foreign person or State;" and by Article III the customs and regulations by which the Indians are to govern themselves, and all persons residing within such district, are not to be "inconsistent with the sovereign rights of the Republic."

Under these circumstances the claim of Nicaragua to concur in or consent to such grants does not appear to me to be incompatible with the Treaty, or unreasonable in itself; nor can I advise your Lordship to contend for the right of the Indians to make such grants without the concurrence of Nicaragua.

It will be, however, for your Lordship to consider whether, under the peculiar circumstances, any statement to this effect should be now made to Señor Marcoleta; or whether it will be more expedient merely to point out to him that Señor Saeroz's position, which originated the discussion, cannot, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, be maintained; and that Consul Green was justified in so stating to him, and that your Lordship sees no necessity at present for entering upon any further discussion on the subject of his note.

Messrs. Argenti and Co. have no right to claim exemption from the operation of Patent tax levied by Wallachian authorities.
Messrs. Argenti and Co. cannot be considered as British subjects.

Doctors' Commons, January 6, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th December ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a correspondence between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Bucharest,* relative to the claim of Messrs. Argenti and Co. to exemption from the operation of a patent tax levied by the Wallachian authorities, on the ground that they are the agents of a British commercial firm; and to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions that should be given to Mr. Green in regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason for the claim of exemption from the tax in question on the grounds put forward, that Messrs. Argenti and Co. are the agents of a British commercial firm. For, assuming the persons on whom the tax is sought to be imposed to be agents only, we fail to discover any British element in the firm. The senior partner (Leonidas Argenti) was born at Scio, a part of Turkey, and is, therefore, a natural-born Turkish subject; and not, as appears to have been supposed, a Greek. English letters of naturalization can have no effect upon the status of this gentleman as represented in Turkey. One of the other two partners (Leonidas Argenti) is a French subject, and the other (Ambrose Sechiari) was also born in Scio, as were all the local managers.

Under these circumstances it appears to us that Mr. Green should be instructed not to interfere on behalf of Messrs. Argenti and Co. with reference to the tax in question.

Conditions under which a privateer may legally act as such in the service of a belligerent Government.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 7, 1862.

WE are favoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether a privateer can legally act as such if she is not fitted out and does not sail from a port of the country in whose service she acts.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that a privateer may legally act as such in the service of a belligerent Government, provided she is legally the property of citizens or subjects of such Government, and is duly commissioned by such Government, although she may not have been fitted out in or have sailed from a port of that Government.

No power to compel Mr. Anderson of the "Caroline" to pay award for damages by collision with the "San José" at Teneriffe in 1861.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 14, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th January instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 23rd October last,* he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Teneriffe (No. 11), containing explanations as to the circumstances under which the Spanish vessel "San José" was injured by the British vessel "Caroline," in the harbour of Santa Cruz de Teneriffe.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that this case was brought under your Lordship's consideration by the Spanish Minister in this country, whose note on the subject, dated 9th September ultimo, as well as a letter from the Board of Trade, dated the 8th October ultimo, containing the explanations given by the master of the "Caroline," were inclosed for reference.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to M. Isturiz's note.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the note of Señor Isturitz (of which no translation is appended) may, according to my understanding of it, be answered to the following effect:—

"That Her Majesty's Government has no power or authority to compel Mr. Anderson, the master of the British vessel 'Caroline,' to pay the amount stated to have been awarded against him, for damages done by collision with the Spanish vessel 'San José,' which occurred at Teneriffe in May 1861, or to interfere in this case.

"That Her Majesty's Government has inquired into the facts of the case, and is informed that whatever may have been the validity of the decision or judgment pronounced in the case, no attempt whatever was made to enforce it judicially by the arrest or detention of the 'Caroline,' or of her master, or by any similar step, although it was known at the time that she was about to sail.

"That the Consul was never applied to, to assist in detaining her; and that she had all her papers in order, and was permitted to sail without interruption or objection by the authorities of the port.

"That she was not allowed to sail at the request of the British Vice-Consul, who made no request to that effect; that it is not suggested that the Consul or Vice-Consul entered into any undertaking to pay or guarantee the amount awarded; that no application to pay or guarantee the amount was ever made to the Consul or Vice-Consul until after the 'Caroline' had sailed.

"That the Consul only affixed his signature to the proceedings as verifying the signatures, and that he was no party to the suit, nor did he in any manner become responsible for the alleged liability of the master of the 'Caroline.'

"That under these circumstances Her Majesty's Government does not conceive itself to be responsible, and cannot take any step in the matter in question."

UNITED STATES.

Reparation for seizure of the British mail-steamer "Trent." Points of Maritime Law raised by American Government.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 15, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a copy of a note which had been addressed by the Secretary of State of the United States to Lord Lyons, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,* in reply to the communication which the latter was instructed to make to the Government of the United States respecting the seizure on board the mail-steamer "Trent" of the two Commissioners from the Southern States, with their two Secretaries.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that Her Majesty's Government accept the reparation offered in Mr. Seward's note; but, as regards the various points of maritime law raised in that note, Her Majesty's Government desired to have our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience, with the view, if necessary, of making a communication on the subject to the Government of the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Seward, in his note,—

1. Admits the justice of the demand made by the British Government, on the ground that the "Trent" was not brought into any port of the United States for adjudication; that omission having been voluntary on the part of the Commander of the "San Jacinto."

2. That he appears to assume that the demand now made by the British Government, and acceded to on this ground by his own, involves in principle the abandonment of claims formerly insisted upon by Great Britain, and the final settlement, "upon principles confessedly American," of a question upon which the two nations were long at issue with each other, and which had led to war between them—referring, manifestly, to the claim of Great Britain to take British seamen in time of war out of neutral ships, the denial of which claim by the United States led to the war of 1812.

3. That he insists, and conceives himself to have shown, that the four persons who were taken from the "Trent" by Captain Wilkes, and their despatches, were contraband of war.

* See Reports for 1861, page 249.

* In Lord Lyons' No. 800 of 1861.

4. That he concludes that the "Trent" was on this ground justly liable to capture and confiscation; and that, if she had been taken into a port of the United States for adjudication, not only the four persons in question, and their despatches, might have been lawfully detained, but that the ship herself might have been lawfully condemned, without giving any just cause for reclamation to the British Government.

Upon these several points (which we have arranged in what seems to us the most convenient order, though different from that of Mr. Seward's note), we beg to submit the following observations: premising that the whole proceeding in this case is declared by Mr. Seward to have been "undertaken as a simple, legal, and customary belligerent proceeding by Captain Wilkes to arrest and capture a neutral vessel engaged in carrying contraband of war for the use and benefit of the insurgents."

1. That the justice of the demand made by Her Majesty's Government should be frankly admitted by the Government of the United States is, no doubt, extremely satisfactory; and the satisfaction which must be felt at that admission is not likely to be diminished by the circumstance that it has been found capable of being placed upon a ground which the Government of the United States could not only accept as their own, without receding from any pretensions formerly advanced by them, but in support of which they might fairly and consistently refer to principles uniformly maintained by them during former discussions between their own country and Great Britain. In the proposition that every question of contraband must (in the absence of positive necessity) be brought for adjudication before a Prize Court, in order to justify any cruizer in forcibly taking either persons or things out of a neutral vessel on that ground, we, as your Lordship is already aware, entirely agree: and we think it unnecessary to enter into any examination of the course of reasoning by which that proposition is maintained in Mr. Seward's note, or to consider whether it might not also be supported by other arguments.

Right of Great Britain to take British seamen in time of war out of neutral vessels.

2. We cannot, however, acquiesce in the assumption which Mr. Seward appears to make that, by taking up this ground, the British Government has adopted any new principle, or has acted inconsistently with any claim made and insisted upon by this country at any former time, when questions between the two Governments have been under discussion. We presume that Her Majesty's Government while cordially sharing in the hope expressed by Mr. Seward that nothing may hereafter occur to revive former occasions of difference and hostility between the two nations, will not propose now unnecessarily to enter upon the questions which led to those differences, and will not anticipate or interfere with the judgment and responsibility of those who, if circumstances such as existed in 1804 and 1812 should ever again unfortunately arise, may then be entrusted with the administration of the Government of this country. These questions still remain, in our judgment, open, as they were before. Whatever arguments may have been used on either side in the discussions which formerly took place, and whether the claims of this country were well or ill-founded, there are plain and broad distinctions of principle between the impressment of British seamen on board a neutral merchant-ship and the seizure of the persons of enemies on board such a ship as contraband of war; and as long as these distinctions exist it will be impossible to admit that the rule which governs the latter case must necessarily be applicable to the former. The foundation on which the liability of a ship carrying contraband of war to capture, adjudication, and condemnation rests is, that by carrying such contraband she has violated the duties of neutrality, and has contracted a hostile character. But it has never been pretended that a neutral ship, merely by having British seamen on board while Great Britain is engaged in war, violates any duty of neutrality, or exposes herself to capture or condemnation. No neutral vessel could possibly be carried in for adjudication on such a ground; and, therefore, if the right exists, it cannot depend, for the justification of its exercise in any particular case, on the capture and adjudication of the ship. The taking such seamen from on board neutral vessels was vindicated in the Speech of the Prince Regent on the 9th of March, 1813, not as a hostile measure against vessels violating the laws of neutrality, but as depending upon "the clearly established right of every Sovereign to the allegiance of his own subjects, especially in time of war;" and upon the (asserted) duty of friendly nations, upon principles of international law, to respect that right, and not to interpose their own special jurisdiction on board their merchant-ships at sea between foreign seamen and the claims of the Sovereign of those seamen to their services in time of need. Wheaton, though not admitting the right, distinctly places the claim upon the same foundation of principle. He says: "Every State has an incontestable right to the service of all its members in the national defence; but it can only give effect to this right by lawful means. Its right to reclaim the military service of its citizens can only be exercised within its own territory, or in some other place not subject to the jurisdiction of any other nation. The ocean is such a place; and any State may, unquestionably, there exercise, on board its own vessels, its right of compelling the military or naval services of its subjects. But whether it may exercise the same right in respect to the vessels of other nations is a question of more difficulty. In respect to public commissioned vessels belonging to the State, their entire immunity from every species and purpose of search is generally conceded. As to private vessels, belonging to the subjects of a foreign nation, the right to search them on the high seas, for deserters and other persons liable to military and naval service, has been uniformly asserted by Great Britain, and as constantly denied by the United States."* The claim was also insisted upon by Great Britain on the ground of usage; and it was in its nature one which would have been wholly defeated and rendered nugatory, unless it could be exercised without the delay necessary for adjudication (if adjudication in such a case had been possible); the object of impressment being to supply an immediate and pressing want of seamen on board the ships of war of the country to which the men taken belong, for the exigencies of present and actual service.

These remarks are enough to show the distinction between cases of impressment and cases of contraband. They, at the same time, show that the claim of impressment on board neutral ships did not depend upon any supposition that the seamen impressed were liable to be reclaimed by their own country as criminals. It may not be superfluous to add that, during the existence of the present civil war between the Government of the United States and the States seceding from that Government, in which Great Britain has recognized both parties as belligerents, and has engaged to observe towards both of them the duties of an impartial neutrality (and the existence of which war could alone give a right to the ships of war of the United States to visit or search any British merchant-ship at all); the British Government could not possibly have permitted the persons taken out of the "Trent" to be treated otherwise than as belonging to a Power then at war with the United States; and could not, under these circumstances, have recognized any claim (even if it could have been consistently advanced by the United States) to deal with them, either as offenders against the laws of the United States, or as persons then liable to the military or naval service of that Government.

United States not justified in considering the Confederate Commissioners and their despatches as contraband of war.

3. Upon the question whether the four persons taken out of the "Trent," and their despatches, were contraband of war, we differ from the argument and also from the conclusion, of Mr. Seward; and, as the principles involved in this question are of great importance, and as any misunderstanding upon them might possibly lead hereafter to serious consequences, we think it desirable to explain the view we take of it in some detail. We do this the rather because, if Mr. Seward's argument were acted upon as correct, there would be no security against the capture and detention of other British ships under similar circumstances even during the present war; nor against the recurrence, perhaps in a more aggravated form, of the difficulties which have been now so happily avoided.

The general right and duty of a neutral Power to maintain its own communications and friendly relations with both belligerents cannot be disputed. "A neutral nation," says Vattel,† "continues, with the two parties at war, in the several relations Nature has placed between nations. It is ready to perform towards them both all the duties of humanity, reciprocally due from nation to nation. It is, in everything not directly relating to war, to give them all the assistance in its power, and of which they may stand in need; but this assistance is to be given with impartiality; that is, in not refusing to one of the parties anything on account of his being at war with the other. It is, therefore, equally to allow, as far as the public good will permit, the subjects of the contending parties to visit its territories on business, &c." In the performance of these duties, on both sides, it has itself a most direct and material interest, especially when (as in the case of Great Britain under the circumstances of the present civil war in North America), it has numerous subjects resident in the territories of both belligerents; and when its citizens, both there and at home, have property of great value, which may be exposed to danger from acts of confiscation and violence, if the protection of their own Government should be withheld.

Acting upon these principles, Sir William Scott, in the case of the Caroline,[*] decided that the carriage of despatches from the French Ambassador resident in the United States, to the Government of France, by an United States' merchant-ship, was no violation of the neutrality of the United States in the war between Great Britain and France, and that such despatches could not be treated as contraband of war. "The neutral country," he said, has a right to preserve its relations with the enemy; and you are not at liberty to conclude that any communication between them can partake, in any degree, of the nature of hostility against you. The enemy may have his hostile projects to be attempted with the neutral State; but your reliance is on the integrity of that neutral State, that it will not favour nor participate in such designs, but, as far as its own councils and actions are concerned, will oppose them. And, if there should be private reasons to suppose that this confidence in the good faith of the neutral State has a doubtful foundation, that is matter for the caution of the Government, to be counteracted by just measures of preventive policy; but it is no ground on which this Court can pronounce, that the neutral carrier has violated his duty by bearing despatches, which, as far as he can know, may be presumed to be of an innocent nature, and in the maintenance of a pacific connexion." And he continues, shortly afterwards:—"It is to be considered, also, with regard to this question, what may be due to the convenience of the neutral State; for its interests may require that the intercourse of correspondence with the enemy's country should not be altogether interdicted. It might be thought to amount almost to a declaration that an Ambassador from the enemy shall not reside in the neutral State, if he is declared to be debarred from the only means of communicating with his own. For to what useful purpose can he reside there, without the opportunities of such a communication? It is too much to say, that all the business of the two States shall be transacted by the Minister of the neutral State, resident in the enemy's country. The practice of nations has allowed to neutral States the privilege of receiving Ministers from the belligerent States, and the use and convenience of an immediate negotiation with them."

That these principles must necessarily extend to every kind of diplomatic communication between Government and Government, whether by sending or receiving Ambassadors or Commissioners personally, or by sending or receiving despatches from or to such Ambassadors or Commissioners, or from or to the respective Governments, is too plain to need argument: and it seems no less clear that such communications must be as legitimate and innocent in their first commencement as afterwards; and that the rule cannot be restricted to the case in which diplomatic relations are already formally established by the residence of an accredited Minister of the belligerent Power in the neutral country. It is the neutrality of the one party to the communications, and not either the mode of the communication or the time when it first takes place, which furnishes the test of the true application of the principle. The only distinction arising out of the peculiar circumstances of a civil war, and of the non-recognition of the independence of the de facto Government of one of the belligerents, either by the other belligerent or by the neutral Power, is this:—that "for the purpose of avoiding the difficulties which might arise from a formal and positive solution of these questions, Diplomatic Agents are frequently substituted, who are clothed with the powers, and enjoy the immunities, of Ministers, though they are not invested with the representative character, nor entitled to diplomatic honours."[†] Upon this footing, Messrs. Mason and Slidell (who are expressly stated by Mr. Seward to have been sent as Diplomatic Agents from the Southern States to the Courts of St. James' and of Paris), must have been sent, and would have been (if at all) received; the independence of those States not being recognized by Great Britain or France: and their reception, upon this footing, could not have been justly regarded, according to the law of nations, as a hostile or unfriendly act towards the United States.

It appears to us to be a necessary and certain deduction from these principles, that the conveyance of public Agents of this character from Havana to St. Thomas, on their way to Great Britain and France, and of their credentials or despatches (if any), on board the "Trent," was not, and could not be, a violation of the duties of neutrality on the part of that vessel; and both for that reason, and also because the destination of these persons and of their despatches was bonâ fide neutral, and unconnected with any military or naval operations of the belligerent Power from which they came, it is, in our judgment, clear and certain that they were not contraband.

The doctrine of contraband has its whole foundation and origin in the principle which is nowhere more accurately explained than in the following passage of Bynkershoek. After stating in general terms the duty of impartial neutrality, he adds:—

"Et sane id, quod modo dicebam, non tantum ratio docet, sed et usus, inter omnes fere gentes receptus. Quamvis enim libera sint cum amicorum nostrorum hostibus commercia, usu tamen placuit, ne alterutrum his rebus juvemus, quibus bellum contra amicos nostros instruatur et foveatur. Non licet igitur alterutri advehere ea, quibus in bello gerendo opus habet; ut sunt tormenta, arma, et, quorum præcipuus in bello usus, milites. . . . Optimo jure interdictum est, ne quid eorum hostibus subministremus; quia his rebus nos ipsi quodammodo videremur amicis nostris bellum facere."[*]

The reason on account of which men and despatches may, in some circumstances, be contraband of war, is here clearly explained; and it is impossible that men or despatches which do not come within that reason can be contraband of war. The penalty of knowingly carrying men or despatches which are contraband of war, is, as Mr. Seward truly states, nothing less than the confiscation of the ship; but it is impossible that this penalty can be incurred when the neutral has done no more than employ means usual among nations for maintaining his own proper relations with one of the belligerents. It is of the very essence of the definition of contraband, in all other cases, that the articles should have a hostile, and not a neutral, destination. "Goods," says Lord Stowell,[†] "going to a neutral port, cannot come under the description of contraband; all goods going there being equally lawful. The rule respecting contraband," he adds, "as I have always understood it, is, that articles must be taken in delicto, in the actual prosecution of the voyage to an enemy's port." On what just principle can it be contended that a hostile destination is less necessary, or a neutral destination more noxious, in the case of public agents or despatches, than in the case of arms and ammunition?

Mr. Seward seeks to support his conclusion on this point by a reference to the well-known dictum of Sir William Scott in the case of the "Caroline," that "you may stop the Ambassador of your enemy on his passage;"[‡] and to another dictum of the same Judge, in the case of the "Orozembo," that civil functionaries, if sent "for a purpose intimately connected with the hostile operations,"[§] may fall under the same rule with persons whose employment is directly military.

These quotations are both, as it seems to us, irrelevant. Sir William Scott does not say that an Ambassador sent from a belligerent to a neutral State may be stopped, while on his passage, as contraband, on board a neutral vessel belonging to that or any other neutral State; nor that, if he be not contraband, the other belligerent would have any right to stop him on such a voyage. The sole object which Sir William Scott had in view was to explain the extent and limits of the doctrine of the inviolability of Ambassadors in virtue of that character, for he says:—

"The limits that are assigned to the operations of war against them by Vattel and other writers upon these subjects are, that you may exercise your right of war against them wherever the character of hostility exists. You may stop the Ambassador of your enemy on his passage; but when he has arrived, and has taken upon him the functions of his office, and has been admitted in his representative character, he becomes a sort of middle-man, entitled to peculiar privileges, as set apart for the protection of the relations of amity and peace, in maintaining which all nations are, in some degree, interested."

There is certainly nothing in this passage from which an inference can be drawn so totally opposed to the general tenour of the whole Judgment as that an Ambassador, proceeding to the country to which he is sent on board a neutral vessel belonging to that country, can be stopped on the ground that the conveyance of such an Ambassador is a breach of neutrality, which it must be if he be contraband of war. Sir William Scott is here expressing, not his own opinion merely, but the doctrine, which he considers to have been laid down by writers of authority upon the subject. No writer of authority has ever suggested that an Ambassador proceeding to a neutral State on board one of its merchant-ships is contraband of war. The only writer named by Sir William Scott is Vattel, whose words are these: "On peut encore attaquer et arrêter ses gens" (i. e., gens de l'ennemi) "partout où on a la liberté d'exercer des actes d'hostilité. Non seulement donc on peut justement refuser le passage aux Ministres qu'un ennemi envoye à d'autres Souverains; on les arrête même, s'ils entreprennent de passer secrètement et sans permission dans les lieux dont on est maître."* And he adds an example: the seizure of a French Ambassador, when passing through the dominions of Hanover during war between England and France, by the King of England, who was also Sovereign of Hanover. The rule, therefore, to be collected from these authorities is, that you may stop an enemy's Ambassador in any place of which you are yourself the master, or in any other place where you have a right to exercise acts of hostility. Your own territory, or ships of your own country, are places of which you are yourself the master; the enemy's territory, or the enemy's ships, are places in which you have a right to exercise acts of hostility. Neutral vessels, guilty of no violation of the laws of neutrality, do not come within either description. It would surely be a more just conclusion, that an Ambassador sent to a neutral Power is inviolable on the high seas, as well as in neutral waters, while under the protection of the neutral flag; especially under the flag of the Power to which he is sent.

The other dictum, in the case of the "Orozembo," is even less pertinent. That was the case of a neutral ship, which, upon the effect of the evidence, was held by the Court to have been engaged as an enemy's transport, to convey the enemy's military officers, and civil officers whose duties were intimately connected with military operations, from the enemy's country to one of the enemy's colonies which was about to be the theatre of those operations; the whole being done under colour of a simulated neutral destination. But, as long as a neutral Government, within whose territory no military operations are carried on, adheres to its profession of neutrality, the duties of Civil officers on a mission to that Government, and within its territory, cannot possibly be "connected with" any "military operations," in the sense in which these words were used by Sir William Scott; as, indeed, is rendered quite clear by the passages already cited from his own Judgment in the case of the "Caroline."

In connection with this part of the subject, it is necessary to notice a remarkable passage in Mr. Seward's note, in which he says:—

"I assume, in the present case, what, as I read British authorities, is regarded by Great Britain herself as true maritime law; that the circumstance that the 'Trent' was proceeding from a neutral port to another neutral port does not modify the right of the belligerent capture."

If, indeed, the immediate and ostensible voyage of the "Trent" had been to a neutral port, but her ultimate and real destination to some port of the enemy, or if she had been the bearer of despatches of which the true and ultimate destination was to the enemy, although she undertook to be the medium of transmitting them through a neutral port, we might have been better able to understand the reference to British authorities contained in this passage. It is, undoubtedly, the law, as laid down by British authorities, that if the real and ultimate destination, whether of the vessel or of the despatches, be hostile (that is, to the enemy, or the enemy's country), it cannot be covered and rendered innocent by a fictitious or intermediate destination to a neutral port. But if the real terminus of the voyage of the men and of the despatches be bonâ fide in a neutral territory where there is no war, and where no military operations are carried on, no English (nor, as we believe, any American) authority can be found which has ever given countenance to the notion that either the men or the despatches can be subject during such a voyage, and on board such a neutral vessel, to belligerent capture as contraband of war. We regard such a doctrine as wholly irreconcilable with the true principles of maritime law, and certainly with those principles as they have been understood in the Courts of this country.

* Vattel, lib. iv, chap. 7, sec 85.

The "Trent" might not have been justifiably taken into a port of the United States for adjudication. Reparation, whether condemned or not, must have been insisted on.

4. It remains for us only to notice Mr. Seward's conclusion, that the "Trent" might have been justifiably taken into a port of the United States for adjudication, on the mere ground of the presence on board her of the Southern Commissioners, and their (supposed) despatches. It is clear that, unless these persons or their despatches were contraband, she could not have been lawfully condemned; nor do we conceive that the Government of this country could properly have acquiesced in such a proceeding, without ultimately requiring the fullest reparation, whether she might have been condemned or released by the Prize Courts of the United States. If she had been condemned, the Government of the United States would have become responsible to this country for such a miscarriage of justice in their Prize Courts; the responsibility of the Government beginning, in such a case, where that of the captor ceases. That miscarriage, would not, as we view the matter, have been on a small or doubtful point, but on one vitally concerning the general interests of civilization, and of all neutral and commercial nations. Even if the ship had been released without full and complete indemnity to all persons who might have been sufferers by her detention, the case would still have been one calling, in our humble judgment, for energetic remonstrance on the part of this country. For packets engaged in the postal service, and keeping up the regular and periodical communications between the different countries of Europe and America and other parts of the world (though, in the absence of Treaty stipulations, they may not be exempted from visit and search in time of war, nor from the penalties of any violation of neutrality, if proved against them), are still, when sailing in the ordinary and innocent course of their legitimate employment (which consists in the general conveyance, without particular inquiry, of mails and passengers), entitled to peculiar favour and protection from the Governments in whose service they are virtually engaged. To detain, disturb, or interfere with them, without the very gravest cause, would be an act of a most noxious and injurious character, not only to a vast number and variety of individual and private interests, but to the public interests of neutral and friendly Governments.

By the Treaty between Great Britain and the United States, provision is made for the undisturbed continuance of these facilities of postal communication between the two countries, even in the event of war; and the same considerations which led to that stipulation are equally applicable to all other similar lines of postal communication. Heavy, therefore, in our opinion, would be the responsibility of any unjustifiable capture and detention (even if the forms of international procedure were strictly followed) of any mail-packet of this description; and we cannot hesitate to express our belief that the full extent of that responsibility would be incurred, unless the circumstances under which the detention might take place should be such as to furnish very different grounds of justification from any which could have been alleged in the case of the "Trent."

United States' authorities not justified in putting in irons masters and seamen of the "Revere" and "Louisa Agnes," captured for breaking blockade.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 15, 1862.

and seamen of two British schooners, "Revere" and "Louisa Agnes," which have been captured on a charge of breaking the blockade by the United States' vessel of war "Cambridge;" and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the putting the seamen in question in irons, under the circumstances in which, and for the period for which, this was avowedly done, was, in my opinion, wholly unjustifiable. These cases (of the "Revere" and the "Louisa Agnes") are distinguishable from the case of nine British seamen, imprisoned and put in irons in Fort Lafayette, upon which I reported on the 2nd December ultimo. These nine men were captured while voluntarily serving on board Confederate merchant-ships, and thereby became liable to be treated as prisoners of war, which is not the case with respect to the cases of the "Revere" and the "Louisa Agnes," two British vessels captured for breach of blockade.

The tone of Mr. Seward's note to Lord Lyons of December 3 is not satisfactory; and his suggestion at page 13 of this note as to the probability of the two seamen in question, if left free from irons, attempting the life of the prize master, or the delivery of the prize, when the prize crew apparently consisted of five in all, appears to me wholly unwarranted, there not being any ground whatever for suspecting them of having attempted, or even entertained, any such design.

I entirely concur with the observations of Lord Lyons in No. 764, and of Admiral Milne in his letter of October 28, 1861. The crews of neutral vessels captured and sent in for adjudication for breach of blockade are not enemies or prisoners of war; they are only to be detained to ensure their temporary safe keeping.

The observations of Lord Stowell in the case, cited by Admiral Milne, of the "San Juan Baptista" and "La Purissima Concepcion" (5 C. Robinson, 40), are conclusive as to the law and usage of nations on the subject.

This appears to be the first case in which this point has arisen between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States; and the concluding paragraph of Lord Lyons' note of December 3, together with the special instructions which he states will be issued to the flag officers of blockading squadrons on the subject, may probably render it needless, in your Lordship's opinion, to address any official communication to Mr. Seward, inasmuch as the result of Lord Lyons taking up these cases has been practically successful.

If, however, any such communication should, in your Lordship's opinion, be desirable, I would suggest that it may be to the following effect:—"That your Lordship had seen with satisfaction, that upon two cases having been brought to Mr. Seward's notice by Lord Lyons, in which British seamen captured and detained in charge of United States' prize crews, on board British merchant-vessels, for breach of blockade, had been unjustifiably confined in irons, Mr. Seward had informed Lord Lyons that an instruction would be addressed from the Secretary of the Navy to the flag officers of the blockading squadrons, to use irons only when and so long as necessary, and in all cases to pursue the utmost kindness, consistent with the safety of captures and prizes, towards seamen captured in attempting to break the blockade," and that your Lordship trusted that this instruction would be so carried into effect as to prevent the recurrence of any such cases; or to that effect.

Establishment of coal-depôts in British Colonies by belligerents.

My Lord, Temple, January 15, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a copy of a Report from Commodore Dunlop, inclosing copies of correspondence with the Governor of Nassau, New Providence, respecting the supposed intention of the Government of the United States to establish a depôt at that port, and the apprehensions which the Governor seems to entertain of the possible proceedings of the United States' cruizers in the neighbouring waters, to be inferred from the preparations made by a cruizer now there to pursue any Southern vessel belonging to the so-styled Confederate States now in that port.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this despatch into immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship what instructions should be given to the naval or Colonial authorities in regard to the matters to which he had specifically referred, as well as in regard to any other points adverted to in the correspondence which might seem to us to call for observation.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that your Lordship would be glad to be enabled to inform the Board of Admiralty early to-morrow of the opinion we might arrive at, in order that such instructions as may appear requisite may be sent out by the West India mail to-morrow evening.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, and during the temporary absence from town of Her Majesty's Advocate-General, we have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

Coal-depôts by belligerents to be refused.

1. That we think Lieutenant-Governor Nesbitt has acted properly in refusing to allow the proposed coal-depôt to be formed at Nassau, or to allow American men-of-war of either party to call at Nassau during the war. The formation or permission of such a depôt, for a purpose so directly connected with belligerent operations, would, in our opinion, be inconsistent with the neutrality of this country; and we think that it will be proper to instruct the Lieutenant-Governor that no such depôt can be permitted; but that if there are there any coals belonging to the Government of the United States, which may have been brought to Nassau in bonâ fide ignorance that the use intended to be made of them would be objected to, permission may be given to remove such coals, provided the whole quantity be simultaneously removed.

Belligerents to be prevented from making any British harbour a place from which to pursue the enemy's vessels.

2. That the authorities of the Bahama Islands will clearly be justified in preventing either of the belligerents from making any British harbour a place from which to pursue the enemy's vessels, though it may not be intended actually to assail them within British waters; and we think that the Lieutenant-Governor ought to be instructed to take such measures as may be necessary for that purpose, and that the naval authorities should be ordered to co-operate with him therein. Any such use of British waters would be a plain violation of the rights of the neutral territory. There is, however, some difficulty in defining, à priori, what ought to be deemed to be the proper test of such use; the rule that an interval of twenty-four hours shall elapse before a ship of one belligerent, leaving neutral waters, shall be followed by a ship of war of the other belligerent, being one which cannot be said to be established by the general consent and usage of nations, so as to have become part of international law. If (as seems to us probable) it would be desirable to establish a positive rule of this kind, we think that the most proper and unexceptionable course would be to do so by Royal Proclamation, made applicable to all those places to which the rule may be intended to apply; and if this course should be followed, the Proclamation should be so expressed as to prevent the pursuit, within the prohibited time, of any merchant-ships or ships of war of either belligerent; and it might be expedient, by the same Proclamation, to make express provision against the coaling of ships of war of either belligerent in such ports and places as it may not be thought proper to allow to be used for that purpose.

Belligerent operations to be strictly prevented within the British waters (considered as extending three miles from the shore).

3. With respect to any belligerent operations within British waters (which are to be considered as extending everywhere, in all British possessions, to a distance of three miles from the shore), we are of opinion that they should be strictly prevented, and that force ought, if necessary, to be used for that purpose. But we think that Her Majesty's naval officers cannot be instructed to interfere with any hostile operations which may be carried on by either belligerent wholly beyond these limits; and that, although the presence in the immediate neighbourhood of British waters, but beyond these limits, of a belligerent naval force, on the look-out for ships of the other belligerent, or for neutral ships suspected of carrying contraband or breaking blockade, may be attended with inconvenience to the trade of the Bahama Islands, it cannot lawfully be prevented by any interference on the part of the British authorities.

Cannot seize vessels of belligerents in British ports having on board contraband of war.

4. We observe, that Commodore Dunlop mentions the presence in the port of Nassau of a Southern steamer suspected of having contraband of war on board, in terms which imply that if sufficient proof of that fact had been brought forward, this vessel would have been deemed liable to seizure by the Colonial authorities; but unless there be some local law applicable to such a case (of which we are not aware), we do not conceive that the Colonial authorities would be justified in seizing any vessel, either of one of the belligerents or of any neutral Power which might come into any British port, merely on the ground that such vessel had on board contraband of war. She might be entitled to no protection, if seized by the other belligerent beyond the limits of neutral waters, but she would not be liable to seizure by the British authorities on that ground.

Having so recently reported our opinion upon the important questions of maritime law raised by Mr. Seward's note in the case of the "Trent," we do not conceive it to be necessary that we should advert, on this occasion, to those parts of Commodore Dunlop's despatch which relate to the same or any similar questions.

Shipment of marine steam-engines and iron armour plates for use of United States. Question of contraband of war.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 23, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd January instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying letters from Mr. Mc Cay and Messrs. James Jack and Co., dated respectively the 14th and 16th January instant, requesting to be informed whether marine steam-engines and iron armour-plates can lawfully be purchased in this country, and shipped for the use of the United States.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter from the Council Office, dated the 18th instant, stating that the Commissioners of Customs are authorized to permit the free exportation of all the articles that were prohibited to be exported by Her Majesty's Proclamations of the 30th of November and 4th of December last, until those Proclamations shall have been formally rescinded; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion, at my earliest convenience, as to what answers should be returned to Mr. Mc Cay and Messrs. James Jack and Co.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there is not at present any legal objection or impediment to the manufacture or export to the United States of America of any of the articles mentioned by Messrs. James Jack and Co., and Mr. Donald Mc Kay, viz., marine steam-engines, iron armour-plates for vessels of war, or gun-boat towers, but it is competent to Her Majesty at any time, by Proclamation or Order in Council, to prohibit their export.

The exercise of this power is a question depending on various considerations, and entirely within the discretion of Her Majesty's Government. Your Lordship can give no undertaking whatever on the subject.

An answer to this effect may, if your Lordship thinks fit, be returned to these applications.

As to what constitutes an effective blockade.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 25, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd January instant, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Racer,"* on the state of the blockade of the ports of Charleston and Wilmington; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether a state of blockade being notified, and a sufficient number of ships stationed at the entrance of the port, constitute an effective blockade, although, as stated in the inclosed papers, various ships may have successfully escaped through it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that, assuming that the blockade is duly notified, and also that a sufficient number of ships is stationed, and remains at the entrance of the port, really to prevent access to it, or to create an evident danger of entering or leaving it, and that these ships do not voluntarily permit ingress or egress, the fact that various ships may have successfully escaped through it (as in the particular instances mentioned in these papers), will not per se prevent it from being an effective blockade by international law.

The adequacy of the force to maintain a blockade being, however, always and necessarily a matter of fact and evidence, and one as to which different opinions may be entertained, it will probably be considered that a neutral State ought to exercise the greatest caution with reference to the disregard of a de facto and notified blockade, and ought not to disregard it, except when it entertains a conviction, which is shared by neutrals generally having an interest in the matter, that the power of blockade is abused by a State either unable to institute or maintain it, or unwilling, from some motive or other, to do so.

Restriction on the free sale of charcoal imported into Constantinople by Ionian, Demetrio Antippa.

Doctors' Commons, January 25, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople (No. 42, December 12, 1861), relative to a restriction placed by the Prefect at Constantinople on the free sale of charcoal imported into that capital by an Ionian named Demetrio Antippa; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether the protest made by Mr. Cumberbatch is well founded, and whether Her Majesty's Government can claim under Treaty, for British and Ionian subjects, the right to unrestricted action in regard to the selling price of merchandize.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these questions into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we observe that the particular act complained of, appears to be an arbitrary order (whether verbal or written does not appear), from Hussein Bey, to the effect that Antippa, an Ionian subject, shall not sell two cargoes of charcoal, purchased by him in the Ottoman dominions, and imported into Constantinople after payment of the established duties thereon, for more than a certain price (viz., 45 piastres per 100 okes), no general regulation or law, either fixing the price, or authorizing the Bey to fix it, at which charcoal is to be sold at Constantinople, is referred to; and it would appear (from Inclosures 3, 5, and 6, in Consul Cumberbatch's No. 42) that in previous instances similar attempts at interference by the Turkish local authorities have been successfully resisted. There does not appear anything in the Capitulations or Treaties to justify the conduct of Hussein Bey; and the note of the Turkish Government, of 27th August, 1838, on the IInd Article of the Convention of Balta Liman, is also in favour of the Consul's contention. Primâ facie, therefore, and in the absence of any general law or regulation fixing prices at which sales of certain articles shall take place, or conferring powers to fix them on the local authorities, British and Ionian subjects in Turkey are, in our opinion, clearly entitled to unrestricted action in regard to the selling price of merchandize owned by them.

If, however, any such law or regulation is relied on, then it must be referred to for the purpose of determining its consistency with existing Treaties.

Power of Consuls to punish persons returning to Japan, having been banished by Consular sentence.

Doctors' Commons, January 27, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st January instant, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Alcock, Her Majesty's Minister at Yeddo (No. 89 of the 27th of September, 1861), inclosing a copy of letter which he had addressed to the Attorney-General at Hong Kong, with reference to the case of persons returning to Japan in disregard of a Consular sentence banishing them from that country, and suggesting that Her Majesty's Consuls should be armed with power to visit with additional punishment such disregard of a Consular sentence, and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose, for reference, copies of the Orders in Council, relating to Japan, of the 23rd of January, 1860, and 4th of February, 1861; as well as the Report of the Law Officers of the 18th of April, 1861,* upon a somewhat similar question which had arisen in regard to British subjects returning to Turkey, after being banished from that country. And he was also pleased to state that instructions founded upon that Report were addressed at the time to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople and to the Judge of the Consular Court, but that no replies have yet been received from those officers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that, under the Order in Council of the 23rd of January, 1860 (Article 21) no power of second deportation from the dominions of the Tycoon of Japan is conferred on the Consul, on the ground and by reason merely of a deported person returning back to Japan after deportation, and, on his return, not finding satisfactory security for future good behaviour.

The Article in question does not appear to have contemplated the return of deported offenders to Japan; and we think that the Consular power of deportation is exhausted by the single exercise of it after a second conviction, or, under under the following Article (22), after a first conviction.

As to the course suggested by Mr. Alcock of refusing protection, and apprising the Japanese authorities of the position of returned offenders, the question raised is one of policy, rather than of law; but we venture to express a serious doubt whether, taking into consideration the character of the Japanese, and their practices and habits, such a course would be either expedient or safe. The proper course (as it appears to us) would be, if a practical inconvenience be found to arise under the existing Order, to advise Her Majesty to issue a further Order imposing, in respect of such returning after deportation (without more), the penalty of fine and imprisonment, to be followed again by deportation in the absence of security for good behaviour being given, and so toties quoties, as often as any deported offender may return.

Landed property belonging to Mr. Ross, in Virginia, taken possession of by United States' Government.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 27, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th January instant, in which he stated that with reference to the damage done to the estate of Mr. Ross in Virginia in consequence of its occupation by Federal troops (reported on in my letter of the 17th June ultimo*), he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a letter from Mr. Ross, dated the 11th instant, again requesting Her Majesty's Government to bring his claim for compensation before the Government of the United States, and to request that I would take Mr. Ross' application into consideration, and favour your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which should be adopted.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the information contained in the papers is still so imperfect that it is difficult to advise with any precision as to the course to be adopted. Lord Lyons in his letter to Mr. Ross' agent (Mr. Cassels) 15th June, 1861, pointed out the Regulations published by the United States' Government as to claims of this character.

There is no precise statement of the steps taken in accordance with these Regulations; but Mr. Ross states that he has made a claim for damages amounting to 19,997 dollars 27 cents "in the proper quarter" (whatever that may be), and that "no satisfaction of any kind could be got." It does not appear upon what estimate, evidence, or vouchers this claim was made, or how it was supported. It appears, however, that the United States' Government has paid Mr. Ross rent for his premises, at the rate of 300 dollars per month; but it does not appear whether this was claimed by Mr. Ross, either separately or as a portion of his general claim, or was voluntarily offered, and on what terms, by the United States' Government, independently of the claim. The payment of this rent, therefore, requires full explanation.

There is no information forthcoming as to the course which has been followed by the United States' Government in similar cases of claims made upon it by its own citizens, or by other foreigners, which information is necessary for enabling Her Majesty's Government to decide upon its course.

As the case actually stands, I cannot say that Mr. Ross has shown any sufficient ground for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government; he has made a claim which has not been rejected, and he has received something by way of rent on account of the military occupation of his property; he does not state that any other claims of the same class have been treated more favourably. There seems, nevertheless, no reason to doubt that the facts are substantially such as he represents, and that he has sustained serious losses by the use made of his property for military purposes, for which he is entitled to some compensation beyond that which he has received. He requests your Lordship to cause his claim to be brought to the notice of Mr. Seward "in a friendly way." I can only suggest that he may be desired to instruct his agent to explain fully to Lord Lyons the present state of the case, accompanying such explanations with full particulars as to dates, amounts, vouchers, and official communication with the United States' Government, and particularly to explain to Lord Lyons whether any, and what, legal means of redress are competent to Mr. Ross, and also what is the course which has been followed by the United States' Government in other cases of the same kind.

Lord Lyons may be instructed, on receiving this information, to use his influence to get the claim put in a proper train for settlement, if he shall upon the whole consider this advisable; but otherwise to send home the papers with his observations thereon, and not to make any official application to the United States' Government in the matter without instructions to that effect.

Export of arms to the United States.

Doctors' Commons, January 27, 1862.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Liverpool, New York, and Philadelphia Steam-Ship Company, dated the 21st January instant, desiring to be informed whether, under the provisions of the Proclamation of the 13th of May last, they might lawfully convey arms to the United States.

Mr. Hammond also inclosed a letter from the Council Office, stating that the Commissioners of Customs were authorized to permit the free exportation of all the articles that were prohibited to be exported by Her Majesty's Proclamations of the 30th of November and 4th of December last, until those Proclamations should have been formally repealed; and to request that we would take those papers into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the applicants may be informed that, under existing circumstances, the Commissioners of Customs are authorized to permit the free exportation of the articles prohibited to be exported by Her Majesty's Proclamations of November 30 and December 4, 1861, until those Proclamations shall have been formally rescinded; that, consequently, there is no legal objection or impediment on the part of Her Majesty's Government, or by the law of England, to the exporting or carrying to any port in the United States, or in the Confederate States, any articles whatsoever, whether contraband of war or of whatever description.

That it is competent to Her Majesty at any time, by Proclamation or Order in Council, to prohibit the export of arms, ammunition, gunpowder, military and naval stores, and any articles which Her Majesty shall judge capable of being converted into or made useful in increasing the quantity of military or naval stores; and that Her Majesty may at any time, and without previous notice, find it necessary to exercise this power. That the carrying by sea any article contraband of war, for the use of one belligerent, although it is no infringement of the law of this country, subjects the ship and cargo concerned therein to the risk of capture and condemnation by the other belligerent, as the applicants are doubtless aware.

An answer to the above effect may be returned to this application, subject to your Lordship's approval.

We assume that the Liverpool, New York, and Philadelphia Steam-Ship Company has no contract with, or regular employment in, the service of Her Majesty's Government. Should this be the case, we must request further information.

Seizure of the "Admiral" for alleged breach of blockade of Savannah.

Doctors' Commons, January 28, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Messrs. Fernie Brothers, of Liverpool, dated the 16th January instant, complaining of the seizure, by an United States' man-of-war, of their vessel, the "Admiral," for an alleged breach of the blockade of Savannah; and to request that I would take this case into my consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there is nothing at present forthcoming to call for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in this case. The "Admiral" appears to have sailed from Liverpool on the 13th September last, laden with salt under a charter-party, "to proceed off the port of Savannah, and if the blockade is raised, then to proceed into that port, and deliver the salt as per bill of lading, and if the blockade be not raised, then to proceed to St. John, New Brunswick."

There is a letter from the owners to the master of similar purport, dated the 12th September, instructing the master to call off the port, and endeavour to meet the blockading ship, and if warned off, to go to St. John.

The master states that he arrived "off the coast" on the 11th of December, after a very long passage, and that she was captured on the same day by the United States' ship of war "Alabama," thirty miles from the entrance to Savannah, without any previous "warning-off." It does not appear whether she had previously met with any vessel or received any further information as to the blockade. She has been sent to Philadelphia, where prize proceedings appear to have been instituted against her, and the master is in communication with Her Majesty's Consul there. Her owners rely on the absence of any previous warning-off from the blockading force, which warning they allege has been given in many similar cases, and they state that the vessel warned has thereupon been allowed to depart for her "alternative port."

Some intimation of the intended adoption by the United States' cruizers of this practice of "warning-off" previous to capture, was, I believe, given by President Lincoln in a Proclamation as to the blockade of the Southern ports issued in April last (of which I have no authentic copy), but I am not aware in what precise terms this intimation was given, or how it has been carried out in practice. Her admitted knowledge of the existence of the blockade when she sailed, and her intention to inquire of the blockading force at the mouth of the port as to its continuance, and her reliance on receiving a warning-off before capture, are questions for the Prize Court.

British prize law does not require any "warning-off" before capture, in cases where the blockade was previously known; nor does it allow of inquiries being made as to the continuance of a blockade of the blockading force off the port.

The attention of Lord Lyons and of the Consul at Philadelphia should be directed to the case, especially as regards the American law and practice on this point, and the owners may be so informed.

Draft Rules for the treatment of belligerent ships of war or privateers within British jurisdiction. Case of the "Nashville" and "Tuscarora."

Doctors' Commons, January 28, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to recapitulate the points upon which (as generally agreed upon in the meeting of some of Her Majesty's confidential servants held that day at the Foreign Office, at which we were present) it was desired that we should frame the Rules which might be required to give effect to the understanding then arrived at:—

1. That the port of Nassau should be closed as a port to ships of war of both belligerents in the contest now prevailing between the United States and the so-styled Confederate States of North America.

2. That the rule in regard to belligerent ships of war or privateers not being allowed to quit a British port in pursuit until the expiration of twenty-four hours after the departure of ships of war or privateers of the other belligerent, should be extended so as to afford the like exemption from pursuit to unarmed vessels.

3. That the Confederate steamer "Nashville" should be required to depart from British waters, or from the port in which she then was, within twenty-four hours; and the Federal steamer "Tuscarora" should be required to depart from British waters, or from the port in which she then was, within forty-eight hours, from a date to be named.

4. That, for the future, the ships of war and privateers of either belligerent should be required to depart from a British port in the United Kingdom and its Colonies twenty-four hours after their entrance, except in case of requiring repairs, and then twenty-four hours after such repairs are effected.

5. That such ships of war or privateers should be allowed to take in, while in a British port, only provisions and necessaries for the subsistence of their crews.

6. That so much coal only should be furnished in a British port to the ships of war or privateers of either belligerent as should be sufficient to carry them to the nearest port of their own country, or to some nearer destination.

7. That no coal should be supplied again to a ship of war or privateer of either belligerent in a British port until the expiration of three months after it had been allowed to obtain a supply in a British port.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship would be glad to receive our answer to this reference at our earliest convenience.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state, that he inclosed despatches from Mr. Grey and Mr. Edwardes, inclosing the French and Spanish Rules on some of the points above specified.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have prepared the accompanying draft of such Rules as we conceive to be proper for carrying into effect the several objects which Her Majesty's Government have in view, as explained in Mr. Hammond's letter. We have observed the same order in which those objects are enumerated by Mr. Hammond, but being of opinion that the three last heads of Mr. Hammond's enumeration may conveniently be combined in a single Rule, we have framed one Rule for that purpose accordingly.

We have adopted, as part of the second of our draft Rules, a general prohibition of the use of any British port as a station or place of resort for warlike purposes, for which a precedent occurs in the Gibraltar Proclamation of the 12th October, 1826.

Not being, at present, aware of the manner in which these Rules are intended to be promulgated, nor whether they are all to be embodied in one document, or some of them to be separately issued, we have not introduced them by any general recital or preamble, and we have framed the first and third so as to be capable of being separated, without inconvenience, from the rest.

If any preamble should be thought desirable, the forms usual in similar cases may be easily adapted to the draft. The second, fourth, and fifth Rules, if adopted in substance, will naturally go together.

The Spanish Rules, as well as the French, seem to be confined to ships of war or privateers coming into port with prizes; but the same principle justifies any other restriction on the use of neutral ports by belligerent vessels which may be thought requisite or convenient for the better preservation of a complete and impartial neutrality. At the same time, we consider it our duty to point out that these restrictions are very stringent, and, in many respects, peculiar; and it might be possible to suggest cases (as the case of many merchant-ships of one belligerent sailing from the same port successively in the presence of an armed ship of the other belligerent) in which the effect of such restrictions might be, to cause an unreasonable detention of the armed vessels of one of the belligerents. We do not, however, consider it our province to enter into the various questions of policy connected with this subject, which belong exclusively to Her Majesty's Government.

Inclosure in No. 16.

*Draft Rules.

1. DURING the continuance of the present hostilities between the Government of the United States of North America and the States calling themselves "the Confederate States of America," or until Her Majesty shall otherwise order, no ship of war or privateer belonging to either belligerent shall be permitted to enter or remain in the port of Nassau, or any other port, roadstead, or waters of the Bahama Islands, except by special leave of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Bahama Islands, or in case of stress of weather. If any such vessel should enter any such port, roadstead, or waters, by special leave, or under stress of weather, the authorities shall require her to put to sea as soon as possible, without permitting her to take in any supplies beyond what may be necessary for her immediate use.

If, at the time when this order is first notified in the Bahama Islands, there shall be any such vessel already within any port, roadstead, or waters of those islands, the Lieutenant-Governor shall give notice to such vessel to depart, and shall require her to put to sea, within such time as he shall, under the circumstances, consider proper and reasonable. If there shall then be ships of war or privateers belonging to both the said belligerents within the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, in or near the same port, roadstead, or waters, the Lieutenant-Governor shall fix the order of time in which such vessels shall depart. No such vessel of either belligerent shall be permitted to put to sea until after the expiration of at least twenty-four hours from the time when the last preceding vessel of the other belligerent (whether the same shall be a ship of war or privateer, or merchant-ship), which shall have left the same port, roadstead, or waters, or waters adjacent thereto, shall have passed beyond the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty.

2. During the continuance of the present hostilities between the Government of the United States of North America and the States calling themselves the Confederate States of America, all ships of war and privateers of either belligerent are prohibited from making use of any port or roadstead in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or in any of Her Majesty's colonies or foreign possessions or dependencies, or of any waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of the British Crown, as a station or place of resort for any warlike purpose, or for the purpose of obtaining any facilities of warlike equipment: and no ship of war or privateer of either belligerent shall hereafter be permitted to sail out of, or to leave, any port, roadstead, or waters, subject to British jurisdiction, from which any vessel of the other belligerent (whether the same shall be a ship of war, a privateer, or a merchant-ship), shall have previously departed, until after the expiration of at least twenty-four hours from the departure of such last-mentioned vessel beyond the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty.

3. Whereas there have been for some time past, and now are, within the limits of Her Majesty's territorial jurisdiction in or near Her Majesty's port of Southampton, two armed ships called the "Nashville" and the "Tuscarora," one of which belongs to the said States calling themselves the Confederate States of America, and the other belongs to the United States of North America; and whereas the said ship called the "Nashville" arrived in the said port some time before the said ship called the "Tuscarora," it is hereby ordered that the said ship called the "Nashville" be, and she is hereby required to leave the said port, and the waters within British jurisdiction adjacent thereto, and to proceed beyond the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, within a period not later than twenty-four hours from of the clock in the forenoon (afternoon) on the day of 1862. And the said ship called the "Tuscarora" is, in like manner hereby required to leave the said port, and the waters within British jurisdiction adjacent thereto, and to proceed beyond the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, within a period not later than forty-eight hours from of the clock in the forenoon (afternoon) on the same day of , 1862: Provided, nevertheless, that, if either of the said two ships shall put to sea before the expiration of the period hereby limited for that purpose, the other of the said ships shall not be permitted to depart until after an interval of twenty-four hours from the time when the ship which shall so first put to sea shall have passed beyond the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty: and if any other vessel belonging to either belligerent (whether the same shall be a ship of war, or a privateer, or a merchant-ship), shall have left the same port or the waters within British jurisdiction adjacent thereto, previously to the sailing of both or either of the said two ships, that one of the said two ships which shall belong to the other belligerent shall not be permitted to depart until after a like interval of twenty-four hours from the time when such other vessel as aforesaid shall have passed beyond the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty; and the times hereinbefore limited for the departure of the said two ships called the "Nashville" and the "Tuscarora" respectively, shall, in case of necessity, be extended so far as may be requisite for giving effect to this proviso but not further or otherwise.

4. If any ship of war or privateer of either belligerent shall, after the time when this Order shall be first notified and put in force in the United Kingdom, and in the several colonies and foreign possessions and dependencies of Her Majesty, respectively enter any port, roadstead, or waters belonging to Her Majesty, either in the United Kingdom or in any of Her Majesty's colonies or foreign possessions or dependencies, such vessel shall be required to depart and to put to sea within twenty-four hours after her entrance into such port, roadstead, or waters, except in case of stress of weather, or of her requiring provisions or things necessary for the subsistence of her crew, or repairs; in either either of which cases, the authorities of the port, or of the nearest port (as the case may be), shall require her to put to sea as soon as possible after the expiration of such period of twenty-four hours, without permitting her to take in supplies beyond what may be necessary for her immediate use: and no such vessel which may have been allowed to remain within British waters for the purpose of repair shall continue in any such port, roadstead, or waters for a longer period than twenty-four hours after her necessary repairs shall have been completed: Provided, nevertheless, that in all cases in which there shall be any vessels (whether ships of war, privateers, or merchant-ships) of both the said belligerent parties in the same port, roadstead, or waters within the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, there shall be an interval of not less than twenty-four hours between the departure therefrom of any such vessel (whether a ship of war, a privateer, or a merchant-ship) of the one belligerent, and the subsequent departure therefrom of any ship of war or privateer of the other belligerent: and the times hereby limited for the departure of such ships of war and privateers respectively, shall always, in case of necessity, be extended, so far as may be requisite for giving effect to this proviso, but not further or otherwise.

5. No ship of war or privateer of either belligerent shall hereafter be permitted, while in any port, roadstead, or waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, to take in any supplies except provisions and such other things as may be requisite for the subsistence of her crew, and except so much coal only as may be sufficient to carry such vessel to the nearest port of her own country, or to some nearer destination; and no coal shall be again supplied to any such ship of war or privateer in the same or any other port, roadstead, or waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty without special permission, until after the expiration of three months from the time when such coal may have been last supplied to her within British waters as aforesaid.

As to power to prevent a vessel of one belligerent to put to sea until twenty-four hours after the time the vessel of the other belligerent shall have left the same port.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 29, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th January instant, stating that, with reference to that part of the Draft Rules inclosed in our Report of the 28th instant,* in which it is stated that "no such vessel of either belligerent shall be permitted to put to sea until after the expiration of at least twenty-four hours from the time when the last preceding vessel of the other belligerent (whether the same shall be a ship of war, or privateer, or merchant-ship) which shall have left the same port, roadstead, or waters adjacent thereto, shall have passed beyond the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty," he was directed by your Lordship to inquire whether there is any precedent to justify Her Majesty in ordering that a ship of war of one belligerent should not sail till twenty-four hours after the departure of a merchant-ship of the other belligerent, and that, if not, your Lordship would wish to omit this condition; and to request that we would favour Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our reply to this inquiry.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this question into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to refer to any direct precedent to justify Her Majesty in ordering that a ship of war of one belligerent should not sail until twenty-four hours after the departure of a merchant-ship of the other belligerent.

We consider, however, that Her Majesty will be justified, in point of principle, in making such an order: having the power of excluding belligerent armed ships from her ports absolutely, excepting in case of distress, she may impose any limitations on permission to enter them; and the wrong to be guarded against, viz., the inception of hostile acts (as by chasing) within neutral territory is obviously more to be apprehended in relation to merchant-vessels, which are without the means of defending themselves against attack, than to armed ships.

Search of the "Marie Louise" of Quebec at Paimbœuf, on suspicion of French deserters being on board.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris inclosing a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Nantes, reporting the circumstances under which a portion of the crew of the British barque "Marie Louise," of Quebec, have, on the pretext of their being French deserters, been arrested by the gendarmerie of Paimbœuf, and the vessel itself been searched and two men taken from her; and to request that we would take this case into our consideration, together with the correspondence (herewith inclosed*) referred to by Earl Cowley as bearing upon the subject, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the legality of the proceedings of the French authorities, and the instructions which should be addressed to Earl Cowley or to the Consul in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, a British merchant-ship while lying in a French port is subject to French jurisdiction; and that her crew, whether on board or on shore, may be dealt with and punished, judicially, for any violation of French law committed by them within French jurisdiction. We therefore think that the French authorities at Painbœuf were warranted in arresting on shore those of the crew of the "Marie Louise" who were French subjects, on reasonable suspicion of their being by French law "deserters," and in boarding and searching the "Marie Louise," if they had reasonable suspicion of French subjects liable, according to the law of France, to be punished as deserters, being on board; and that they were further justified in removing from the ship such deserters (if any) as on search they may have discovered. But as regards British subjects, or persons of any other nationality than French, forming part of the crew of the "Marie Louise," we think that the French authorities had no right, according to international law, to deal with them as deserters, unless it appeared that they had, at some former period, voluntarily entered themselves on board some French ship, and had afterwards in France, and during the continuance of their engagement, deserted therefrom.

The Convention of 1854, between Great Britain and France, does not apply to the present case.

Such being the law, as between the two nations, bearing on the case (as we view it), we have further to observe that the facts do not appear to be fully known to, or to have been fully inquired into by, the Consul at Nantes; and to enable us to apply the law to the particular circumstances, we should be furnished with a full statement of the grounds, as to each of the persons detained or apprehended, on which the French authorities acted, and (it may be presumed) will seek to justify what they have done. We would therefore submit to your Lordship that the Consul should be instructed to represent the circumstances of the case (as they have come before him) fully to the French authorities on the spot, and to request (as we think he may well do under the circumstances) an explanation of the proceedings that have taken place. He should also transmit with such explanation (when it is received) such information as to the nationality of each person arrested, and the particular act of "desertion" charged against each, as he may be able to collect.

With reference to the Consul's question as to whether the men arrested and detained by the French authorities are to be considered as deserters from the "Marie Louise" within the meaning attaching to "desertion" by English law, we are of opinion that this question must be answered in the negative.

We have, &c.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 30, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from the Board of Trade, dated the 22nd January instant, inclosing a copy of a communication addressed to that Department by Messrs. Pearson and Co. of Hull, respecting the detention at New York of their barque the "Empress," which had been conveyed thither by the Federal blockading force stationed off the Mississippi, where the "Empress" had grounded upon a mud-bank; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the British vessel "Empress" appears to have sailed from Rio Janeiro in September 1861 (the precise date is not stated), with a cargo of coffee, to New Orleans, under charter-party stipulating that "if the vessel on arrival be warned off by a blockading squadron, she was to proceed to New York, Baltimore, or Philadelphia."

She was found aground on a mud-bank off the mouth of the Mississippi, apparently on the 27th November, by some of the blockading squadron (not named), and sent (apparently in charge of a prize-crew) to New York, where she is said to have arrived on the 18th December "as a prize." Since her capture in November, no communication has been received from the master or crew.

I can only, therefore suggest that the Consul at New York should be instructed to send full particulars respecting what has been done, or is doing, with the ship, her master, and crew, and to watch the case.

This case seems to involve the same question as that of the "Admiral," reported on by me January 28th,* and to be subject to the concluding observations in that Report.

UNITED STATES.

Claim of Messrs. Whitworth for losses sustained by their vessel the "Boyne" being warned off the whole Southern Coast of the United States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 30, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd January instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 11th October ultimo,† upon the case of the "Boyne," whose owners claim compensation from the United States' Government on account of that vessel having been warned off the whole Southern coast of the United States, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the former papers,‡ a despatch from Lord Lyons,§ inclosing a copy of a Report from Her Majesty's Consul at New York of all particulars known to him with regard to that vessel; and to request that I would again take this case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have again taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Consul Archibald states that the master of the "Boyne," on his arrival at New York on the 31st May, stated verbally to the Consul that he had been boarded by an officer of the "Niagara," and warned off the Southern coast, and that he considered that his owners would have a claim for damages for the breaking up of the voyage, and that on his return to England he would make up his claim. Therefore, notwithstanding the delay in making the claim, there is no reason to doubt that the facts suggested as to the "warning off" are substantially true. The "Boyne" appears to have sailed from Fleetwood on the 25th of March, before any blockade of Savannah existed, with a cargo of coal, bound to that port; she was entitled to continue her voyage unless and until the port was blockaded; she was warned off the whole Southern coast on the 11th May by the "Niagara."

If, therefore (as alleged by the owners), no blockade of Savannah then existed, and that the blockade of this port only commenced (as they state), on the 28th May, they will, in my opinion, have a fair claim for compensation against the Government of the United States, although not to the amount suggested (6,567*l.*), which appears extravagant.

The question, therefore, now turns upon the existence of any blockade of Savannah on the 11th May last; and upon this I can only again refer to the second and third questions in my previous Report on this case of the 11th October.

There is no information on this subject contained in these papers, excepting the certificate from several masters of ships in that port, dated May 16 (Inclosure 3 in Messrs. Whitworth's letter of September 26, 1861); the then Acting Consul at Savannah (Mr. Fullarton) does not certify to this effect; and the certificate, as it stands, is not sufficient to enable Her Majesty's Government to act upon it. Before Her Majesty's Government can interfere in support of this claim, it must be in a position to adduce adequate proof of the non-existence of any blockade of Savannah on the 11th May last; if such proof can be adduced, a claim for compensation to the owners may be made, but not otherwise.

My Reports of the 3rd July and 17th August last on the somewhat similar case of the "Monmouth," apparently refer to some information received in that case as to the non-existence of any blockade of Savannah until May 28, which may (on reference thereto) prove sufficient for the purpose.

If, in addition to this case, and that of the "Monmouth," there are any other cases of the same class (viz., vessels warned off all Southern ports when the particular ports of their destination were not blockaded), it may be desirable to deal with them all, as far as practicable, at the same time, and to consider what (if any) communication should be addressed to the United States' Government thereon. This must greatly depend upon the evidence forthcoming or procurable as to the non-existence of the particular blockades at the dates in question, as to which any information from Her Majesty's Consulate at Savannah will be material.

BRAZIL.

Draft of Convention for reciprocal treatment and privileges of Consuls in Great Britain and Brazil.

My Lord,

Doctors' Commons, January 30, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's of the 16th January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint me that some time ago you received a despatch from Mr. Christie, Her Majesty's Minister in Brazil, inclosing the draft of a Convention respecting the reciprocal treatment and privileges of Consuls, which he had submitted to the Brazilian Government, and which he thought they would be willing to sign with him.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that on examining the draft of Convention, your Lordship perceived that it contained some provisions which Her Majesty's Government would not have the power to carry into effect, and which Mr. Christie had communicated without authority to the Brazilian Government. And that Mr. Christie subsequently came to this country, and that no further step has been taken with regard to this Consular Convention; but that being now about to return to his post, it becomes necessary to furnish him with some instructions on the subject.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that it will of course be beneficial to British interests to obtain from Brazil a Convention in the terms of the draft, with such alterations as are necessary to adapt it to the law of England; but that under the equal and reciprocal form of its stipulations, British Consuls in Brazil would obtain much greater powers and privileges than Brazilian Consuls in England. But that on some points, however, facilities can be given by Great Britain on condition of reciprocity; as in regard to merchant seaman deserters, under "The Foreign Deserters Act," 15 Vict., cap. 26; and in regard to the administration of estates in the absence of personal representatives, by the Act of last session 25 and 25 Vict., cap. 121.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that it would be distinctly explained to the Brazilian Government that Her Majesty's Government will be unable, if the Convention were concluded, to give to Brazilian Consuls in England identically the same privileges as the law of Brazil may enable the Brazilian Government to give to foreign Consuls in Brazil, but that they would give every privilege which British law does or may permit them to give. And he was also pleased to state that if the Brazilian Government were, under these circumstances, willing to conclude the Convention, your Lordship would instruct Mr. Christie to sign it. And that your Lordship therefore requested that I would have the goodness to examine the draft, and report to you my opinion whether it might be adopted, subject to the alterations marked in red ink, or what further amendments I might think necessary.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have examined the draft Convention and introduced certain alterations therein in order to render it more consonant to the requirements of English law; subject to which, and to the explanations to be given to the Brazilian Government pointed out in Mr. Layard's letter, the Convention may, if your Lordship thinks it desirable, be adopted. I add some remarks, which may assist Mr. Christie in avoiding misapprehension in his negotiations with Brazil on this subject:—

Article III.—It should be clearly understood that no Brazilian Consul can be permitted to solemnize marriages in the British dominions; and unless this stipulation is requisite to render valid British Consular marriages in Brazil, and will have that effect, the word "marriages" had better be omitted.

Article IV.—Her Majesty's power in respect of Consular administration to property of Brazilians dying in her dominions is strictly defined and limited by Statute 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 121, sec. 4, and it will be therefore very desirable to introduce into the Convention the words of that section, which I have done. An Order in Council will be requisite if this Article of the Convention stands.

Article V.—As this Article stands, it is in the nature of a general international stipulation. The omission of the words struck through will be necessary to confine it to Consular privileges.

Article VI.—"The Foreign Deserters Act, 1852" (15 Vict., cap. 26), gives Her Majesty the special power thereby conferred whenever it is "made to appear to Her Majesty that due facilities are or will be given for recovering and apprehending seamen who desert from British merchant-ships in the territories of any foreign Power." No Convention is absolutely requisite on this subject. The mode of proof of the fact of desertion cannot be regulated by Convention. This in the British dominions must be determined by the Magistrates according to the local law.

Article VII.—The laws relating to wreck and salvage are by no means simple or uniform throughout the British dominions; and Her Majesty would not be able to carry out the express stipulations contained in the former part of this Article. This portion of the Article is also of a general nature, extending beyond Consular privileges; I would therefore suggest that this portion of the Article should be omitted.

If Mr. Christie should, in the course of his negotiations on the subject of this Convention, find that either the omission or insertion of any particular stipulation on the subject of Consular privileges is desirable, he should bear in mind that Her Majesty's power of conferring any such privileges on Brazilian Consuls is strictly limited by law; and that any special stipulations should be therefore avoided; but Her Majesty may safely stipulate generally to place Brazilian Consuls on the same footing as those of "the most favoured nation."

The particular points upon which British interests practically require express stipulations for Consular privileges in Brazil are, of course, the most important to be kept in view by Mr. Christie; and in framing such stipulations, regard should be had to the particular object to be attained, or alteration of the existing state of things to be secured, in Brazil. As regards reciprocity, it may, perhaps, turn out that Brazil does not urgently require any other Consular privileges than those which she actually possesses in the Queen's dominions.

Question of claims to be submitted to Mixed Commission.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 31, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 9th January instant, stating that, with reference to previous correspondence as to the Mixed Commission at Brazil, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note from the Brazilian Minister at this Court, inclosing a Memorandum which he had been instructed to present to Her Majesty's Government on the part of the Brazilian Government containing their views as to the questions which have arisen regarding the Commission, and the nature of the claims to be submitted to its decision.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose a letter and Memorandum on this subject which have been received from Mr. Christie, Her Majesty's Minister at Rio, now on leave of absence in this country, and to state that your Lordship thought it advisable that Mr. Christie should communicate with us on this subject if that gentleman could do so before leaving England on his return to his post on the 8th of February, beyond which day he cannot be detained in this country.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that your Lordship would be glad if we could in the interval direct our attention to this question, and report to you our opinion upon the views respectively entertained by Her Majesty's Government and that of Brazil, as to the nature of the claims which should have been submitted to the Commission now brought to a close, and to any Commission which may hereafter be appointed to inquire into the matters in dispute between the two Governments, and that we would advise generally upon the suggestions contained in Mr. Christie's Memorandum; and he was also pleased to inclose for our convenience the previous correspondence connected with this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have had the advantage of a full communication with Mr. Christie on the subject of your Lordship's note, and with respect to—

1. The claims which should have been submitted to the Commission now brought to a close, we have to observe:—That in our opinion (and in conformity with all previous Law Officers' opinions on the subject) no claims brought forward, or proposed to be brought forward, by the Brazilian Government, in respect of, or arising out of, cases adjudicated by the "Mixed Commission" previous to 1845 ought to have been submitted to the Commission lately brought to a close. For, in the first place, such claims could not, with especial reference to the composition of the Mixed Commission, and to the express stipulation that the decrees of the Commissioners should be without appeal, be "considered," even in any just or reasonable sense of the term, as being "unsettled;" and, in the next place, all the claims so adjudicated had, by the act of adjudication, and by the terms of the Convention under which the Mixed Commission was constituted, been changed from claims by corporations or individuals, on whose behalf their own Government might interpose, into claims by one Government directly and immediately against the other Government, and so, were placed beyond the provisions of the Convention of 1858. Her Majesty's Government, on the one hand, refused to sanction any cognizance being taken by the late Commission of cases of this class; the Brazilian Government, on the other, insisted upon their being entertained as within the Convention. This state of things, as it appears to us, fully justified Her Majesty's Government in allowing the Convention of 1858 to expire by lapse of time, and in not consenting to any prolongation of the time of its operation, quite independently of the great latitude which its terms unfortunately gave to unsettled matters, namely, such as should be so "considered" by either party. Such being our view of the Convention of 1858 having thus, de facto, come to an end, we do not feel that we ought to discuss (or could do with any advantage) the various arguments and observations of the Brazilian Minister in his Memorandum of November 1861, on this head, namely, as to what ought, on a proper construction of the Convention of 1858, to have been submitted on the one side, and on the other, to the Commissioners.

2. The claims which ought to be submitted to any Commission which may hereafter be appointed.—These we think ought to include all unadjudicated claims on either side, subject to the condition as to "lists," to which we advert hereafter. Of these we understand there are several, so as to furnish a full answer to the argument put forward in the Brazilian Memorandum of November 1861, that the British interpretation of the Convention would reduce its operation as regards Brazilian claims to nil. We think it equally clear, for the reason given above, that no claims arising out of or connected with cases which were adjudicated on by the Mixed Commission, ought to be submitted to any Commissioners or other tribunal to be hereafter invested with powers of inquiry and award; and it follows that, unless the Brazilian Government will come under a Convention with this exclusion, we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to consent to any new Convention for the general settlement of claims on the one side or on the other. The means and power of pressing individual claims by the one Government against the other, will, of course, still remain to either Government. It is obvious, at the same time, that a grouping of the various existing claims, and the submitting of them to a common arbitration, is most desirable, if such an arrangement can be accomplished on terms not altogether unreasonable, and therefore inadmissible. Cases which were adjudicated by Vice-Admiralty Courts since 1845 ought not, in our opinion, to be entirely opened (if at all) under any fresh Convention.

It will, however, be for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government whether (especially if, in the interests of British subjects, a new Convention be desirable, and such new Convention be found unattainable on any other terms) it may not be expedient to include amongst the cases to be submitted the Vice-Admiralty adjudications, on the condition, however, that the adjudications shall, in each case, be primâ facie evidence both of jurisdiction in the Court, and of the justice of the decision. We think it might be highly inexpedient to allow the wide question to be opened of the competency of the Vice-Admiralty Courts, which have acted since 1845, to entertain and decide on the charges against Brazilian vessels of piracy under the Slave Trade Suppression Treaties.

After reading the Brazilian Memorandum of November 1861, we cannot say that these claims, thus limited, might not, with a fair show of reason, have been insisted on by the Brazilian Government as coming within the Convention of 1858, so long as that Convention remained in force; and if that be so, there is, of course, all the more reason for Her Majesty's Government consenting to their being plainly, and in terms, included in a new Convention.* Without the limitation we have pointed out we cannot recommend that any cases adjudicated by British Vice-Admiralty Courts since 1845 should be submitted for the consideration of any fresh Commission.

With reference to the payment of sums adjudicated in favour of Brazilian subjects, we think that sums adjudicated by the Mixed Commission, having, by the terms of the Convention under which that Commission sat, become debts from one Government to the other, all such sums awarded in favour of Brazilian claimants might with propriety be paid by Her Majesty's Government, assuming, of course, that the determination will be taken never, under any circumstances, to re-open these claims, or any claims of the same class.

Whether sums awarded in favour of Brazilian subjects by the Vice-Admiralty Courts (as by way of "costs and damages" on the release of captured vessels) should be paid by the British Government, would seem properly to depend on the final arrangement that may be made as to the conclusiveness or non-conclusiveness of the Vice-Admiralty adjudications, should Brazil, as well as Great Britain, agree to treat these adjudications as final, and leaving nothing, so far, unsettled, then we cannot discover any fair and reasonable grounds for withholding payment. But, on the other hand, so long as Brazil shall insist on treating these adjudications as not final, and as, on the contrary, giving rise to possible claims for compensation (and if one such adjudication may be re-opened, so may any other for a like reason), we see no sufficient reason for concluding that the British Government ought at present to satisfy the award in favour of Brazilian subjects. As we have before oberved, it is, of course, open to either or both Governments to urge, in proper diplomatic form, the claims of individual subjects of either against the other.

Should any future Convention be agreed on or negotiated, we would strongly recommend the adoption of "lists" of the claims on each side being delivered to the other, and by proper references being incorporated in, and made part of, the Convention. We would further venture to suggest the careful avoidance of the use of any such inconveniently comprehensive terms as were employed in the Convention of 1858 in describing what the "unsettled" claims intended to be brought under the consideration of the Commission were.

Production of Papers before the Court of Session in Scotland, relating to appointment of Mr. J. Udney as British Consul at Venice and Leghorn in 1760 and 1776.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th January ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Bristow, requesting on behalf of their client, Mr. George Udney, that certain papers relating to the appointment, in 1760, of Mr. John Udney as British Consul at Venice, and his subsequent appointment, in 1776, as British Consul at Leghorn, might be allowed to be produced in evidence in a suit now pending before the Court of Session in Scotland.

Mr. Layard inclosed copies and extracts of the papers in question, together with a correspondence which had passed between the Foreign Office and Mr. Udney on the above-mentioned subject, and requested that we would take this matter into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Messrs. Bristow's application might properly be complied with.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, we see no objection to the request of Messrs. Coverdale and Co., in their letter of the 27th ultimo, being complied with, viz., by allowing copies of the letters in question to be taken or made; and by some person from the Foreign Office attending, with the originals, before the Examiner, on a convenient appointment of time and place being made. The originals, we understand, are not desired to be left with the Examiner; and, in our opinion, possession of such originals ought not to be parted with.

Refusal of British legal and Consular authorities at Smyrna to afford assistance to Mr. Stephen Reggio, a naturalized British subject.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Coleman, Turquand, Young, and Co., dated the 17th January ultimo, relative to the refusal of the British Legal and Consular authorities at Smyrna to afford assistance to Mr. Stephen Reggio, a naturalized British subject.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he inclosed Mr. Reggio's certificate of naturalization, as it had accompanied Messrs. Coleman's letter, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be given to the British authorities at Smyrna in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Stephen Reggio's certificate of naturalization expressly excepts "all rights and capacities of a natural-born British subject out of, or beyond, the dominions of the British Crown and the limits thereof, other than such as may be conferred on him by the grant of a passport from the Secretary of State to enable him to travel in foreign parts."

It appears to us, therefore, that Vice-Consul Logie has taken a correct view of this case. Mr. Reggio is only entitled to the ordinary protection of a traveller with a British passport; he is not entitled to the assistance which he seeks in his letter to Legal Vice-Consul Logie of October 17, 1861, viz., the assistance of a dragoman in obtaining information at the local Ottoman Courts as to some property appertaining to him at Smyrna.

Mrs. Rowley's claim to lands belonging to her late husband Captain Rowley, R.N.

Doctors' Commons, February 10, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying papers* respecting a claim preferred by Mrs. Rowley (widow of the late Captain Rowley, R.N.), against the Argentine Government, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with my opinion whether Mrs. Rowley is entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government in respect to this claim, and if so, to what extent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That considering the absence of any statement in support of Mrs. Rowley's claim to the intervention of Her Majesty's Government on her behalf, beyond that contained in the "extract" appended to the Countess of Kinnoull's letter to your Lordship of July 1861, and the various reasons against such intervention suggested in Mr. Lettsom's despatch No. 71, I cannot advise your Lordship that, in the actual state of the case, any sufficient ground exists for such intervention.

I observe, however, that Mr. Lettsom considers Mrs. Rowley's claim to be "in part, at least, well founded," and "admits its justice to a certain extent." The Government appears to be wrongfully in possession of a very valuable property in which she has a legal interest, and it does not appear that she has any legal means of redress. She claims to represent the rights of her deceased husband and the interests of her children, and she alleges that an "arrangement" was entered into between her husband and the Government that the lands in question should be valued at 300,000*l.*, which arrangement she now seeks the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in enforcing.

Under the peculiar circumstances of the case, I would therefore suggest that she should have an opportunity of making a distinct statement, with dates and particulars, of the nature and amount of her claim, and of the precise grounds on which she seeks the intervention of Her Majesty's Government as to the whole or any part of such claim; she should explain the position of her late husband as to this claim, and the legal character in which she represents his rights and those of her children therein, and further explain why no legal remedy is open to her; she should also give the precise dates and terms of any arrangements or admissions on the part of the Government, on which she relies, and state distinctly what she now asks of the Monte Videan Government, and what steps she desires that Her Majesty's Government should take on her behalf. If the Monte Videan Government has ever given any answer to her claim, she should supply it. She might transmit this statement to your Lordship through Mr. Lettsom, who might annex his observations and explanations thereon, putting the matter into such a position as to enable Her Majesty's Government to form an opinion on the whole case.

Mr. Lettsom should further explain whether there have been any other claims of the same character, in which no question of nationality arises, and if so, how the Government has dealt with them; and also, as to this claim, whether the Government altogether disputes its validity, or has made any, and what, offers of settlement or admissions; or has put it into any, and what, course of settlement or adjudication.

* From Lady Kinnoull, July 19, 1861; to Lady Kinnoull, July 29, 1861; to Mr. Lettsom, No. 28; from Mr. Lettsom, No. 71.

Mr. Lettsom's attention may be particularly directed to the following points:—

1. The existence or non-existence of any legal means of redress on the part of Mrs. Rowley against the Government.

2. The probable answer or defence of the Government to any official intervention; bearing in mind that Her Majesty's Government might be content with securing a fair hearing for Mrs. Rowley, as before Commissioners or an arbitrator.

3. The apparent fact that the Government has committed, and profited by, a great wrong, and refuses to make any compensation whatsoever, and that Mrs. Rowley and her children will be entirely without redress unless Her Majesty's Government can interfere in their behalf.

4. The excessive amount being capable of subsequent adjustment, and not affording any conclusive reason against intervention.

5. The existence and effect of any arrangement made by the Government with the late Captain Rowley, and Mrs. Rowley's rights thereon accruing, as his legal representative, and as acting on behalf of his children.

7. The practicability of separating Mrs. Rowley's claim into different parts, and of supporting those parts only which are well founded.

Capture of the "Cheshire" off Savannah, and removal of part of the crew from the vessel.

Doctors' Commons, February 10, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying papers and memoranda connected with the voyage and capture of the British vessel "Cheshire," off Savannah, and the proceedings which have been hitherto taken in the case before the Prize Court at New York; and to request, more especially with reference to the removal from the vessel, by the captor, of the master, mate, and greater part of the crew, that I would report to your Lordship my opinion whether any and what steps can, as the case now stands, be taken by Her Majesty's Government in behalf of the owners of the ship and cargo, or of the portion of the crew taken out of the vessel.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the capture of the "Cheshire" appears to me to have been justifiable, under the circumstances appearing in the set of papers indorsed "Correspondence."

The cargo is described, in Mr. Hill's letter to the master of October 8, 1861, as "the property of Messrs. W. Battersby and Co., of Savannah," and the master is instructed to call off that port and go in, if there is no blockade, but on no account whatever to attempt to enter a blockaded port."

It appears, from Mr. Finn's letter to Mr. Joseph Battersby of December 24, 1861, that she made the land on the 5th December, off Port Royal, and ran along about nine miles from the land, towards Tybee, and that she saw a number of vessels at Port Royal and Tybee. She does not appear to have attempted to communicate with any of these, or with either port, in order to obtain information as to the blockade of Savannah. She is then stated to have "stood out to sea for the night and run in the next morning, when she was overhauled and captured by the steamer 'Augusta,'" which put a prize-crew on board and removed the master and crew. She was taken to New York, where the case is pending before the Prize Court, wherein the owner's interests are duly represented by Mr. Edwards as Counsel; and it appears from the letter of Mr. Dubrow (the owner's agent there) of the 21st January (the latest document in point of date), that the Consul and Lord Lyons are attending to the case, and that Mr. Dubrow is inclined to think "it will be bad policy to push the matter."

There is nothing forthcoming from the Consul or Lord Lyons, who may possibly have taken some steps in the matter.

Under these circumstances I am of opinion that there is, at present, no ground for Her Majesty's Government instructing Lord Lyons to make any application to the United States' Government as regards either the ship or the cargo.

As regards the master and crew, their removal from the ship has been brought to the notice of the Prize Court, which pronounced such removal to be "very irregular," and an application has been made to discharge the vessel on this ground, which seems to be, in effect, still pending.

If, under these circumstances, the parties interested desire the intervention of Her Majesty's Government as to the master and crew, Her Majesty's Government will, in my opinion, be justified in instructing Lord Lyons (provided that they still remain absent from New York) to apply to the Government of the United States on the subject, and to call the attention of the Government to the Judge's opinion of the irregularity of such removal, and to the fact that they are not enemies or rebels, and cannot be treated as prisoners of war; requesting the production of the master and mate as witnesses at New York, and their discharge, as well as that of the rest of the crew, and an explanation of the reason for their exceptional treatment.

As to request of Mr. Lindsay to be informed what ports or parts of coasts of Confederate States are efficiently blockaded.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 11, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter from Mr. Lindsay, requesting to be informed what ports or parts of the coast of the so-styled Confederate States are now in such a state of blockade as to render it imperative on British merchants to avoid them in order to be protected against lawful capture; and to request that I would take this letter into my consideration, at my earliest convenience, and favour your Lordship with my opinion as to what answer should be returned to Mr. Lindsay.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Lindsay's application is for information as to a matter of fact, as to which I am not in a position to offer any opinion. I am not aware of any port in the Confederate States being free from blockade; I can, therefore, only suggest that he may be informed that your Lordship is not aware of any port in the possession of the so-called Confederate States of America being actually free from blockade, or open to foreign ships without danger of capture; and that he must act upon his own responsibility in dispatching a vessel with cargo to any of those ports.

As to expediency of laying before Parliament nominal Lists of Vessels which have eluded the blockade of Confederate ports.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 12, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to me that you propose to lay before Parliament the reports which have reached Her Majesty's Government as to the manner in which the blockade of the Confederate ports has been enforced by the Government of the United States.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that among these papers are found nominal lists of vessels which have succeeded in eluding the blockade; and that, politically, your Lordship would have no objection to lay those lists before Parliament, but that it occurred to your Lordship that possibly some prejudice might result to the owners of such vessels at some future time, if the names of the vessels were to be published in an official document presented to Parliament; and that your Lordship would therefore be glad to have my opinion, at my earliest convenience, as to the expediency or otherwise of publishing these lists.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That your Lordship is doubtless aware that I am ignorant of the contents of the papers in question, and of the object contemplated by their publication. I am not aware of any communication having been made to the United States' Government by that of Her Majesty of the invalidity or inefficiency of the blockade of the Confederate ports; and I cannot, as at present advised, see any advantage which is likely to accrue to Her Majesty's Government, or to British commercial interests, by the proposed publication.

However this may be, the official publication of the details, with names and dates of British vessels, or of any vessels chartered or freighted on British account, which have broken or eluded this blockade, will, under existing circumstances, in my opinion, be attended with prejudicial results to the owners or parties interested, and possibly also to Her Majesty's Government in relation to that of the United States, and, according to my present impression, I am of opinion that any such publication will be decidedly inexpedient.

Stay of the Confederate ship of war "Sumter" in the port of Gibraltar, having entered that port previous to the Rules issued 31st January.

Doctors' Commons, February 12, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter from the War Office, requesting to be enabled to return an answer to a question in regard to the stay of the Confederate ship of war "Sumter" at Gibraltar, which had been asked by the Governor of that fortress.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that it appeared to your Lordship that the "Sumter" had not entered the port of Gibraltar after the notification at that port of the Rules contained in your Lordship's letter to the Admiralty of the 31st of January, which he therewith transmitted to us, but that if she went away and returned, she would be subject to the Rules as promulgated; but that your Lordship requested that we would take the question into our consideration, with reference generally to the Rules laid down in your Lordship's letter, and, at our earliest convenience, report our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Governor of Gibraltar.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Governor may be informed that, under the circumstances stated, the "Sumter," not having entered the port of Gibraltar after the notification of the Rules and Orders in question, cannot be required to depart within the 3rd Rule.

If she should have made use, or should hereafter make use, of the port or territorial waters of Gibraltar as a station or place of resort for any warlike purposes (such as for the purpose of making, or cruizing with intent to make, hostile captures of ships), she may be ordered by the Governor to depart, under Rule 2; and it will be competent for Her Majesty, at her discretion, to send special instructions to the Governor as to his requiring her to depart, treating her in this respect as the "Tuscarora" was treated at Southampton. She is in all respects subject to Rule 4.

Mr. Glover's claim against Ismail Pasha for breach of contract for hire of the steamer "Enchantress." Question as to reference to a Mixed Commission.

Doctors' Commons, February 13, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the former papers, a despatch which your Lordship had received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 19), in reply to the accompanying instruction, which was addressed to his Excellency on the receipt of my Report of the 5th November ultimo,* on the claim of Mr. Glover.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state, that I should see by Sir Henry Bulwer's report that the Porte does not accede to the demand made for payment of 4,000*l.* to the claimant, but proposes that the question should be referred to a Mixed Commission; and that, under these circumstances, he was to request that I would take the papers again into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship at my early convenience with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government should accede to the Porte's proposal, or should persist in the demand already made for the settlement of this claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the question now submitted to my consideration appears to be one of policy and expediency rather than of law.

There is nothing stated which alters or affects the opinion as to the liability of the Turkish Government to pay Mr. Glover 4,000*l.* expressed in my Report of November 5, 1861. If, however, your Lordship does not consider it advisable, under existing circumstances, to insist further on the payment of this sum, then I see no alternative but a reference to a Mixed Commission.

I assume that Mr. Glover is still in a position to prove his case before such a Commission. The reference to such a Commission appears to have been first suggested by Sir Henry Bulwer in his note to Aali Pasha of October 2, 1861, and is accepted ("adhered to") by Aali Pasha in his note to Sir H. Bulwer of January 7, 1862; nothing, therefore, remains but to settle the terms of the reference.

I observe that Sir Henry Bulwer proposes, if your Lordship should think fit to refer the case to a Mixed Commission, to send to Aali Pasha the draft note inclosed (No. 3 in No. 19); but it seems to me that this draft will require some modification. I would suggest, that in order to save time, the note now to be sent by Sir H. Bulwer to Aali Pasha should contain the heads or terms of the submission or reference of the claim to the decision of a Mixed Commission; and not merely (as now) an offer to submit a proposal to this effect to your Lordship.

The terms of reference suggested in this draft note are not precisely identical with those suggested in Sir H. Bulwer's despatch to your Lordship (No. 19). The terms contained in the despatch are preferable to those contained in the draft. A definite time should be fixed for the payment of the money, but I question the propriety of insisting on a guarantee from the Turkish Government that the Commission shall give its sentence within three weeks of its appointment; but this must be left to Sir H. Bulwer's discretion. It may also be desirable, adverting to what has passed, to insist that the Turkish Government shall expressly admit its direct liability to that of Her Majesty in respect of this claim without reference to the question of the liability of Ismail Pasha to Mr. Glover, or to the Government, or to his residence in Turkey, or appearance before the Commission. It should be expressly provided that the Commission shall decide upon all questions of interest and costs, and shall name the currency in which the amount is to be paid. I would suggest that the note should be precise in terms, and, as nearly as practicable, in the form of a Convention for the final settlement by a Mixed Commission of the amount due to Mr. Glover from the Turkish Government. Mr. Glover should have immediate notice of the course adopted.

NEW GRANADA.

Claim of Pacific Steam Navigation Company arising out of tonnage duties levied at Panamá on their vessels.

Doctors' Commons, February 15, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th February instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 24th of August ultimo,* relative to the claim of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company to repayment of the tonnage dues levied by the Government of New Granada on their vessels up to April 1860, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Mr. Griffith (No. 114 of 1861), stating the grounds on which United States' vessels have hitherto successfully resisted the tax; and to request that I would take these papers, together with the previous correspondence, into my consideration, and favour your Lordship with my observations thereupon, and with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government are called upon at present to take any steps in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the fact that the Treaty of Bogotá, 1825 (Articles V and IX) clearly contemplated the imposition of tonnage duties, and merely stipulated for British vessels being liable to no other or higher duties than New Granadian vessels, and not for any exemption from such duties in favour of British vessels; to the absence of any objection to the payment of such duties on the part of any other Power than that of the United States, and to the contents of Mr. Griffith's No. 114, from which it appears that the exemption from these duties obtained by the United States' Government in favour of its citizens has not been voluntarily or finally conceded by the Government of New Granada, but is still open as between these two Governments, I cannot say that Her Majesty's Government is called upon at present to take any steps in the matter.

Mr. Griffith should, however, continue to direct his attention to it, and if, owing to the recent political changes in New Granada, to a claim on the part of other Powers to exemption, or to any other circumstances, a favourable opportunity should arise for finally settling the question, communications should be entered into with New Granada for this purpose. If the tonnage duties should be increased, the matter should at once be taken up.

Claim of Messrs. Byrne and Co. for losses sustained by their vessel the "Monmouth" being warned off the Southern Coast of the United States.

Doctors' Commons, February 17, 1862.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to the opinion given by us on the 30th of October last,† on the case of the British vessel "Monmouth," the owners of which claimed to be compensated by the United States' Government, on account of their vessel having been warned by a United States' man of war off the port of Savannah at a time when that port was not under blockade; he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a copy of the note‡ in which, under instructions from the Foreign Office, Lord Lyons preferred a claim for compensation on behalf of Messrs. Byrne and Co., and a despatch from his Lordship§ inclosing a copy of the answer from Mr. Seward, in which he argued that the loss sustained by the owners of the "Monmouth" on the occasion in question was the fault of the master of the vessel, and was not referable to the United States' Government, which was consequently not called upon to make compensation to Messrs. Byrne and Co.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Seward not only does not deny or dispute, but, on the contrary, must be considered as, in effect, admitting the fact to be, that Savannah was not blockaded on the 12th May last, the day when the "Monmouth" was boarded and warned off. Nor does he disavow. but, on the contrary, adopts and justifies, the conduct of the boarding officer (Lieutenant May).

It is also appears from Lord Lyons' note to Mr. Seward of the 31st of December, that the blockade of this port only commenced on the 28th of May, which is not questioned by Mr. Seward.

Under these circumstances, it appears to us that Mr. Seward's answer to Lord Lyons' application is inconclusive and unsatisfactory. The only point on which he relies is, that the master of the "Monmouth" should, after and notwithstanding the warning of Lieutenant May, have proceeded off the port of Savannah. It appears to us to be quite clear that, if she had done this, or even attempted to do it, the "Monmouth" would have rendered herself liable to capture; and that if the truth had proved to be according to Lieutenant May's statement, she might have been justly condemned. She had received formal notice from an officer of the United States' blockading force that the whole Southern coast of the United States of America was blockaded, and she was bound thereby; she would have been guilty of a clear primâ facie breach of her duty as a neutral if she had, in disregard of such notice, proceeded towards any port of the Southern coast.

That such is the general principle and practice of the law of nations is abundantly clear, and has never been denied or questioned; "the fact, duly notified to the party on the spot, is of itself sufficient to affect him with a knowledge of it; for the public notifications between Governments can be meant only for the information of individuals: but if the individual is personally informed, that purpose is still better obtained than by a public declaration." ("Wheaton's Elements of International Law," page 578 (edition 1857), citing and incorporating Lord Stowell's Judgment in the "Mercurius," 1 C. Rob., 83.)

"This information" (says Chancellor Kent, vol. i, "Commentaries," page 147) "may be communicated to him in two ways: either actually by a formal notice from the blockading Power, or constructively by notice to the Government or by the notoriety of the fact; it is immaterial in what way the neutral comes to the knowledge of the blockade."

"All that is necessary to make a notification valid and effectual, is that it shall be communicated in a credible manner, because though one mode may be more formal than another, yet any communication which brings it to the knowledge of the party, in a way which could leave no doubt in his mind as to the authenticity of the information, would be that which ought to govern his conduct, and will be binding upon him." (Lord Stowell's Judgment in "The Rolla," 6 C. Rob., 367.)

The master of the "Monmouth" was "personally informed of the fact on the spot" by an officer of the blockading force, "and in a way which could leave no doubt on his mind as to the authenticity of the information." But, in addition to the general principle of the law of nations, the Proclamation of President Lincoln, 19th April, 1861 (referred to by Mr. Seward), expressly declares that "if, with a view to violate such blockade, a vessel shall approach, or shall attempt to leave any of the said ports, she will be duly warned by the Commander of one of the blockading vessels, who will endorse on her register the fact and date of such warning, and if the same vessel shall again attempt to enter or leave the blockaded port she will be captured."

We cannot, therefore, understand Mr. Seward's statement "that there was no legal obligation in the warning to prevent the master of the 'Monmouth' from attempting to enter Savannah;" or that the warning was intended to apply specially to Charleston, and was substantially a "mere notification of possible danger of attempting to enter Savannah."

It cannot be doubted that if the "Monmouth" had persisted in proceeding to Savannah after the warning she had received, and had been met by any armed vessel of the United States, she would have been captured under and by virtue of this Proclamation.

The United States' Government cannot, with any consistency, contend that masters of neutral ships are called upon to act, in relation to blockades instituted by it, in direct contravention of the formal notifications of the naval officers of the blockading force; or that they are entitled to presume that such notifications are or may be erroneous, and are, therefore, bound, at their own peril, to make further inquiries, which (if the notifications turn out to be correct) may subject their ships to confiscation.

The fact of the boarding officer having acted in the belief that Savannah was actually blockaded is immaterial; it is not pretended that he had any grounds for that belief, other than the President's Proclamation, which, so far from being (as contended by Mr. Seward) "a notification of the blockade of the coasts and ports of certain States," is only a notice of an intention to institute such a blockade at some posterior date, which is not stated. "For this purpose" (says the Proclamation) "a competent force will be posted, so as to prevent entrance and exit of vessels from the ports aforesaid."

Under these circumstances, it appears to us to be established that the "Monmouth" was bound to give full credit to, and to act upon, the formal, though erroneous, notification of Lieutenant May; and that for any loss sustained by her owners in consequence of her so doing, the Government of the United States must be held responsible; and we see nothing in Mr. Seward's note to affect this conclusion.

Claim of French Vice-Consul at Sierra Leone to exemption from arrest and imprisonment for non-payment of damages awarded against him by the Supreme Court for libel.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr Hammond's letter of the 12th of February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Sierra Leone, reporting the circumstances under which the French Vice-Consul in that Colony had allowed a judgment against him in the Supreme Court, for libel, to go by default, and thereupon claimed, by virtue of his office, exemption from arrest and imprisonment for non-payment of the damages awarded against him; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should find marked in the accompanying volumes the correspondence alluded to by the Governor of Sierra Leone in his letter to the Vice-Consul of the 11th of January.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That foreign Consuls can claim no exemption, by virtue of their office, from the jurisdiction of British Courts of Civil Judicature, in respect of acts of such Consuls by them committed within British jurisdiction.

In this case the action is founded on the alleged publication by the Consul, within the Colony, of a libel on the plaintiff in the suit; and if the Consul had any valid defence to the action (such, for instance, as that the circumstances attending the publication negatived the ordinary presumption of "malice," or that the imputations were true, &c.), he should have "appeared" to the action, and set up such defence in the usual way.

He designedly declined to "appear," or take any legal step to defend himself; and thereupon judgment (necessarily) passed against him in the ordinary course of law.

The Governor rightly states that he has no power to interfere. We observe that the Consul, in his letter to the Governor of January 16, indicates an intention of appealing from the Judgment in question; but he appears to suppose that it is for the Governor to "put the matter in motion." The Governor thereupon, in his letter of January 17, properly informs him that he should take legal advice. With this letter the correspondence closes; it does not appear whether the Consul has legally appealed from the Judgment.

Under these circumstances the matter must necessarily be left to take its course. The Governor's conduct has been perfectly correct, and he has no power in his executive capacity to interfere in any manner with the Judgment or its consequences.

Case of the British schooner "Telegraph." Treatment of master and crew by the Commander of the United States' schooner "Wanderer."

Doctors' Commons, February 19, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 11th February instant, and a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 55, of the 27th of January), inclosing papers received from the Lieutenant-Governor of the Bahamas respecting the treatment to which the master and crew of the British schooner "Telegraph" are stated to have been subjected by the commander of the United States' schooner "Wanderer," and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, assuming the facts to be correctly stated in the extended protest dated Nassau, January 1, 1862, the capture and detention of the "Telegraph" appears to have been wholly without cause or justification. It is therein stated (page 10) that no cause or reason of any kind was offered by the commander, officers, or crew of the "Wanderer," for stopping, detaining, and carrying back the "Telegraph" to Key West;" and (at page 9) that the Marshal at Key West (to whom the master had been referred by the captor) asked the master why he had been brought back, and told him that nothing could be proved against him.

The handcuffing William Jones Fisher, and keeping him handcuffed for three days and three nights, appears also to have been unjustifiable. The circumstances connected with the previous voyage of the "Telegraph" from Nassau to Key West are not stated; and there is no information whatsoever as to the case, excepting that which is contained in the extended protest: the first protest made before Vice-Consul Welch at Key West, December 7, 1861, is very short, and in it nothing is said as to the handcuffing of William Jones Fisher. Nothing is suggested as to any loss incurred, nor is any compensation demanded; and it does not appear that the "Telegraph" had any cargo on either voyage.

The Vice-Consul at Key West should transmit a full report of the case, if he has not already done this; stating what passed between him and the authorities at Key West on the subject, and giving any additional information which he can as to the details and merits of the case, and the supposed cause of the "Telegraph's" treatment.

In the meantime a copy of the extended protest may (if your Lordship think fit) be transmitted to Lord Lyons, who may be instructed to state to Mr. Seward that your Lordship has received information that the British schooner "Telegraph," of Nassau, sailed from that port for Key West on the 20th November, 1861, and arrived there on the 26th; that on the 28th November she left Key West, bound to Green Turtle Key, otherwise New Plymouth, in the Island of Abaco, Bahamas. That, on the 30th November, whilst prosecuting his voyage, and near Indian Key, she was brought-to by the United States' cutter or schooner "Wanderer," Commander Spotts, and her master was ordered on board with his ship's papers, which were taken from him. That the "Telegraph" was thereupon detained, and taken by the "Wanderer" back to Key West, arriving on the 3rd December. That soon after her capture, William Jones Fisher, one of her crew, was ordered on board the "Wanderer," and then placed and kept in handcuffs for three days and nights. That after her arrival at Key West Henry Augustus Fisher, her master, was informed by the commander of the "Wanderer" "that he might go ashore and see the Marshal;" that he went to the Marshal's office, who asked him "why he had been brought back;" in reply to which the master stated the facts as above narrated; that the Marshal thereupon returned him his ship's papers, and said "he was all clear, and that nothing could be proved against him." That on the 6th December an officer of the "Wanderer" hailed the "Telegraph," and informed her master that his vessel was released, and that she thereupon returned to Nassau.

That no person on board the "Wanderer" ever made any charge against, or stated any reason for the capture of, the "Telegraph," which (as well as the handcuffing of Fisher) appears to your Lordship to have been wholly unjustifiable, and of which your Lordship must, therefore, request a full explanation.

MEXICO.

Claim of Messrs. Finlay, Hodgson, and Co., on account of certain written orders of the then Mexican Government upon certain Custom-houses for the payment of 250,000 dollars out of the import duties.

Doctors' Commons, February 20, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two letters from Messrs. Finlay, Hodgson, and Co., dated the 28th November, 1861, and 29th January, 1862, stating the particulars of their claim upon the Government of Mexico, and requesting that the influence of Her Majesty's Government may be exerted to obtain its settlement by that Government; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Government cannot properly support this claim against the Government of Mexico.

Apart from all considerations connected with the peculiar position in which Her Majesty's Government is now placed in relation to Mexico, I observe that Messrs. Finlay, Hodgson, and Co. never had on their own account any claim or demand upon any Mexican Government. They received (apparently in 1858) as a collateral security for a private debt owing to them by a Mexican citizen, certain written "orders" which he had obtained from the Mexican Government in possession of the capital, on account of a debt due to him from that Government, upon certain Custom-houses (not then in its possession or under its control, but I presume in the hands of the party in arms against it), for the payment of 250,000 dollars out of the import duties there received. They took these orders with full knowledge of all the circumstances. The orders never seem to have been presented at the Custom-houses; nor was any step apparently taken by Messrs. Finlay, Hodgson, and Co., in support of their claim against either the Government issuing the orders, or any Mexican Government, until 1861. They appear to have then, for the first time, sought to enforce these orders.

The present Mexican Government denies or repudiates the validity of the orders, and the authority of the Government which issued them to bind the Republic thereby. No copy of the orders is supplied, and their precise form and effect does not appear.

Messrs. Finlay, Hodgson, and Co. do not state that any other claims of the same character have been supported by Her Majesty's Government, or by any other foreign Government on behalf of their subjects; or that the claims of any Mexican holders of similar orders have been admitted by the present Government of Mexico.

Messrs. Finlay, Hodgson, and Co. only represent in this matter the claim (whatever it may have been) of their Mexican debtor upon his Government: they are, in respect thereof, only in the same position as he would be if he now held these orders; and his claim would not be admitted by the Mexican Government.

Their claim is not, in my opinion a "British claim," in the ordinary international sense of these words: they have not alleged that they are placed in a worse position than Mexicans having similar claims; and they have not established any special grounds for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government. I cannot, under these circumstances, advise your Lordship to authorize any application to the Mexican Government in their favour.

PERU.

Alleged atrocities of Peruvian Agents in the collection of Chinese emigrants for shipment to Peru in the French ship "Ville d'Agen."

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th February instant, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers, as marked in the margin,* respecting atrocities alleged to have been committed by certain Peruvian agents in the collection of Chinese emigrants for shipment to Peru in the French ship "Ville d'Agen."

Mr. Hammond added that your Lordship learnt from the letter from the Colonial Office of the 11th instant, that the Duke of Newcastle had transmitted some papers to us on this case, and had requested our opinion as to whether, on the application of Laou, Governor-General of the Two Kwang, the Governor of Hong Kong would be justified in surrendering to the Chinese Government the person of Juan Pastor, who was implicated in the forcible detention and murder of some of the kidnapped coolies. But, inasmuch as the Peruvian Minister at this Court, in his letter to your Lordship of the 7th instant, had made the supposed intention of the British authorities to comply with the application of the Chinese Governor Laou the subject of a representation to Her Majesty's Government, your Lordship was pleased to request that we would take the inclosed papers into our consideration, together with those sent to us from the Colonial Office, and that, in addition to furnishing you with any observations on the general question which we might propose to address to the Duke of Newcastle, we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Peruvian Minister.

Your Lordship also requested our opinion whether the facts disclosed in these papers would bear out Her Majesty's Government either in revoking the exequatur of the French Vice-Consul at Hong Kong, or in applying to the French Government to revoke his appointment.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

Cannot surrender to Chinese Government the person of Juan Pastor.

That with respect to the first question put to us in Mr. Hammond's letter, we are of opinion that the Governor of Hong Kong would not be justified in surrendering to the Chinese Government the person of Juan Pastor. English law would not sanction even a trial of the offender before a British Court, as the crime imputed was committed out of British jurisdiction: international law would not sanction it, as the accused person is a subject not of Great Britain, but of Peru; and, were such a course to be adopted, the Peruvian Government would be entitled to complain. Extradition of persons charged with crime can take place, according to British law, only under valid and binding Treaties with foreign Governments; and the Treaty between Great Britain and China relates only to subjects of the respective countries; and this is a complete answer to the request of the Chinese Governor.

With respect to the security taken by the Chief Justice for the appearance of Pastor and Helguero, such security cannot, in our opinion, be enforced, and no further proceedings should be taken in the matter.

With respect to the answer to be returned to the note of the Peruvian Minister of the 7th of February, we would suggest that it may be stated that information reached the authorities at Hong Kong that the Chinese coolies then on board the "Ville d'Agen" at that port had been, by the direct instrumentality of Pastor, and apparently with the knowledge and concurrence of Helguero, wrongfully and forcibly seized or kidnapped, under various false pretences, in China; that the ship had been fitted out at Hong Kong for the carrying out this criminal enterprise without the knowledge of the authorities, whose attention had not been attracted to her, owing to her foreign flag; that, in carrying it out under the immediate superintendence of Pastor, a series of the most flagrant outrages had occurred, many Chinese lives had been sacrificed within Chinese territorial jurisdiction, and great cruelties perpetrated on the survivors. That this state of things threatened the most serious consequences to the relations existing between European Governments and that of China, and especially to British and French interests. That on the French Commandant at Canton becoming aware of what had happened in connection with the "Ville d'Agen's" proceedings he promptly intervened, and applied to the authorities of Hong Kong on the subject, and upon full inquiries was so satisfied of the guilt of the master and crew of the "Ville d'Agen," that they were, on his requisition, delivered up to him to be sent to France for due punishment. That the British and French authorities at Canton and the British authorities at Hong Kong had made the fullest inquiries into the case, and had procured satisfactory evidence of the entire truth of the above facts. That, under such circumstances, they had rightfully interfered, at the request of the French Commandant, to prevent the coolies, thus brought under the French flag within British jurisdiction, from being detained therein against their will: and that judicial proceedings had been instituted against Pastor and Helguero at Hong Kong in respect of their conduct in wrongfully bringing into and keeping them in custody within British jurisdiction.

That, notwithstanding the acquittal of Pastor and Helguero, on technical grounds, on this charge, the Chinese Governor of the province within which the coolies had been seized had made a formal application to the Governor of Hong Kong for the surrender of those persons to him, upon which, after a full argument, the Chief Justice had held them to bail, and remitted the case to England; and that it was only on a fuller consideration of the question here that the conclusion had been arrived at that, in strictness of law, the Chinese application cannot be complied with. That Her Majesty's Government is convinced that the Government of Peru will, upon further information, take the same view of the substantial merits of the case which that of Her Majesty has taken, in which it is confirmed by the conduct adopted by the chief French officer on the spot, and will see that a series of gross crimes and wrongs has been committed by the Peruvians in question, and their agents, under cover of the French flag; and by availing themselves of the use of a British port, both against the coolies and the Chinese Government. That they began their criminal enterprise by fitting out the ship within British jurisdiction, into which they afterwards brought the Chinese subjects whom they had seized in China, thus seriously compromising the relations of China and Great Britain; and that if, for technical reasons, it has not been found possible to punish them, or to deal with them (as the master and crew of the French vessel chartered by them have been dealt with), by remitting them for punishment to their own Government, this is only to be regretted.

It will be for your Lordship to consider whether or not to transmit to the Peruvian Minister any of the evidence contained in the papers.

Not justified in surrendering to French Commandant the master of the French ship "Ville d'Agen."

We observe that, in the letter of Sir Frederic Rogers to Mr. Hammond of the 31st of December, 1861, the question is raised whether the Hong Kong authorities were justified, according to English law, in giving up to the French Commandant the master of the French ship "Ville d'Agen." We are of opinion that this question must be answered negatively. Internationally, as between France and England, no complaint can, of course, be made; but the extradition could, according to our law, be justified only under the Statute embodying and enforcing the Treaty with France for extradition; and this Resolutions of Shanghae land-renters.

Doctors' Commons, February 25, 1862.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th February instant, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Bruce, Her Majesty's Minister at Peking (No. 65), inclosing, together with other papers, a series of resolutions passed at a meeting of the Shanghae land-renters, at which it was determined that the Governments of those Powers whose subjects or citizens were interested in the matter, should be applied to, to recognize the Land Regulations of 1854, so as to enable the respective Consuls to enforce their observance.

Mr. Hammond added, that the considerations involved in this question appeared to be fully set forth in the inclosed papers, as well as in the correspondence of 1854* (which was also sent therewith), and requested that we would take the matter into our consideration, and advise your Lordship as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Bruce.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the application in question (which we observe was unanimously recommended by the meeting of foreign renters of land at Shanghae on the 6th January, 1861, and which is approved of by Her Majesty's Minister at Peking) should be acceded to.

It appears from the note of Sir John Bowring to M. de Bourboulon, 4th of December, 1854, that these "land regulations," having been approved by the Chinese authorities, were in 1854 signed by the Consuls of the then (three) Treaty Powers (Great Britain, France, and the United States), and afterwards ratified by the adhesion of the three Plenipotentiaries. France appears subsequently to have withdrawn her concurrence, and to have maintained her right to exercise an exclusive authority over a separate portion of the limits in question.

Adverting to the statement in Mr. Medhurst's note to Mr. Bruce, 26th of June, 1861, that these Land Regulations having never been adopted and published, or made or enforced by the British Consul under section 3 of the Order in Council of the 13th June, 1853, as Consular Rules and Regulations, doubts may exist as to their legal force and authority, quoad British subjects, we consider those doubts to be well founded; and we recommend that the "Code of Land Regulations" should be adopted and published by the Consul as "Rules and Regulations" under the Order in Council aforesaid, with any modifications which may be found necessary in form, but without altering their substance; penalties should be enacted for the breach of the Regulations by the Consul, and added to the Regulations, which may thereupon be enforced against British subjects by the Consular jurisdiction.

Claim of Mr. J. Carville Stovin for unjust imprisonment and loss of property.

Doctors' Commons, February 25, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th February instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith, a letter dated the 15th January ultimo, from Mr. J. Carville Stovin, a British subject, inclosing a printed statement of a claim made by him upon the Government of the United States, for compensation for unjust imprisonment, and loss of property consequent thereon; and also to inclose the previous correspondence* which has passed on the subject with Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, and to request that we would take the case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the question whether Mr. Stovin was, at the time of his arrest, entitled to British protection, we entertain no doubt; and, inasmuch as this has been admitted by Mr. Seward, we do not think it necessary to dwell upon that subject. At the same time we must observe that, to a person who had taken an oath renouncing (though prospectively, and not in an irrevocable manner) his allegiance to Her Majesty, nothing more can be due than that strict measure of protection which it may be incumbent upon Her Majesty's Government to give to all Her Majesty's subjects resident and suffering wrong in the territories of a foreign State.

Mr. Stovin complains, in the first place, of certain acts done on the 19th of June, 1861; which appear to have been acts of lawless interference by certain military officers of the United States with his personal liberty, and also with his property; a horse belonging to him having been taken without payment. It does not, however, appear that these acts were authorized or sanctioned by the United States' Government, or that Mr. Stovin may not have adequate civil remedies for them by the laws of the United States, even as administered during the present civil war. The interference, on this occasion, with his personal liberty, was of only a few hours' duration; and we cannot think that it is either necessary or expedient for Her Majesty's Government to treat instances like this, of the mere casual abuse of military power by individual soldiers and officers, as furnishing sufficient grounds for international complaint.

The subsequent arrest of Mr. Stovin on the 7th of October, and his imprisonment from that time till the 14th of November, are acts of which the responsibility clearly belongs to the Executive Government of the United States.

It appears by Mr. Seward's letter of the 18th October, 1861, that Mr. Stovin was accused of being "found, on the 10th of that month, actively engaged in seditious proceedings to foment insurrection in the State of Maryland;" and that his arrest and imprisonment were justified by the United States' Government, "under the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus," on the ground that "the public safety required that, for the present, he should remain in custody." The accusation was denied by him as soon as he had any opportunity of learning its nature; no attempt was ever made to support or substantiate it in any manner whatever; the name of the accuser was not even divulged, and the charge itself appears to have been absolutely false and groundless. He was nevertheless, arbitrarily detained for more than a month in prison, suffering, during that time, very severe hardships; and, by the sudden and violent interruption of his business, he also suffered serious and unavoidable pecuniary loss, although the amount at which he himself estimates that loss may be much exaggerated.

That Mr. Stovin is, in justice, entitled to ample compensation for these injuries, seems to us to be clear; and we are of opinion that, as no satisfactory answer has yet been given upon the subject, it will be proper for Her Majesty's Government (if they think fit) to make such representations in his favour as may be calculated to obtain for his claims the fair and just (and, if possible, the favourable) consideration of the United States' Government.

Rules and Regulations issued by Mr. Alcock under the Order in Council of 23rd January, 1860, for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 26.)

Doctors' Commons, February 26, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Alcock (No. 101 of the 20th of November, 1861), inclosing copies of the Rules and Regulations issued by him under the Order in Council of the 23rd of January, 1860, for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects in Japan; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship whether, in our opinion, they should be approved by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we observe that, by these Rules and Regulations, a common punishment of a fine of 200 dollars, or a month's imprisonment, is imposed in respect of each of the various offences prohibited, although such offences differ very considerably in their character. This, however, is a matter of discretion; and Mr. Alcock's local knowledge and experience make him the best judge. Any inconvenience or injustice likely to arise from the common punishment may be probably obviated by making the fine and imprisonment to be "not exceeding" 200 dollars, or one month's imprisonment; and we would suggest an amendment to this effect.

A more difficult question, it appears to us, arises on the 7th Regulation, providing, in a given event, for the liability of British subjects to arrest by "any Japanese official." It is true that such arrest cannot, under the Regulations, take place without "a Consul's warrant, or license;" but it would appear by the nature of the case that such warrant or license must be general to arrest all British subjects doing certain acts, and not delivering a card (i.e., in other words, a warrant or license issued by the Consul, without cognizance or consideration of any particular facts or circumstances). This would seem to place British subjects unprovided with the "card" very much at the mercy of the Japanese officials. We would suggest this matter as deserving the reconsideration of Mr. Alcock, the more especially as no Rule or Regulation provides for the application for, or issuing of, any such "card" at the Consulate, as, in our opinion, it ought to have done.

It is not, of course, possible for us, in ignorance of the very peculiar circumstances connected with the existing international relations with Japan, and the position of British subjects in that country, to judge of the policy of the Rules, as regards, especially, the scope and extent of their provisions; but we see no objections to them in other respects sufficient to require their alteration.

Proposed Consular Notification interdicting British subjects repairing to or residing in the city of Yeddo without special warrant and authority.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 26.)

Doctors' Commons, February 26, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th of February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Alcock (No. 108, November 28, 1861), inclosing the draft of a Notification which, after consulting with the Attorney-General of Hong Kong, he purposes to issue, under the Order in Council of the 23rd of January, 1860, interdicting British subjects from repairing to or residing in the city of Yeddo, without special warrant and authority from Her Majesty's Consul-General, by and with the consent and concurrence of the Japanese Government, and rendering British subjects who may disregard this order liable to be dealt with by the Japanese authorities; and to request that we would take this draft Notification into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether it is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the proposed Notification of Mr. Alcock, prohibiting the resort of British subjects to Yeddo, except under the conditions therein specified, is altogether ultra vires, and ought not, therefore, to have been issued. By Article III of the Treaty with Japan it is expressly stipulated that British subjects "shall be allowed to reside in the city of Yeddo" from the 1st of January, 1862. But to allow the exercise of this right to depend (as the Notification proposes it shall) on the "consent and concurrence of the Government of the Tycoon of Japan," would be to rescind this part of the Treaty,—an act competent alone to the two Governments who were parties to the Treaty, and (as far as this country is concerned) quite beyond the Consular power of making rules, &c., for the "peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects," under the 4th Regulation of the Order in Council.

Supposing, however, that the Consular power could be held to extend to the making of a rule or regulation such as is proposed in the Notification, it would be contrary to the letter and spirit of the Treaty (which alike require that the offences of British subjects shall be tried and punished by British tribunals), that, for the breach of any particular regulation, a British subject should be handed over to "the authorities appointed by the Government of the Tycoon, to be dealt with according to the laws of Japan." On considerations of policy, and humanity also, such a regulation would, as it appears to us, be most objectionable.

The Consul-General, it apears to us, would be justified in issuing a regular tion prohibiting the resort of any British subjects to Yeddo until further notification "pursuant to the instructions from your Lordship to him of the 10th of April, 1861" (printed papers herewith). He may also, by the same regulation, impose a defined punishment for disregard thereof; but beyond this, we do not think the Consul-General can legally go in the way of prohibition. He may, of course, warn his fellow-subjects of the probable consequences to themselves personally of visiting Yeddo in disobedience of this order; but it would be wrong, in our judgment, if he were to intimate to such British subjects, and more particularly to the Japanese Government, that from such subjects British protection was to be considered as withdrawn. Any rule to that effect would be bad.

If the Notification of which a draft is submitted to us shall have been published, we think that Mr. Alcock should be instructed to revoke it, and to issue, in lieu thereof, a regulation to the effect above suggested.

Request of Mr. G. Fry that certain legal documents may be sent to Her Majesty's Consul at New Orleans.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.— Received February 28.)

Doctors' Commons, February 26, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter, dated the 17th February instant, from Mr. G. Fry, stating the grounds upon which he requests Her Majesty's Government to forward to Her Majesty's Consul at New Orleans certain legal documents which he inclosed.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship has for some time past declined to comply with similar applications from merchants and others having commercial interests in the Southern States, but that he was directed to request that I would take Mr. Fry's application into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether there is anything in this case of so exceptional a nature as should induce you to relax that rule in favour of the parties represented by Mr. Fry.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this application comes from the attorney of certain American citizens, owners of a United States' merchant-ship which has been wrecked, who have brought actions in the Court of Common Pleas on policies of insurance effected at Lloyd's upon the vessel, against the British underwriters, which actions are contested by them, upon what grounds does not appear. All the plaintiffs reside at New York, and have executed the necessary documents to authorize the actions, except one Phillips, who was resident at New Orleans, and who has taken the oath of allegiance to the Confederate States, and obtained a commission in the Confederate army.

The plaintiff's attorney now seeks to employ Her Majesty's Consul at New Orleans to find Phillips, and to obtain from him the execution of the necessary documents, on the ground that the action cannot proceed to trial until these documents are sent to England, and that owing to existing circumstances it has not been found practicable to obtain them from him.

The only British interest is that of the defendants, as against whom the Consul's active intervention is sought; and if your Lordship has hitherto, during the civil war in America, refused, as a rule, to allow Her Majesty's Consuls to act in similar cases on behalf of British subjects, or in favour of British interests, I do not consider that your Lordship is called upon to relax this rule in favour of American plaintiffs in action against British defendants.

This must not, however, be stated to Mr. Fry, who may be simply informed that your Lordship regrets that you cannot comply with his application.

TURKEY AND GREECE.

Dispute between the two Governments respecting certain landed property near Thebes belonging to Mussulmans.

Doctors' Commons, February 28, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 700), and Her Majesty's Minister at Athens (No. 4), on the subject of a dispute which has arisen between the Turkish and Greek Governments respecting certain landed property near Thebes belonging to Mussulmans; and also to transmit a Memorandum on this case, together with copies of the Convention and Protocols referred to in the inclosed papers; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the rights of the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this controversy, arising between the two Governments of Turkey and of Greece, is submitted to the consideration of Her Majesty's Government in the following papers:—

(1). The note of Conéménos Bey to M. Conduriottis, March 7, 1861.

(2). That of M. Conduriottis to Photiades Bey, July 24, 1861.

(3). The note of Mehemed Djemil Bey to Sir H. Bulwer, of November 2, 1861, which concludes by requesting from Her Majesty's Government, in concurrence with the Governments of France and Russia, its intervention under the Protocols of London and of the Arrangement of Constantinople, July 21, 1832, in order to obtain possession for the Turkish claimants of certain lands in the Province of Thebes in Greece. It further appears (from Sir F. Wyse's No. 4 to your Lordship), that he had received a communication from Sir H. Bulwer, begging him to give what support he could to the Turkish claim against Greece; and that Photiades Bey, the Turkish Minister at Athens, had applied to him and also to the Russian and to the French Ministers at that Court, to support the Turkish claim, but that neither of these Ministers had received any instructions in the case. There is, therefore, nothing to show the view taken of the case by France or Russia, and Her Majesty's Government cannot act alone.

It is apparent that the Turkish Government can only be entitled to the intervention of the three Powers in support of this claim, on the ground that it falls within some of the international stipulations or arrangements to which those Powers were parties in connection with the separation of Greece from Turkey, and its erection into an independent kingdom. For, if the case is one arising and pending exclusively between the Governments of Turkey and Greece, in the ordinary shape, Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere, whatever may be its merits.

The notes of Conéménos Bey, March 6, 1861, and of Mehemed Djemil Bey, November 2, 1861, have failed to satisfy me that the Greek Government has in this matter acted in violation either of the Treaty of 1827 (Article II), of the Arrangement of July 21, 1832, or of any of the Protocols or international documents to which I have access, so as to justify the intervention of the three Powers.

The circumstances of the case appear to be shortly these:—Certain Turkish proprietors of lands in the district of Thebes sold these lands in 1834 to a Russian named Zacharoff; Zacharoff's title never seems to have been perfected or recognized by the Greek Government; he never appears to have obtained possession, or to have received any rent; and at some date (not appearing), it is stated that this Government took arbitrary possession of the lands, which it has ever since retained. In 1840 Zacharoff is alleged to have re-sold the same lands to the present claimants (the heirs of the originals owners), who now claim possession from the Greek Government under and by virtue of this title, contending that both the first purchase by Zacharoff and their second purchase from him were valid transactions within the stipulations and arrangements sanctioned by the three Powers, relating to the sale and purchase of Turkish lands in Greece, and of such a character as to require the intervention of the three Powers to compel Greece to admit the claim.

It appears that although the Greek Government has never admitted the validity of the claim, no application to the three Powers has ever until now been made on the subject, either by Zacharoff, by the claimants, or by the Turkish Government, and no sufficient or material explanation is given for the long delay which has occurred on the part of all concerned in applying to the three Powers. Other claims of a similar character were arranged by their intervention in 1843. One material question is, whether the three Powers ever formally sanctioned and required Greece to recognize, as a general principle, the right of the original Turkish owners to sell their lands in Greece to foreigners, or to purchase such land from foreigners; and, if so, when and by what documents they did so.

The Treaty of 1827 (Article II) and many of the subsequent Protocols seem to have contemplated and provided for the purchase by the Greek Government (exclusively) of all "Turkish property" in Greece. The words "the Greeks" in this Article must, in my opinion, have had this meaning, as far as I can understand the argument of Mehemed Djemil Bey in his note of November 2, 1861. The arrangement of July 21, 1832, Article III, first authorized the sale of such property to private individuals (including foreigners) within the term of eighteen months from the day when the demarkation of boundary should be completed; I assume (although this is not expressly stated) that the sale of the lands now in question, by their Turkish owners to the Russian Zacharoff in 1834, was made within this period. Looking, however, to the previous intention of the Powers, and to the words, "the Greek State," at the end of this Article, I am not satisfied that the sale of Turkish lands to foreigners was thereby contemplated and provided for.

Subsequently, by the intervention of the three Powers, and after a protracted negotiation, the Convention of 1837 between Greece and Turkey was negotiated (of which no copy is stated to be in the Foreign Office), by which the Turkish Government renounced all right on behalf of itself and its subjects as to all property situated in the Province of Thebes. The Greek Government contends that Turkey is "estopped" by this stipulation. The Turkish Minister contends that it only applied to property "not sold," and that this was not the condition of the claimants' property, which had been sold to Zacharoff in 1834. The Turkish argument appears to be cogent; but without seeing the text of this Convention, I cannot decide this point.*

In 1843 a question (which had been long pending) as to the sale by certain

Turks of lands in the lower district of Thebes to foreigners, was reluctantly settled, through the intervention of the three Powers, by the Greek Government ceding this property to the foreign purchasers upon certain terms including the verification of their titles by the purchasers. (See the note of M. Rizo to Sir E. Lyons, 31st August, 1843.)

Mehemed Djemil Bey refers to and relies upon this arrangement as bearing on the present claim, and contends that Zacharoff would have been entitled to have availed himself of its benefit had he duly applied for that purpose; and this arrangement of 1843 seems to be the principal ground relied on by the Bey; but I can find therein no general principle applicable to this case. It only settled certain claims which had then been advanced, of which the present claim did not form one.

I have altogether failed to discover any general stipulation by which the Government of Greece has ever bound itself to the Three Powers either to permit (generally) the sale to foreigners of lands in Greece originally owned by Turks, or to admit the validity of purchases of lands in Greece made by Turks from foreigners. The original intention expressed in Article II of the Treaty of 1827, that the Greek Government should acquire all lands owned by Turks in its territory, seems only to have been modified by express stipulation or arrangement in certain particular cases, specifically brought to the notice of the three Powers, of which the present is not one; and neither Zacharoff nor the claimants having taken any steps to bring forward their case under these stipulations or arrangements, the claimants cannot now appeal to them with any effect.

The particular species of title now relied on by Turkey (viz., purchase by Turks from a previous foreign purchaser) has never, as far as I am aware, been considered or dealt with by the three Powers, or recognized by Greece in any other instance. If, as suggested by Mehemed Djemil Bey, the sale of such property by its Turkish owners to a Russian was valid, and was provided for by the existing arrangements, I cannot understand why Zacharoff did not, whilst he was owner between 1834 and 1840, obtain some recognition of his title by the Greek Government, or, failing so to do, apply, as other foreign purchasers did, to the three Powers for their intervention. So with respect to the purchase of it in 1840 by the claimants, the heirs of the original owners. I fail to perceive how this transaction falls within the cognizance of the three Powers under any document forthcoming, or, if it does, why earlier application was not made to them on the subject by Turkey.

The Greek Government (1) relies upon the Treaty with Turkey of 1837, of which no copy is forthcoming; (2) it denies the validity of the purchase by the claimants from Zacharoff in 1840—a transaction which is in my opinion open to question, Zacharoff never having obtained possession or any recognition of his title; (3) it offers, in the event of the claimants establishing their real ownership, to pay them an equitable indemnity upon certain bases, in accordance with the arrangements of 1837 in similar cases. (See conclusion of note of M. Conduriottis, July $\frac{12}{24}$, 1861). The Turkish Government, on the other hand, insists upon the claimants receiving absolute possession of the lands, and requests the intervention of Great Britain, France, and Russia in favour of this demand. (See conclusion of note of Mehemed Djemil Bey, November 2, 1861.)

Under these circumstances I am of opinion (1) that the Turkish Government has not established any case sufficient for the intervention of the three Powers; (2) that the offer of the Greek Government is, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, one which the three Powers would be justified in considering as a sufficient concession to Turkey; and that no other material result could reasonably be anticipated from their intervention than that which is thus already attained.

I would therefore suggest that your Lordship should decline to accede to the application of Mehemed Djemil Bey.

Capture of the "Cheshire" by the United States' cruizer "Augusta" for attempt to break the blockade of Savannah.

Doctors' Commons, February 28, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th February instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 10th instant,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers,† a letter from Mr. Baines,‡ inclosing a copy of the protest made by the master of the "Cheshire," the vessel captured by the United States' cruizer "Augusta," on a charge of attempting to break the blockade of Savannah.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that I should see from the inclosed papers that the owners stated, in reply to the letter which was addressed to them founded upon my report, that the men who had been taken from on board the "Cheshire" had been released, and that consequently no instructions were sent to Lord Lyons on the subject; but that he was now to request that I would again take this case into consideration, with reference to the statements contained in the master's protest, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions, if any, which should be sent to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the facts stated in the protest are not of a very grave character, nor do they seem to have caused any very serious consequences to those concerned. They do not appear to me to be such as urgently to require the intervention of Her Majesty's Government. I can only suggest that, if your Lordship thinks fit, the protest may be sent to Lord Lyons, who may be instructed to call the attention of the United States' Government (in a courteous manner, and rather with a view to future cases than as a matter of distinct complaint), to the fact that the master and a portion of the crew were taken out of the ship and detained by the captors from the 5th of December to the 19th January, whereas the "Cheshire" arrived at New York on the 19th December, and that the separation of a master and crew of a ship sent in for adjudication is not regular, and, especially as regards the master, may be attended with serious detriment to the owners.

Jones, who was put in irons, had refused to work, and he was released without being treated with any extraordinary severity; and I do not advise any distinct complaint being made on this subject or on any other point.

Refusal of British screw-steamer "Euphrosyne" to pay hospital dues at Smyrna.

Doctors' Commons, February 28, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us herewith a correspondence which has taken place on the subject of the refusal by the owners of the British screw-steamer "Euphrosyne" to pay hospital dues at Smyrna; and also to inclose a Memorandum drawn up in this office on the subject of those dues; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether any and what steps can be taken to enforce the payment of the dues by the master or owners of the "Euphrosyne."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in our opinion no effectual steps can now be taken either against the master or the owners of the "Euphrosyne" to enforce payment of the hospital dues in question. The powers of jurisdiction and authority conferred on the Levant Company, by the terms of their charter, were certainly very extensive, as appears by the Memorandum (in pages 2, 3, 4 and 5) which accompanies these papers, and doubts may, perhaps, be entertained as to the legality of some of the powers conferred thereby on the General Court. (See in pages 4 and 5 as to the Court punishing by "fine and imprisonment," and particularly as to their sending persons "to England" for trial, &c.) It is not, however, material to consider this, seeing that the transfer of authority from the Company by the Act of 1825 was of "such rights and duties of jurisdiction" only as had been formerly "lawfully exercised and performed by any Consul or other officer appointed by the said Company" (pages 9 and 10 of Memorandum), and such rights and duties are transferred from the Company's Consuls to "such Consuls and other officers as His Majesty might be pleased to appoint, &c." (p. 12 of Memorandum). The successive Orders in Council of 1854 and 1858 deal with the matter of jurisdiction and authority in the same way, merely authorizing "British Consuls," residing in the Ottoman dominions, to "levy" the duty in the first place (Order in Council of 3rd July, 1854), of 1*d.*, and afterwards (Order in Council of 31st July, 1858) of 1½*d.* per ton. Under these circumstances it appears to us that the Consular power is the only means of enforcing payment of the dues, and that such power must be exercised on the spot. It is the Consul's duty, if payment is not made on demand, to "levy" the amount on the defaulting vessel, which he has undoubted power to do. The exercise of this power must ensure payment of the dues, and its existence prevents any practical inconvenience as the result of the view we have taken in answering the question submitted to us.

Capture of the "M. S. Perry" or "Salvor" under British colours.

Doctors' Commons, March 3, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands as signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 67 of January 30, and No. 72 of February 3), respecting the case of the "M. S. Perry" or "Salvor," a schooner under British colours, which was captured by an United States' cruizer in the month of October last, and sent to Philadelphia for adjudication.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe that Lord Lyons takes advantage of the circumstances of this case to ask the following questions, viz.:—

"Is it my duty (or if not my duty, is it discretionary with me) to intervene in behalf either of (a) enemies of the United States, or (b) neutrals, not British subjects, taken on board vessels under the British flag, which have been captured for breach of blockade, and sent before a Prize Court?

"May or ought the intervention to take place (c) before the commencement of the suit in the Prize Court, (b) during the suit, (c) if the vessel be acquitted, (d) if she be condemned?

"Is any distinction as regards intervention to be made between foreigners forming part of the crew, and foreigners who are only passengers?"

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these questions into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answers which should be returned to them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these questions into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

Intervention in behalf of enemies taken on board vessels under British flag, captured for breach of blockade.

That Lord Lyons may be informed that, as regards enemies of the United States, whether passengers or seamen, on board vessels under the British flag, captured for breach of blockade, it is Lord Lyons' duty not to intervene in their behalf, without special instructions, or circumstances of very peculiar emergency. By "enemies of the United States," we understand those who, by birth or naturalization, are citizens of the United States, and who are charged by the Government of the United States with serving, aiding, or adhering to the Government of the (so-called) "Confederate States of America," contrary to their allegiance to the United States' Government.

Intervention in behalf of neutrals, not British subjects, taken on board such vessels.

As regards "neutrals," not British subjects, taken on board such vessels, if serving as seamen, it will be Lord Lyons' duty to intervene in their behalf, if they are treated as prisoners of war, or otherwise subjected to any other detention than may be requisite to secure their evidence in a Prize Court. He will of course exercise his discretion as to such intervention. By "neutrals" we understand all persons, of whatsoever nationality, not British subjects, and owing no allegiance to the United States. Such persons, when serving as seamen on board vessels under the British flag, are to be considered and dealt with in the same manner as British seamen, so far as regards Lord Lyons' intervention. With respect to such persons when passengers, Lord Lyons should exercise a careful discretion as to his intervention. The United States' Government is not entitled, on any general principle of international law, to confine or detain such persons, except only when their evidence is required in the Prize Court; but it is the primary duty of the Legation of their own Government to intervene, when necessary, in their favour, and to such Legation they should, as a general rule, be referred. The fact of their being passengers on board a British vessel will not, per se, give them any exclusive or absolute claim to Lord Lyons' intervention.

When intervention is requisite, the state of the case against the ship and cargo in the Prize Court will not affect the question of the time at which it should take place. The earliest period will generally be the best, subject only to the consideration of the possibility of the evidence of the persons in question being required in the Prize Court, and of their being detained on that ground alone. If such evidence is not required, or when the persons in question shall have given their evidence, there will be no reason for their further detention.

Question as to power of Governor of Gibraltar to liberate prisoners on board foreign national vessels entering port or territorial waters of Gibraltar.

Doctors' Commons, March 7, 1862.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd March instant, stating that in connection with a recent occurrence at Morocco, the particulars of which are stated in the inclosed copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in that country (No. 28), the Governor of Gibraltar had put the following question to the Secretary of State for War:—

"If an American ship of war enters Gibraltar, can she keep in an English harbour the prisoners whom she may have on board, or must they be released?"

And to request that we would take this question into our consideration, and report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, our opinion as to the terms in which it must be answered.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the question of the Governor of Gibraltar must be answered to the effect that he has no jurisdiction or power to liberate prisoners on board foreign national vessels of war which may enter or be in the port or territorial waters of Gibraltar.

Foreign ships of war, even when in the ports or territorial waters of other nations, are considered internationally as extra-territorial; and by the law and usage of nations the local authorities abstain from exercising any jurisdiction over the persons who may be on board of them. If the prisoners were landed and put on shore it would be otherwise. In that case, they could not any longer be detained or kept as prisoners (Vattel, lib. iii, cap. 7, sect. 132).

Claim of Messrs. Zacharie and Rogers (not British subjects) for seizure from on board the British vessel "Eugenia Smith."

Doctors' Commons, March 11, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers respecting the seizure of Messrs. Zacharie and Rogers from on board a British vessel, the "Eugenia Smith," while on the voyage from Havana to Matamoros, and their subsequent release by order of the Government of the United States, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in instructing Her Majesty's Minister at Washington to demand compensation from the United States' Government on account of the capture and detention of these persons.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in our opinion Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in demanding compensation from the United States' Government on account of the capture and detention of Messrs. Zacharie and Rogers. These gentlemen are not British subjects, and the only interest the British Government had in respect of their capture and detention arose from the circumstance of such capture having been effected on board a British ship. This was an international wrong, which, however, Mr. Seward has acknowledged and repaired in a manner with which Her Majesty's Government have expressed their satisfaction.

Draft Supplemental Order in Council conferring Consular jurisdiction on Her Majesty's Consul in the Delta of the Danube.

Doctors' Commons, March 11, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th February ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 11th of December last,* inclosing the draft of an Order in Council to enable Her Majesty to confer power on the British Consular officers in the Delta of the Danube to enforce the Regulations framed by the European Commission of the Danube, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Hornby, the Judge in the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 8 of January 29), stating that doubts will probably arise as to the competency of the Commission to frame these Regulations, and consequently as to their being binding on British subjects, inasmuch as they have been promulgated after the period of two years when it is specified, by Article XVIII of the Treaty of Paris of 1856, that the European Commission should be dissolved.

And he was also pleased to state that the question of the duration of the European Commission was, however, brought under the consideration of the Plenipotentiaries of the great Powers assembled in Conference at Paris in 1858, and that he had to refer us to their 19th Protocol, as containing their decision upon the subject.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state, for our information, that in 1859 the Austrian Government was desirous that the European Commission should be dissolved, but that it was urged by Her Majesty's Government and by the Government of France that the execution of the works necessary to ensure the safe navigation of the mouth of the Danube was specially entrusted, by the Treaty of Paris, to this Commission, and that the period of two years, to which its duration was limited, was fixed in ignorance of the existence of any physical obstacle which would prevent the completion of such works within that period. And also that all the Commissioners have since continued to reside at Galatz, and have been engaged in carrying out the works entrusted to them to execute.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose copies of the Treaties of Paris, and of the Order in Council of the 6th of January, 1862, and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion on the questions raised in Mr. Hornby's despatch.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, without at present expressing any final opinion upon the questions raised in Mr. Hornby's despatch, we consider that those questions, having been thus raised, render it expedient to issue a Supplemental Order in Council (a draft of which we have prepared and herewith transmit*). In this draft we have endeavoured to provide for the due enforcing by the British Consular jurisdiction, upon all persons subject to such jurisdiction, of the Rules, Orders, and Regulations which have been made and promulgated by the Danube (European) Commission, without expressly reciting the doubts suggested by Mr. Hornby of the validity thereof, or of the extent of the powers of that Commission under the Treaty of Paris, in order to avoid any complaints from the other Powers parties to that Treaty, which might be elicited by any express recital of such doubts by Her Majesty in an Order in Council.

If, hereafter, other Rules, of the same character, should be issued, it may be advisable to confirm them also in a similar manner, but this, we think, cannot be done by any prospective Order.

Capture of the British vessels "Sarah Starr" and "Aigburth" belonging to Mr. Graveley, a British subject, residing at Charleston.

Doctors' Commons, March 12, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th March instant, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 21st September and 8th and 22nd October ultimo,† he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 14th February, 1861, from Mr. Graveley, of Charleston (received through Lord Lyons), applying for the interference of Her Majesty's Government on account of his vessels the "Sarah Starr" and "Aigburth" having been seized and condemned by the United States' authorities as prize of war.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the question which Mr. Graveley seems to imagine to have been at issue was, whether these vessels had or had not attempted to run the blockade; but that, adverting to my Report of the 22nd October last, it appeared to your Lordship not improbable that both vessels are regarded as lawful prize on the ground of their being owned by a person commercially domiciled at Charleston. But that, however, he was to request that I would take Mr. Graveley's letter into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to annex the previous papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Graveley may be informed that he appears to be domiciled at Charleston, and that the "Aigburth," of which he was sole owner, was captured by an United States' ship of war, and has been condemned as prize by a Prize Court at New York; that under such circumstances such condemnation must be considered as primâ facie legal; and that before Her Majesty's Government can make any application to that of the United States on his behalf, it must be satisfied that the sentence of the Court was invalid, or contrary to the Law of Nations, and that some definite principle or reason can be adduced against its validity; that in the absence of any copy of the Judgment, or any accurate account of its purport, or of any explicit statement of the facts alleged or established in the suit, Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere.

That the same observations apply to the case of the "Sarah Starr," excepting that it is only stated that she was sent to New York "for adjudication," and it is not stated that she has been condemned.

That Her Majesty's Government will, however, instruct the Consul at New York to furnish any information in his power in both cases, and will consider any material information which may be supplied by Mr. Graveley.

The Consul at New York should be instructed to transmit any information which he may be able to procure as to both these cases; especially as to the points raised in argument, or determined by the Court; together with copies of the papers, arguments, and judgments, if procurable.

I may add that the fact of Mr. Graveley having a "hostile domicile" (at Charleston) seems to justify the condemnation of his ships at New York, as "enemy's property," quite independently of any question of breach of blockade.

Claim of owners of British vessel "Boyne" for losses sustained by their vessel being warned off the Southern Coast of the United States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 13, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* respecting a claim preferred by the owners of the British vessel "Boyne," on account of that vessel having been warned off the whole Southern Coast by an United States' cruizer at a time when it is alleged that the blockade of Savannah (to which port she was destined) was not yet established.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that this case has already been submitted to Her Majesty's Advocate-General in his letters of the 2nd October and 22nd January last; and that he was now to request that we would take it into our consideration with reference to our Report of the 17th ultimo on the subject of the claim of the owners of the "Monmouth," and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether there is sufficient similarity between the two cases to warrant an application to the United States' Government for compensation to the owners of the "Boyne." And he was also pleased to inclose the papers relating to the "Monmouth."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That referring, as we are desired to do, to our Report on the case of the "Monmouth" of the 17th ultimo, we are of opinion that the present is a case, à fortiori, for an application by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of the United States for compensation to the owners. At the time of the "Boyne" sailing from England for Savannah (25th March, 1861), it was not even known to be probable that a blockade of that port would take place; nor was any such blockade, in fact, established until many days (28th May) after the "Boyne" was warned off the "whole coast of the South," and the warning endorsed on her ship's papers by the boarding officer of the United States' ship "Niagara."

The notification was legally invalid as to Savannah; for "the notice of the blockade, being more extensive than the blockade itself, is of no effect against a neutral" (see Northcote v. Douglas, the "Franciska," 10 Moore's Privy Council Reports, p. 37, and cases there cited); but the master had no means of knowing this: and for the reasons stated in our last Report on the case of the "Monmouth," we are of opinion that he was entitled to give full credit to the act of the officer of the United States' blockading force; and the Government of the United States cannot properly contend that he was bound to proceed in defiance of the notification, at the risk of capture and of confiscation, if such notification should have proved to be correct. I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 114 of the 15th February), relating to a schooner, the "Andreita," or "J. W. Wilder," which has been captured by the United States' blockading squadron off Mobile; and to request that I would take this case into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit on the 14th instant a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, inclosing a letter from Mr. Capella.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the facts of this case are only to be collected from the letters of Capella (the master and consignee) to the Consul at Mobile, of the 23rd and 27th of January last. They are as follows:—The "J. W. Wilder," which was originally a merchant-vessel of the United States, and subsequently of the Confederate States, sailed in the latter character, and under the Confederate flag, from Mobile to Havana on the 22nd December, 1861. It does not appear what was her ultimate destination or design when she left Mobile, or at what date she arrived at Havana. She is stated to have been there purchased by Mr. Dexter, a British subject, who changed her name to the "Andreita," and there obtained from Her Majesty's Consul a British provisional certificate of registry, dated the 8th of January last.

Neither the date nor the particulars of such purchase are forthcoming; and it does not appear to what British port Mr. Dexter contemplated sending her to complete her registration. A cargo of coffee and assorted goods, the property of Messrs. Sola, Cantonell, and Co., Spanish merchants at Havana, was shipped in her, and consigned to the master; neither his nationality nor his domicil are stated. She sailed from Havana, under British colours, on the 14th of January last, for Matamoros; but she was on such voyage, by the master's account, "to approach within reasonable distance of Mobile (then known to all concerned to have been long under blockade), and, if no obstruction of blockade prevented, to enter this port."

On the 20th January last, she was at anchor under British colours within twelve or fifteen miles of the bar of Mobile, when an United States' gun-boat (the "Cuyler") approached her, and is said to have fired two cannon-shots at her (which is, however, denied by the United States' officers); thereupon she slipped her cable, was run aground, and deserted by her master and crew, who landed with the ship's papers, and some of their effects; an engagement ensued between the boats of the "Cuyler" and the Confederates on shore, and she was ultimately towed off by the captors.

A flag, and a board with "J. W. Wilder" thereon, and also a Confederate flag, were found on board of her.

After knowledge of the blockade of Mobile, she had no right to go to the blockade station at the mouth of that port, under pretence of inquiry; and her being found so near the port, with the admitted intention of there making inquiry, raises a strong presumption against her master that he intended to break the blockade, which is strengthened by his abandoning her with his papers, without communicating with the captor.

It is to be observed that the only British interest concerned is that of Mr. Dexter, the alleged owner of the ship, from whom there is not any application; but it is possible that he may not know of the capture, or that there has not been time for his application to arrive. I may add, that it does not distinctly appear what has been done with the vessel. The cargo has been sent to Philadephia; but Her Majesty's Government is not called on to interfere in favour of the Spanish owners.

Lord Lyons appears to me to have taken a proper view of this case in his despatch No. 114, and to have done all that is necessary by instructing the Consul at Philadelphia, as in his letter of the 14th February (Inclosure 2 in No. 114).

I do not consider that the demand of the Consul at Mobile for the immediate release of the vessel was justifiable; and I cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to make any application to the United States' Government on behalf of the owner.

I would suggest that the Consul at Havana should be instructed to furnish all the information in his power as to the alleged purchase by Mr. Dexter (such as the price, the instrument of sale, the entire divesting of all interest on the part of her Confederate owners, and the port at which her British registration was to be completed), and as to the nationality and domicil of Capella, the master and consignee, and his previous connection (if any) with the vessel, or her Confederate owners. The circumstances of the case throw some suspicion on the bona fides of the purchase, and on the alleged change of nationality consequent thereon, and the Consul should be invited to explain them fully.

Claim of Mr. Pedro N. Merino to British protection at Panamá as a naturalized British subject.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 14, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Pedro N. Merino, inclosing copies of a correspondence which has passed between him and Her Majesty's Consul at Panamá in 1855, respecting his right to protection as a naturalized British subject; and to request that I would take Mr. Merino's letter and its inclosures into my consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Her Majesty's Consul at Panamá in regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Consul at Panamá should be instructed to adhere to the instructions forwarded to him in this case by the Earl of Clarendon on the 7th September, 1855, and not to extend British protection to Mr. Merino in New Granada. I can only repeat that Mr. Merino's having been naturalized in Jamaica will confer on him the rights and privileges of a British subject in that island, but not in New Granada. It is not for Her Majesty's Government to enter into the question (raised by him) of his nationality as between Spain and New Granada; the circumstance stated by him that he was "really born a citizen of Spain," to which Power Panamá belonged at the date of his birth, will not enable him to claim British nationality there by virtue of his colonial naturalization in Jamaica.

SARDINIA.

As to registration of births, deaths, and marriages at Milan by the Anglican Minister.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 15, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Turin (No. 41), requesting to be informed as to the manner in which the births, deaths, and marriages of British subjects at Milan should be registered by the resident Anglican minister in that city, the chapel in which he officiates not being under the control of Her Majesty's Government; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Sir James Hudson.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I must request further information before finally disposing of this case. I am unable at present to understand the legal question upon which my opinion is desired. I understand from the letter of the Rev. J. Williams that there is no British Consulate or Consular Officer at Milan; but it is not stated in what British Consular district Milan is officially placed.

I do not understand in what official capacity the reverend gentleman is considered by Her Majesty's Government to be acting at Milan. He is described by Sir J. Hudson as "officiating Anglican minister;" but he is not a Chaplain under Statute 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, et non constat how he is otherwise regularly appointed, or empowered to officiate. I must therefore request to be furnished with a reference to the legal authority, and the instructions under which he is empowered, or required, or entitled to register births, deaths, and marriages at Milan; and especially by what authority he is empowered to solemnize marriages at Milan.

If there is any regular system of Consular registration of births and deaths, then I conceive that the Consular Officer of the district, and not the officiating minister, is the proper Registrar. As to marriages, the Statute 12 & 13 Vict., cap. 68, contains provisions as to their Consular registration (sec. 11), and no other form of registration of marriages in foreign countries is (as far as I am aware) legally or officially recognized or provided for, excepting in certain special cases, such as marriages in Ambassador's houses or chapels, which cannot occur at Milan.

I am not aware of the particular law or regulations under which any registration of births and deaths of British subjects in foreign countries, either by Consular Officers or Chaplains, is provided for, more especially in places where no Consular Officer or Agent is resident. British subjects at Milan are in the same condition in this respect as all other British subjects abroad, in places where there is no British Consular Officer; and I presume in such cases that they can only register, or obtain a certificate of registry of births, deaths, or marriages, at the Consulate of the district.

I am not, therefore, aware (as at present advised) that your Lordship can authorize the Rev. J. Williams to register such births, deaths, or marriages at Milan, or to solemnize any marriage there, or give him any instructions on the subject.

Arrest of Messrs. Myers and Temstall, citizens of (so-called) Confederate States, by the Consul of the United States at Tangiers, and embarkation as prisoners for the United States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 17, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Mr. Hay,* Her Majesty's Minister in Morocco, and other documents, showing the circumstances under which Messrs. Myers and Temstall, citizens of the so-called Confederate States, have been arrested at Tangiers by the Consul of the United States of North America at that port, and embarked on board the United States' vessel of war "Ino" as prisoners, and subsequently transferred at sea to an American merchant-vessel, to be carried to the United States.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose copies of the Treaties between the United States and Morocco, and Great Britain and Morocco; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and report to your Lordship, at the earliest possible moment, our opinion as to the legality of the arrest and transportation of Messrs Myers and Temstall.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit the accompanying letter and inclosures received from Mr. Mason, Agent for the so-called Confederate States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the arrest and transportation of Messrs. Myers and Temstall, citizens of the so-styled Confederate States, so far as such arrest and transportation are to be regarded as the acts of the United States' Consul-General at Tangiers, were clearly illegal. If the Moorish Government regarded (as it was entitled to do) these persons as belligerents, they were illegally captured within neutral territory. If, on the other hand, the two Confederate citizens are to be regarded as subjects of the United States, having violated the municipal law of that country within its own limits (as by the imputed crime of high treason), then the arrest by the United States' Consul, without the authority of the Moorish Government, was a violation of the plainest principles of international law.

Treaties of Extradition, with their accompanying guards and protections, are the well-recognized means whereby a State whose laws have been broken can call upon another State, in whose territories the offender may be, to deliver him up for trial and punishment. The Consular privileges "of the most favoured nation," secured to the United States by the Treaty of 1836, do not include extradition; and that Treaty contains no stipulations for extradition.

The persons arrested had committed no crime or offence in Morocco; and the Consular jurisdiction as stipulated by Treaty and sanctioned by usage did not, therefore, attach. Mr. Hay states that political offenders have never been claimed from or surrendered by Morocco.

We must observe, however, that however illegal the arrest may have been, the right to complain rests with the Moorish Government exclusively; if (as would appear to be the case) their officers at Tangiers acted, not voluntarily, but reluctantly, and really under the menace of the United States' Consul, and apprehensions thereby occasioned, this is a matter for the consideration of the Imperial Government of Morocco. If it could be assumed that the Government of Morocco voluntarily surrendered Messrs. Myers and Temstall, then the Confederate States alone would have reason to feel aggrieved; and we apprehend that, under existing circumstances, they are in no position to urge any diplomatic complaint. In no case, as it appears to us, can Her Majesty's Government be called upon to interfere, or to do more than (if so disposed) to intimate to the Moorish Government the principles and rules upon which they and other Christian Powers are in the habit of acting in such cases.

Tenure of land in Turkey by British subjects, and jurisdiction of the Consular Court.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 17, 1862.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the instructions which were addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador and to the Judge of the Consular Court at Constantinople, on the receipt of our Report of the 18th of December last, respecting certain questions which had been in discussion between them with regard to the tenure of land in Turkey by British subjects, and the jurisdiction of the Consular Court.

Mr. Hammond also transmitted to us, together with the previous papers, the despatches which had been received from Sir H. Bulwer and Sir E. Hornby, in reply, containing observations on our Report, and stating the means by which they proposed to carry out its suggestions, and requested that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion on the further remarks on the questions of tenure of land and jurisdiction in Turkey therein contained.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That first, as regards the present position, in a legal and international point of view, of the tenure of land by Her Majesty's subjects in Turkey, we adhere to the opinion expressed in our Report of December 18, 1861, and we invite attention to the Reports of Law Officers of May 16, 1860 (third point therein), and March 13, 1861. Sir E. Hornby's remarks on our Report of December 18, 1861, in the paper headed "Examen" (herewith) appear to us to be generally correct.

The best mode of dealing internationally with the Turkish Government so as to secure the practical exercise of the Consular jurisdiction over land held (howsoever) by or on behalf of Her Majesty's subjects is, we repeat, a question of policy and not of law, which we do not feel competent to decide. The mode now proposed in the identic note of the 15th February is (as we understand it) that such property should, in all cases, upon the formal requisition of the Consular Court made through the Embassy, be compulsorily sold by the Turkish authorities, and that the proceeds should thereupon be paid over to, and dealt with and distributed by, the Consular Court. This latter condition, as to paying it over to the Consular Court, is not expressly stated in the identic note, but is clearly contemplated by Sir H. Bulwer (see No. 70, p. 5). Assuming that the Turkish Government will accede to this arrangement, we see no legal objection thereto, and under the peculiar circumstances of the case, this plan appears to obviate many difficulties, and to promise many practical advantages.

We observe, however, that the Firman and Hatti-Sheriff of 1856 expressly concedes to foreigners the right to hold landed property in Turkey, from which they are nevertheless excluded in practice; and inasmuch as the plan suggested in the identic note would seem to be calculated to postpone indefinitely the practical concession of this right, and in effect to recognize the absence of any such existing right on the part of foreigners, the propriety of adhering thereto is a question for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

2. As regards the question of the exercise of criminal jurisdiction over British subjects for crimes committed in Turkey, we agree with the opinion of Sir E. Hornby (expressed in his Memorandum inclosed in his despatch No. 12 of February 19, 1862), and of Sir H. Bulwer (expressed at page 5 of his despatch No. 66), to the effect that, under the 42nd Capitulation, one and the same Mixed Court should hear, and "finally decide," such cases.

Assuming that (as stated by Sir H. Bulwer in No. 66) the Turkish Criminal Code is framed on the French Code, and that it has always hitherto been held by foreign Governments, and by that of Her Majesty, that this law should be adopted and carried out by the Mixed Court, we see no objection to this being done.

With regard to the opinion expressed by the Law Officers on this subject, adverted to by Sir H. Bulwer as a "vague opinion," that the affair should "be judged by the Mixed Court according to reason and equity, as understood by the most civilized nations," we need only observe that the Law Officers were never until now informed that Turkey had a Criminal Code "framed on the French Code;" and that the opinions of the Law Officers upon matters connected with Turkey are often and unavoidably given without the necessary information which, unless supplied in the papers transmitted, is not accessible to them.

TURKEY AND GREECE.

Dispute between the two Governments respecting certain landed property near Thebes belonging to Mussulmans.

Doctors' Commons, March 18, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inform me that since the date of my Report of the 28th ultimo* on the subject of the dispute between the Turkish and Greek Governments respecting some landed property near Thebes, a copy of the Convention of 1837 between Turkey and Greece relating to these lands has been obtained from M. Musurus, and that your Lordship, before acting on my Report, desired him to transmit this Convention to me, in order to ascertain whether the view I have taken of the case is at all affected by anything contained in the said documents. And he was also pleased to inclose the former papers.

1862

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the view which I have taken of the case in my Report of February 28 is rather confirmed than altered by this Convention. The preamble and Ist Article are confined to the claims theretofore made on the part of the Turkish Government, for itself and subjects, on account of property in the Province of Thebes; and if the Convention had ended there, the Turkish argument that it did not extend to the claim in question (which had not theretofore been made by Turkey) would have disposed of it; but by the IIIrd Article, "The Sublime Porte, for itself and its subjects, relinquishes all claim upon any property situated in the Province of Thebes, of whatever nature such claim may be, or under any form in which such claim may be made; and it will not henceforward put forward any demand nor take any steps towards the Greek Government on behalf of any person whatsoever who may make a claim of this description, however small it may be."

This Article affords, in my opinion, strong grounds to the Greek Government for contending (as it does) that the Turkish Government is thereby precluded from taking up or pressing upon it the particular claim in question, and confirms my opinion that it is not a case for the interference of Great Britain, France, and Russia.

Case of the "Flor da Cabaceira," captured by the "Penguin" on suspicion of Slave Trade.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 19, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Commissioners at the Cape of Good Hope, reporting the case of the "Flor da Cabaceira," a Portuguese launch, captured by Her Majesty's ship "Penguin" on suspicion of being engaged in the Slave Trade, and brought for adjudication before the Mixed British and Portuguese Commission Court at that place. And he was also pleased to transmit to me a letter from the Board of Admiralty, forwarding a copy of a despatch from Sir Baldwin Walker, the Commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's naval forces on that station, together with a report upon this case from the Admiralty Proctor at the Cape of Good Hope, and to request that I would take these papers into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion upon the decision come to in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in dealing with this case, I proceed to consider, first, the Judgment pronounced by Commissioner Frere upon the evidence and papers adduced before the Court; secondly, the general aspect of the case, as dealt with (as it were) out of Court, in the other papers transmitted.

First, as regards the Judgment. This must be considered in connection with the last paragraph of Article IX of the Treaty of Lisbon of 1842, in which it is stipulated that any "one" or more of the several things enumerated, "if proved to have been found on board" during the voyage, "shall be considered as primâ facie evidence of the actual employment of the vessel in the transport of negroes or others for the purpose of consigning them to slavery, and the vessel shall thereupon be condemned, unless clear and incontestably satisfactory evidence on the part of the master or owners shall establish, to the satisfaction of the Court, that such vessel was, at the time of her detention or capture, employed on some legal pursuit, and that such of the several things above enumerated, as were found on board of her on the voyage on which she was proceeding when captured, were needed for legal purposes on that particular voyage." This must, in my opinion, be considered as binding on the Court; and accordingly, if it is proved to the Court that any one of the enumerated articles was on board, the aspect of the case is changed, the burden of proof is at once shifted, and the Court is bound to condemn the vessel, unless "satisfied by clear and incontestable evidence" both that the vessel was, when captured, employed on some legal pursuit, and that the enumerated articles found on board were needed for legal purposes on that particular voyage." The Court should adhere to the words of the paragraph, and find and determine accordingly.

It is stated in the Judgment that "the presence of the irons brings the vessel within Article X of the Treaty," and on this ground no compensation was awarded. (See the Registrar's note of judgment, Inclosure No. 4 in Commissioners' despatch No. 8; see also conclusion of Commissioners' Report, 18th January, 1862, Inclosure No. 1 in their despatch No. 8.) This reference to Article X is an error, it should be Article XI; but it is obvious that the Court was satisfied that the irons were found on board, and it is not stated in the Judgment that it was "established by clear and satisfactory evidence" (or by any evidence) to the satisfaction of the Court, that they were "needed for legal purposes." With respect to certain other enumerated articles, deposed to by Lieutenant McHardy as having been found on board (viz., slave-deck, boiler, and cooking apparatus, and mats or matting), the Judgment does not say that it was not satisfied of the fact that they were found on board by the captor; and, with regard to the phrase, "the Court has not the means of sifting the evidence," I do not see why it was unable to sift the evidence on this point, by requiring further proof, or by the further examination of the witnesses as to the fact of such articles having been on board, if it entertained doubts on the subject. If the Court was, in fact, satisfied that any of such articles were on board, then my previous observation as to the shackles, and the effect of the concluding paragraph of Article IX of the Treaty, will apply to the other articles;—juncta juvant, and each additional article adds to the proof requisite of their being needed for legal purposes.

With regard to the evidence of the only two negro boys found on board, who were produced as witnesses, Zenne and Unwun (or some such names), I observe at page 8 of the Commissioners' report that, on the 31st December, "the Court examined the two boys." I feel bound to state that they seem to have been very imperfectly examined, and that their evidence, as it stands, appears to me to be at variance with the case of the owners of the vessel. The owners' case was that they were free hired sailors; the captors that they were slaves; Zenne deposes that he was a sailor on board, but a slave; that the captain's name was Pener (his name being Assuadi according to the muster-roll); that he does not know Assuadi, or Xatabargi (supercargo), or Baraca (sailor according to the muster-roll), and that he does not know the names of any of the others on board.

Unwun's evidence is very imperfect; he was apparently not asked as to the names of those on board; he says that all on board were free (Zenne deposing that he was a slave); that all were black people on board, and that he does not know how much wages he got a month.

The evidence of these witnesses does not appear to have been "sifted" by the Court, nor is any explanation forthcoming of the very imperfect state in which it appears. If they were part of the crew, and not slaves, it seems incredible that they should not know the name of the master, or any of those on the muster-roll. This, however, would be quite consistent with their being slaves.

It was upon the evidence of these two witnesses, and of the papers found on board, that the Court released the vessel. With regard to the papers, I must observe that slavers are notoriously in the habit of providing themselves with regular papers; I am not aware what papers would have been regularly requisite for the particular voyage in question, and the Court does not refer to the particular papers on which it relied.

The papers do not, in my opinion, afford clear and incontestably satisfactory evidence of the innocent nature or "legal pursuit" of the voyage on which she was captured, or that the enumerated articles of slave-equipment found on board were needed for legal purposes on that voyage. If the Court was not satisfied that any of the enumerated articles were found on board, it should have said so; if otherwise, it should have pointed out the "clear and incontestably satisfactory evidence," (1), that the vessel was employed in a legal pursuit; (2), that the articles were needed for legal purposes.

Secondly, I proceed to consider the general aspect of the case as dealt with (as it were) "out of Court," upon the face of the papers transmitted. The impression which I have derived from a consideration of all the papers, more especially Lieutenant McHardy's letter to Captain Bickford of January 10th (Inclosure No. 3 in Sir B. Walker's No. 9), is that the vessel was acting in violation of the Treaty when captured, and that she probably had slaves on board. The facts stated at pages 12 and 13 of that letter respecting the absence of any serious claim or remonstrance on the part of the Portuguese authorities, or of the asserted owner, when taken in conjunction with the localities, the attempt of the vessel to escape when first seen, and the escape and disappearance of the master and asserted crew, coupled with the articles found on board (including a boiler and the means of cooking for forty persons in a vessel of 29 tons burthen), appear to me to be almost conclusive.

As regards the Commissioners' despatch of the 18th January, No. 8, I I agree with many of the suggestions therein contained. Wherever it may be practicable, it would be desirable that the captured vessel should, instead of being destroyed, when it may be impossible to carry her to any port where there is a Mixed Commission, be taken into the nearest port, and a survey and constat of her crew, fittings, &c., there obtained; and also that where this cannot be done, a survey and specification, especially as to the articles enumerated in Treaties, should be made and reduced to writing, and signed by the capturing officers, before the prize is destroyed; nothing of the kind was done in this case, nor, as far as I am aware, are naval officers instructed to this effect. It is, of course, highly important that the master and two or three of the principal persons on board should be produced as witnesses before the Mixed Commission Court, but where this has been rendered impossible, as in this case, by their escape from custody, the Court is not thereby precluded from condemning the vessel.

With respect to Sir B. Walker's despatch No. 9 of the 18th January, 1862, I do not consider the observation of the Court, "that it had not the means of sifting the evidence," is an offensive reflection upon the veracity and honour of the two lieutenants, who were upon their oath.

As regards the letter of the Admiralty Proctor at the Cape, I concur generally with the observations made therein; but as regards the last paragraph, I am of opinion that under the very peculiar circumstances of the case (the prize having been destroyed, and all on board having escaped excepting the two boys), it would have been a proper and prudent course to have produced two or three witnesses to corroborate Lieutenant McHardy as to the particular articles found on board, upon which point the result, in effect, depended.

Action by Mr. Moss for damages and false imprisonment against Her Majesty's Minister in Japan.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 20, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letters of the 6th and 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two letters from the Colonial Office, inclosing copies of three despatches from the Governor of Hong Kong, respecting the recent proceedings in the Court of that Colony, in the action for damages and false imprisonment brought by Mr. Moss against Her Majesty's Minister in Japan, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which your Lordship should pursue in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we observe from the official letter of December 31, 1861, from the Attorney-General of Hong Kong to the Colonial Secretary, that the Attorney-General has made, on behalf of the defendant, an application to the Supreme Court for a rule to show cause why the verdict in favour of Mr. Moss should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered instead; and that the Judge was, at that date, "considering his application." This being so, and Mr. Moss not having made any application to Her Majesty's Government since the verdict, Her Majesty's Government is not at present either called on, or in a position, to take any steps in this matter. It must remain to be determined hereafter, when the legal proceedings still pending are completely at an end, and when any ulterior proceeding on the part of Mr. Moss shall be threatened or taken, what course it may be proper for Her Majesty's Government to adopt.

Complaint of Mr. O'Connor of non-restoration of tobacco found on board the "Hiawatha," captured and condemned for breach of blockade.

Doctors' Commons, March 21, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that, with reference to my several Reports relative to the cases of the vessels "Hiawatha" and "Crenshaw," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence, as marked in the margin,* respecting a complaint made by Mr. O'Connor, that some tobacco on board the "Crenshaw," which belonged to a German, has been delivered in Liverpool, whereas Mr. O'Connor has been unable to obtain possession of his tobacco which was on board the "Hiawatha," although that vessel left Richmond before the "Crenshaw."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the explanation would appear to be, as stated by Lord Lyons, that the whole cargo of the "Hiawatha" has been condemned, while restoration has been decreed of that portion of the cargo of the "Crenshaw" which belonged to neutrals residing at a distance; and to request that I would take Mr. O'Connor's case into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government would be borne out in interfering on his behalf. And he was also pleased to inclose the decrees of the Prize Court in the respective cases of the "Hiawatha" and "Crenshaw."†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the explanation suggested appears to be correct; Her Majesty's Government has already (through Lord Lyons) interfered fruitlessly in favour of the "Hiawatha" and her cargo, which have now after a full hearing been condemned as prize.

I have already in my Report of 31st October, 1861,‡ expressed my opinion that it cannot be successfully contended that the Judgment is invalid, or in breach of international law; under these circumstances, I regret to say that I see no prospect of success in any further interference in favour of a portion of the cargo. Her Majesty's Government would not, in my opinion, be borne out in interfering on Mr. O'Connor's behalf, at all events without the suggestion of some special grounds distinct from any hitherto adduced, and I cannot discover any such grounds.

† In Lord Lyon's No. 638; in Consul Archibald's No. 96.

I may add (for your Lordship's information) that in the case of the "Crenshaw," which was a United States' ship, the Prize Court came to the conclusion that, under the circumstances, the American master was not the agent of the neutral owners, so as to bind their interests by his violation of the blockade; whilst in the case of the "Hiawatha" (a British vessel with a British master), it came to a different conclusion as to the effect of his acts on the interest of the British owners of the cargo. It cannot be contended that there is no distinction between the cases; and hard as this case is, there is, I fear, therefore, no reason to hope that any further intervention in favour of Mr. O'Connor would avail.

Claim of Mr. J. G. Shaver on account of arrest and imprisonment in United States, and consequent loss of business.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 22, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, received through the Colonial Office, from Mr. John G. Shaver, requesting that Her Majesty's Government will obtain compensation for him from the United States' Government, on account of his arrest and imprisonment in the United States, and on account of loss in business thereby.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he inclosed the papers which had been laid before Parliament on this case, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take Mr. Shaver's application into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we observe that Mr. Shaver states in his memorial that, although in the service of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, his "head-quarters were at Louisville, Kentucky."

It appears, however, from the letter of Mr. Benjamin, a member of the Canadian House of Assembly (at page 3 of the printed papers), that he is a resident of Belleville, in Canada. We assume, therefore, that although his employment frequently required his presence in the United States, he was not, when arrested in October 1861, domiciled in the United States, but in Canada.

We must further assume (although this does not expressly appear from the papers) that no ordinary legal remedy is practically open to him.

We observe that he was arrested on arriving from Canada October 15, 1861, at Detroit, in the State of Michigan, in the extreme north of the United States, far removed from the seat of war, or of any internal disturbance, where the ordinary course of law and criminal jurisdiction was not interrupted or suspended. He was perfectly well known, and was arrested by the order (as he states) of Mr. Secretary Seward, conveyed apparently by telegraph. No charge was made against him, or reason assigned for his arrest; he was searched and imprisoned, first (as he states) "in a dungeon amongst negroces and malefactors of the vilest kind," subsequently in a dark and unventilated room, with forty-eight others, in Fort Lafayette.

He states that on arriving at New York, he was taken before Mr. Kennedy, of the Police Department, who, on going into his case, said "his arrest was an error, and that there was no charge against him." He was transferred to Fort Warren, where he was confined until the 6th of January, 1862, and then only released on taking an oath (which is at page 9 of the printed papers), that he will not enter any of the Confederate States, or hold any correspondence with persons residing therein, without permission of the Secretary of State, and that he will not do anything hostile to the United States during the present insurrection, saving his allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain.

With regard to his having been arrested by the order of Mr. Secretary Seward, Mr. Seward states in his letter to Lord Lyons of November 14, 1861 (page 4 printed papers),—

1. That Mr. Seward believed, at the time of his arrest, that he was a citizen of the United States.

2. That he at first directed his release, upon taking an oath of allegiance to the United States, "for the reason that the police authorities who had induced his arrest had not then shown any sufficient cause for it; that Mr. Shaver declined to take this oath; but that, before that fact became known to Mr. Seward, information had been received of the grounds of his arrest; upon considering which he decided that his release at present would not be compatible with the public safety."

From the inclosure in Mr. Seward's letter to Lord Lyons of December 23, 1861, it would appear that the United States' Government "has satisfactory evidence that he was engaged in affording aid and comfort to the insurrectionists both by his conversation and his acts; that he willingly suffered himself to be made a medium of communication between them and their agents in Canada and Europe; and that he conveyed to them revolvers and other articles contraband of war, in violation of the law of the United States."

This is the only statement of the cause of his treatment to be found in the papers. Mr. Shaver has, from the first, denied that there was any truth in, or the slightest foundation for, the charges made against him. The first and only specification of any charges received by him appears to have been at Fort Warren in December, 1861, when Colonel Dimick, the commander, showed him a paper, a copy of which was refused him, "recapitulating a number of charges against him, most of them indefinite, and all of which he solemnly declares to be untrue." (Printed papers, page 7.)

He lost his employment, and has suffered severely from the treatment he has received. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that he is primâ facie entitled to reasonable compensation, although not to that which he suggests, 25,000*l.*, which is extravagant. Non constat that, when arrested, he had committed within the territories of the United States any crime or offence against the law of the United States, and if the acts charged against him were not committed within the United States but in Canada, we are at a loss to understand how they can have been in violation of the law of the United States.

Again, if they were committed within the United States, it remains to be explained why he was not proceeded against according to law. As the case actually stands, it has not been satisfactorily shown that he has in fact done anything in respect of which he was amenable to arrest in the United States.

We are, therefore, of opinion that Her Majesty's Government will be justified (if it thinks fit so to do) in making such representations in his favour as may obtain the fair consideration, by the United States' Government, of his claim for reasonable compensation. The exaction of the peculiar oath imposed upon him, and the opening of Lord Lyons' letters addressed to him at Fort Warren (Memorial, page 7), also appear to us to require explanation.

Request of Mr. Adams that measures be taken to prevent vessels loading cargoes in British ports with declared intention of running the blockade of the Confederate States.

Doctors' Commons, March 22, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 10th instant, from Mr. Adams, the United States' Minister at this Court, in which, after representing a case of alleged want of faith shown by the Captain of the English steamer "General Miramon" in May last, he called your Lordship's attention to the circumstances under which a number of vessels are loading cargoes in this country, with the declared intention of running the blockade, and requested that Her Majesty's Government would take such action in the matter as may be within their power; and to request that we would take Mr. Adams' note into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion, whether the proceedings complained of by him are contrary to law, and render the parties concerned liable to punishment, and whether Her Majesty's Government are bound to take notice of these proceedings. And he was also pleased to state that a copy of the note in which your Lordship has acknowledged the receipt of Mr. Adams' communication was annexed for our information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that both questions must be answered negatively. The proceedings of which Mr. Adams complains are not cognizable by the Municipal Law of this country, and consequently Her Majesty's Government is not bound to take notice of such proceedings, and could not do so with any effect.

Mr. Adams adverts to three subjects:—

1. The conduct of the master of the "General Miramon," who, having been permitted by the United States' Flag-Officer McKean, to enter Mobile in May last, in order to land a lady passenger, who was ill, on a pledge to come out without breaking cargo, on the next day, nevertheless, discharged his cargo there, and has recently brought another cargo to Havana.

This complaint appears to have originated in a letter from the United States' Consul at Havana to Her Majesty's Consul there, dated January 18th. The exact particulars of the case are not supplied; and Mr. Adams uses the expression, "it would appear from the statements therein made, if in accordance with the facts, &c."

It is impossible for Her Majesty's Government either to investigate these statements, or to assume their correctness without investigation; and it is evident that, in order to do so, the inquiry would first have to be made, whether there was a legal blockade of Mobile at the particular date when the ship "Miramon" left that port,—a question into which we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to enter for such a purpose.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Adams is not in a position to call on Her Majesty's Government (even if it were in their power, under any circumstances, to do so) "to put the seal of public reprobation upon" (Captain Golding's conduct as) "a single well-authenticated act of dishonesty." It may be sufficient to say that, no such act being established, Her Majesty's Government is under no obligation to take any steps in relation thereto.

As regards the two other subjects adverted to by Mr. Adams, viz., (2), the newspaper advertisements of vessels "about to depart with the declared intention of violating the blockade," and (3), "respectable Companies in London having gone so far as to establish a specific rate of premium at which they are prepared to guarantee the property engaged in such unlawful adventures;" it is obvious, that Her Majesty's Government has no power to interfere, nor do we observe that this is even suggested by Mr. Adams. To actual, or attempted, or intended, breach of lawful blockade by neutral vessels, it is well known that certain penal consequences are attached; but these belong purely to the law of nations, and are no part of Municipal Law, and they are consequently enforceable by the blockading ships, and not by the Civil Magistrate of the neutral State.

Complaint of Messrs. Bailey and Leetham of seizure of their steamer "Labuan" by United States' man-of-war, while taking on board a cargo of cotton at Matamoros (Mexico).

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 22, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter (dated the 15th of March instant) from Messrs. Lefevre and Co., inclosing a letter of the same date, with other papers, from Messrs. Bailey and Leetham of Hull, respecting the seizure of their steamer the "Labuan," by the United States' man-of-war "Portsmouth," while taking on board a cargo of cotton at the Mexican port of Matamoros, and also to state that these papers have been submitted to your Lordship "with a view to Her Majesty's Government taking such steps as they may deem proper for the protection of the interests of the owners of the 'Labuan' and her cargo;" and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions if any, which it may be proper to address to Lord Lyons on the subject.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit on the 19th March instant, a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 152, 3rd March).

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit on the 22nd instant a despatch, and its inclosure, from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Havana (No. 7, 1st March).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as the case now stands, the expediency of sending any definite instructions to Lord Lyons appears to me to be questionable.

The ship has arrived at New York in charge of a prize-crew, and his Lordship has already called Mr. Seward's attention to the case, and expressed his conviction "that if she was captured unlawfully, the Government of the United States will be prompt to redress the wrong thus committed by its officers."

The information transmitted to your Lordship by Messrs. Bailey and Leetham, with their letter of the 15th instant, as to the facts connected with the capture, is contained in the letter from the mate of the "Labuan" (Hargill) to them of the 14th February. From this letter it appears that although the mate states that she was lying "off the Rio Grande," and that the "Labuan" was "in Mexican waters" when captured (referring to the latitude and longitude), yet that the Captain of the "Portsmouth" (the captor) stated to him at the time that she was in "American waters," and was taking on board "American cotton." In the extract from the "New York Herald" of the 25th February (transmitted by Lord Lyons in his despatch No. 152) it is stated that the "Portsmouth" "saw a large steamer at anchor in the river off Matamoros, and a small Secession steamer evidently engaged in bringing a cargo of cotton to her."

Consul Crawford's despatch No. 7 is founded upon one to him from Vice-Consul Blackie at Matamoros, which has been sent to Lord Lyons, but of which no copy is with the papers. From this it would appear that the "Labuan" was lying when captured "within the limits of the port of Matamoros," and that part of her cargo of cotton was Spanish property, in respect of which the Captain-General of Cuba intended to remonstrate strongly with the United States' Government through the Spanish Minister at Washington. Consul Crawford has written to Lord Lyons; and the master and the supercargo of the "Labuan" (who were on shore at the Custom-house when she was captured) have proceeded to New York and Washington to communicate with Lord Lyons, and to appear in the Prize Court.

Although, therefore, the capture seems unjustifiable, especially if it took place within the limits of the port of Matamoros (and I conclude within three miles of the coast of Mexico), yet all the facts and circumstances are not quite free from question. Lord Lyons will be more correctly informed than Her Majesty's Government now is. I can, therefore, only suggest that copies of the mate's letter and of the affidavit of Messrs. Leetham and Atkinson, and of the bill of lading annexed, should be sent to Lord Lyons, and that he should be instructed to use his discretion according to the circumstances which may transpire, and under legal advice if necessary, as to whether he should address to the United States' Government any formal demand for the release of the ship and cargo, but that he should only do this on being satisfied that there was no apparent legal justification for the capture of either; otherwise the case should be left to the adjudication of the Prize Court.

Some of the crew are stated in the mate's letter to have been taken out of the "Labuan" and put on board the "Portsmouth;" they, as well as all others not required as witnesses in the Prize Court, should be forthwith set at liberty.

Condemnation of the "Herald" for breach of blockade of port of Beaufort.

Doctors' Commons, March 24, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul at Philadelphia, reporting the condemnation of the British brig "Herald," and which formed the subject of my Report of the 24th September last;* and to request that I would again take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon. And he was also pleased to annex the previous papers, as well as an instruction to Lord Lyons (No. 885).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Judgment of the United States' Court of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, condemning the "Herald" (Inclosure No. 1 in Consul Kortright's No. 6), does not appear to me to be entirely satisfactory, but it is unaccompanied by evidence, or papers, or the arguments; and an appeal from it is open to the owners to the Circuit Court. There is no further application for the interference of Her Majesty's Government; and I cannot, therefore, under the circumstances, advise your Lordship at present to take any step in the matter.

The Judgment of a Court of Admiralty in a question of prize is, primâ facie, conclusive internationally; and if the intervention of Her Majesty's Government should be invoked, after and notwithstanding such Judgment, all the papers must be supplied, and the reasons upon which the parties rely as rendering the sentence of condemnation invalid assigned; and the charges (adverted to in the Judgment and in Consul Kortright's despatch No. 6) of her sailing for a false destination, and of the false or deceptive statements of the master, as to the ownership, must be cleared up. It will then remain for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government whether and on what grounds it can properly interfere.

Appointment of a paid British Commissioner to attend the Mixed Turkish and European Tribunals of Commerce.

Doctors' Commons, March 24, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Sir Henry Bulwer (No. 84, March 4, 1862), respecting the desire of the British merchants at Constantinople to have a paid British Commissioner appointed to attend the Mixed Turkish and European Tribunals of Commerce, instead of the system now in force, for securing the attendance of foreign merchants in suits between Ottoman and British subjects; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion respecting the appointment of such a Commissioner.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no legal objection to the proposed alteration, which seems to promise a great improvement upon the present system, and which (as we collect from Sir H. Bulwer's letter) is proposed to be made with the concurrence of the Ottoman Government.

We must observe, however, that no facts or documents are submitted to us raising any legal doubt or question on the subject; and that we are not aware of the Treaty or Capitulation under which the Mixed Tribunals in question are constituted, or by what authority or to what extent they exercise and enforce their jurisdiction. The 24th Capitulation appears to stipulate for the presence of the Ambassador, Consul, or Interpreter at the hearing and decision of all law-suits or other affairs connected with the law in which Her Majesty's subjects shall be involved.

Doctors' Commons, March 25, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st March instant, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 147 of February 28, and No. 151 of March 3, 1862), respecting some permits which had been issued by the United States' Government, authorizing trade between the loyal and the seceded States, and requesting that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to how far the issue of these permits could be regarded as vitiating the blockade.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers submitted to us into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the issuing of the "permits" or licenses in question cannot be considered as vitiating the blockade. The trade in question seems to be confined to ports in the Confederate States actually occupied by the forces of the United States' Government; and it does not appear that any permission has been given to trade with any ports in the Confederate States occupied by the Confederate Government, and blockaded by the naval forces of the United States.

And he was also pleased to transmit a further letter and its inclosure from Messrs. Lefevre and Co. on this subject, dated the 24th March instant; and also the former papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1862

The instructions to be sent to Lord Lyons for his guidance are, under the circumstances, a question of policy rather than of law. I can only suggest that the altered aspect of the case appears to me to justify the giving instructions to his Lordship to make a formal representation to Mr. Seward to the effect that Her Majesty's Government consider the capture of the "Labuan" as unjustifiable, and view it as a serious violation of international law, and must require the prompt release of the vessel, her cargo, papers, and crew, together with reasonable compensation to the parties interested for the losses they have sustained by or in consequence of the capture, unless his Lordship should (after full consideration and taking legal advice, if he should think it advisable so to do) see sufficient reason for abstaining from taking this course.

As time presses, I have prepared (by way of suggestion), and herewith transmit, a draft to Lord Lyons, expressing my present view of the case, for your Lordship's consideration.

I forbear from entering upon the very important question involved in this case, and opened in these papers (especially in Vice-Consul Blackie's despatch of the 9th of February), of the future export from Matamoros, in British vessels, of cotton grown in Texas, which has, for the present, been effectually interrupted by the conduct and declarations of Captain Swartout, of the "Portsmouth," and which he has declared his intention to persist in interrupting, without any sufficient justification, as far as I can see. This matter urgently requires attention. I ought, however, to add that if vessels or small craft of any description, owned wholly or in part by persons domiciled in Texas, should be found by United States' ships of war out of Mexican waters (howsoever engaged), they will be legally liable to capture; and that, adverting to the actual state of circumstances in Mexico and the United States, and to the geographical position of that port, it may be expected that the United States' officers will, unless this difficulty is obviated, or they are instructed to the contrary, have both the disposition and the power of seriously interfering with neutral interests at Matamoros, and of greatly restricting, if not of effectually preventing, the free exportation therefrom of cotton produced in Texas, which is a matter of urgent importance to the interests of all neutral Powers.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 67.

Proposed Despatch to Lord Lyons.

Foreign Office, 1862.

[RECITE the dates and description of the various despatches received down to this date, and proceed—]

The case presented to Her Majesty's Government on the face of these papers is one of a very serious aspect, both as regards the interests of the British owners of the "Labuan" and of a portion of her cargo, and as regards the principle involved, with a view to similar cases, which, in consequence of the conduct and declarations of Captain Swartout of the "Portsmouth," may be expected to recur at Matamoros.

I confine myself at present to the case of the "Labuan;" and I must observe, in the first place, that there appears no reason whatever to suspect the good faith of the parties interested throughout the whole transaction.

At the time the "Labuan" left England, not only was all trade with Matamoros, as being a neutral port, perfectly lawful, but on her arrival at Havana on her outward voyage (as appears from Messrs. Frerick and Co.'s letter to Consul Archibald of March the 4th), the agent at that port of Messrs. De Jersey and Co. (the charterers) called, in company with the master, on the United States' Consul, stated the intention to proceed to Matamoros with cargo, and possibly to bring back a return cargo, and was thereupon assured by the United States' Consul "that he had nothing whatever to fear as regarded interference by the United States' cruizers.

The outward cargo landed at Matamoros (and consisting chiefly of blankets, bagging, and bale goods) was of a perfectly innocent character; it was consigned to Droize, Oetling, and Co., of Matamoros, to be sold there. The cargo of cotton which she had partly laden on board when captured, was purchased by them at Matamoros from Mexican merchants, on account of the British charterers and of a Spanish merchant at Matamoros; and part of it was laden regularly through the Mexican Custom-house, with the regular papers from that office and from the Spanish and the British Vice-Consulates; the remainder was ready for lading, and a large sum in specie was also ready to be laden. Thus everything was done openly and in good faith.

The vessel, according to the positive information received by Her Majesty's Government from Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Matamoros, was, owing to her draught of water not enabling her to reach the town of Matamoros, lying at anchor off the mouth of Rio Grande, not only in Mexican waters, but, as Her Majesty's Government is informed, within the legal limits of the port of Matamoros, as ascertained by frequent observations of latitude and longitude taken on board,[*] a fact which is corroborated by her lading being done through the Custom-house there;[†] and the master left Matamoros with his papers and part of the cargo, and was only prevented from getting on board and detained at the mouth of the river by tempestuous weather.

Previously to the appearance of the "Portsmouth," on the 1st of February, no blockade of the neighbouring ports of Texas (Brazos, Santiago, and Brownsville) had been established, and no United States' ship of war had boarded any vessel in that vicinity; there had been no warning, notification, or interruption of the trade of Matamoros or the Rio Grande.

This, I apprehend, disposes of any suggestion of the capture having been made for breach of blockade.

With respect to the shipment of the cargo by means of a Secession steamer (if this should be relied on by Mr. Seward), I can only refer you to the statement in Vice-Consul Blacker's despatch, pp. 14, 15. Having regard to such statement, it does not appear how this fact (which was not apparently witnessed by the "Portsmouth") can justify the capture, or have any material bearing on the case.

The mate states that the steamer carried the Mexican flag, and the master could not have known her nationality, even if that were of any importance.

Captain Swartout, the capturing officer, had, not only from the papers delivered up to him by the mate,[‡] but by his interview with Her Majesty's Vice-Consul on the 5th of February,[§] extraordinary facilities for satisfying himself upon all points involved in any doubt.

After the capture, several of the crew, instead of being regularly sent into a captor's port in the prize, were irregularly taken out of the "Labuan" and detained on board the "Portsmouth;" and on the arrival of the "Labuan" at New York on the 28th February, the mate was refused permission to confer with Her Majesty's Consul or with any legal adviser, until after his examination before a Prize Commission on the 3rd of March.

Under these circumstances I am unable to see any sufficient justification for this capture. Apart from the question of the place of capture (which appears, if clearly established, to dispose of the case), and apart from all questions of blockade (which did not exist, and was not violated), the mere fact of the cotton on board having been grown in Texas (which appears to have been relied upon by the captor), or having been, after its purchase at Matamoros, put on board in a steamer owned by Texan citizens, cannot afford any justification for the capture of the "Labuan," by international law. This capture, moreover, was not (as in ordinary cases) made on the high seas, when the captor has no means of ascertaining any questionable facts from any independent or trustworthy source: Captain Swartout had peculiar facilities of ascertaining from the Vice-Consul all the circumstances of the case.

I have therefore to instruct your Lordship (unless you should, in consideration of some communication from the United States' Government, or some circumstance not at present known to me, or upon the best legal advice, see reason to abstain from so doing;—as to which I leave to your Lordship with entire confidence the exercise of a wide discretion) to embody in a note to

Mr. Seward such of these facts and circumstances as may appear to you essential, and to require the prompt release of the "Labuan," her cargo, crew, and papers; and further, to intimate to Mr. Seward that Her Majesty's Government feel themselves compelled, under all the circumstances of the case, to insist upon the parties interested being compensated for all losses they may have sustained by this unjustifiable capture.

You will, of course, consider the propriety of acting as far as may be expedient in connection with the Spanish Minister at Washington, in the probable event of his demanding reparation for the capture of the Spanish portion of the cargo.

With a view to the possibility of the discussion with the United States' Government turning on the existence of a blockade of Texas, and the peculiar position of the State of Texas, especially of the port of Brownsville on the Rio Grande, which river forms the boundary between that State and the Republic of Mexico, I would call your Lordship's attention to the cases of the "Stert" (4 Christopher Robinson's "Reports," p. 65), the "Ocean" (3 ditto, p. 297), and the passages in 3 Phillimore's "Commentaries," p. 404, s. cccxiv, and especially in Wheaton's "International Law" (edited by Mr. Lawrence), p. 585, edition London, 1857, as to the carriage of goods from a blockaded port to a neutral port, through interior communication or inland navigation, not being a breach of a maritime blockade.

UNITED STATES.

Seizure by blockading squadron off Florida of the "Stephen Hart," the cargo of which belongs to Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell, and Co.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 28, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter, dated the 6th March instant, and its inclosure, from Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell, and Co., stating the circumstances under which the "Stephen Hart," the cargo of which was their property, was captured by one of the ships of the United States' blockading squadron off the coast of Florida, and soliciting your Lordship to instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Washington to take steps for the protection of their interests, and to request that I would take this case into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as the case stands at present I cannot advise your Lordship to interfere. The interests of all concerned are duly represented at New York, to which port the vessel has been sent for adjudication, and where the master is in communication with Her Majesty's Consul.

All the material facts do not appear to me to be explicitly and candidly stated in the papers transmitted by the applicants.

1. As to the ship,—she is merely stated by Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell, and Co., the owners of the cargo, to belong "to our Mr. John Harris." There is no statement from this gentleman. Nothing is stated as to the date or circumstances of her purchase, or her previous nationality, ownership, or employment; and there is no explanation of the expressions in the letter from the master, of the 18th February, who states "that he finds Mr. B. H. Hart, at New York, represents the interests of the schooner," and that the mate and boatswain, who have been examined, "have been stating things which they cannot substantiate," and that the mate has confessed "that he knew the schooner, and that she had been running to the Southern States, and had a Confederate flag on board;" expressions which obviously require explanation.

2. As to the nature of the cargo,—no information is forthcoming in any of the papers. The letter of Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell, and Co. is dated "Military Warehouse, 71, Jermyn Street;" it is, therefore, probable that the cargo was in fact "contraband of war."

3. As to its destination,—no information is given on this point. It is stated that she was not intended to run the blockade, but it is not stated that her cargo was not intended to reach a Southern (or Confederate) port; nor is it stated to whose order, or on whose account, it was shipped. It is stated that she cleared from London for Cardenas, and was steering direct as the wind would allow for that port; yet the Inclosure B (described as "Letter to the Consignee") is very short, makes no allusion to the cargo, and is addressed to "Charles J. Helm, Esq., care of J. Crawford, Esq., Havana," (not Cardenas): and it is obvious from these inclosures, especially B and C, that she was intended to go to Havana, possibly after she had been at Cardenas, but this is not explained.

Considering all these circumstances,—that the probable cause or pretext of the capture is not stated by the master; that he does not state that he was advised by the Consul, or by his proctor, that it was unjustifiable; and from the case of the "Hendrik and Alida" being referred to by Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell, and Co., it is probable that the cargo was contraband of war, ultimately designed for the use of the Confederates; and that this or other circumstances (known to, or suspected by them, but not stated), caused, and may have justified, the capture.

I can only suggest that, under these circumstances, Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell, and Co., may be informed that your Lordship requires full information of the nature and ultimate real destination of the cargo, and as to the persons who (as principals) ordered it, or on whose credit or account it was supplied, together with the instructions to the master, or others, as to its disposal, and also explanations of the allusions in the master's letter to the examinations of Mr. Chadwick, mate, and of the boatswain, such explanations to be accompanied with the necessary papers; as also the cause or pretext for the capture, according to their information or conjecture. It may be further intimated to them, that as the master intended to write more fully by the mail of the 22nd ultimo, your Lordship requests to be furnished with any further information which they may have received, and that your Lordship, before you can determine the question of official intervention, must be furnished by them with a complete and candid statement of all the circumstances of the case.

Mr. Consul Crawford at Havana (who appears from the Inclosures A and C to have been in correspondence with Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell, and Co., on the subject of this vessel), and the Consul at New York, should be instructed to report fully upon the case.

PERSIA.

Right of foreigners to purchase houses and stores in Persia.

Doctors' Commons, March 29, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran (No. 14), inclosing copies of a correspondence which has passed between him and the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs on the subject of the right of foreigners to purchase houses and stores in Persia. And he was also pleased to inclose copies of the Treaties between Russia and Persia, and between Great Britain and Persia, referred to in this correspondence; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government would be justified to take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Her Majesty's Government will, in my opinion, be clearly justified in insisting on the absolute and unqualified right of Her Majesty's subjects to purchase dwelling-houses, warehouses, and places of deposit for their merchandize ("emplacements pour y déposer leur marchandises"): something may turn on the Persian meaning of this word; it may probably extend to such premises as are known to us as wharfs and yards.

The Persian Minister in effect admits that Her Majesty's subjects are entitled (I presume under "the most favoured nation clause," Article IX of the Treaty of Paris, 1857) to the same treatment in respect of the privilege in question, as Russian subjects under the Commercial Treaty of Turcomantchai, between Russia and Persia, February 10, 1828. Article V of this latter Treaty clearly stipulates for this privilege in favour of Russian subjects, without limitation. The introductory words, as to the difficulty of hiring houses, merely state the reason for the subsequent express stipulation; they do not in any manner limit or qualify this stipulation, or make it dependent on the difficulty or facility of hiring houses, and are not fairly susceptible of the meaning which the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs seeks to give to them, in his notes to Mr. Alison of the 25th December, 1861, and 27th January, 1862; any such limitation or qualification as suggested, must, in order to be valid, be founded on the express terms of the Treaty, or be derived by necessary implication therefrom, and this cannot be established. The construction contended for would, moreover, practically enable the Persian Government to limit the stipulated privilege at its own uncontrolled discretion, contrary to the spirit as well as the terms of the Treaty. The stipulations of Article I of the Commercial Treaty of Turcomantchai will also apply to this description of property ("immeubles").

Case of Walter Foreman, a British subject, called upon to serve in the Norwegian army.

Doctors' Commons, March 31, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th March instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 5th of December ultimo,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Christiania (No. 2, March 15, 1862), furnishing the details which I required respecting the case of Walter Foreman, a British subject, who had been called upon to serve in the Norwegian army; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in the matter. And he was also pleased to annex the former papers relating to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me to be desirable that the legal question should be settled by the adjudication of the Supreme Court, the expense of which Consul Crowe states will not exceed 20*l*.

Should the decision be in favour of the exemption from military service, an important privilege will be thereby secured to a certain class of British subjects in Norway. Should it (as probable) be adverse to such exemption, all doubt will be removed, and the law will be settled; in this contingency I can only suggest an arrangement of the question by negotiation, on the grounds stated in my Report of December 5, 1861.

Case of Antippo v. Foca. Request of Nicolo Antippo that Wallachian Government be required to cause the personal arrest or attachment of Madame Foca.

Doctors' Commons, March 31, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th March instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 30th of October ultimo,† relative to the case of "Antippo v. Foca," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us drafts of despatches which your Lordship addressed to the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, and to Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Bucharest, and a despatch which has been received in reply from Sir Edmund Hornby.* And he was also pleased to inclose the previous papers relating to this case;† and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps which it may be proper for Her Majesty's Government to take in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That under existing circumstances we are unable to advise Her Majesty's Government to take any steps whatever for the purpose of procuring the Decree of the Consular Court against Madame Foca to be enforced, presuming, as we do, that it would not be expedient to risk a collision with the Wallachian Government, by instructing the Consul to cause her personal arrest or "attachment" to be effected by virtue of his Consular jurisdiction, and in order to compel her compliance with the Decree of the Supreme Consular Court.

It appears from Sir E. Hornby's despatch that Mr. Green had no means of enforcing that Decree without the intervention of the Wallachian authorities, except by attachment; and that he had properly abstained from attempting to attach the person of Madame Foca under the advice or direction of Sir E. Hornby himself. Signor Antippo, in his memorial of the 10th August, stated that Madame Foca, when her naturalization was objected to by Mr. Green, "said, in answer to his demand at the Wallachian Ministry that, as far as concerned the suit with Antippo, she did not intend to appeal to the laws of the country (i. e., of Wallachia), but would have the matter to be settled by the English authorities, where it had begun; having other reasons of her own for becoming a naturalized Wallachian." He added, that, nevertheless, "the Consul-General, Mr. Green, was not allowed by the Wallachian Ministry to put the Decree of the Court into execution, on account of the intervening change of subjection; the Ministry declaring that the execution should be made by the Wallachian laws and by the local authorities." It was with reference to these statements of Signor Antippo that we desired to receive clear and correct information, especially as no exception appeared to have been taken by Mr. Green himself to the conduct of the Wallachian Government, subsequently to Madame Foca's naturalization; on the contrary, Mr. Green wrote in his letter of the 28th September, "The Wallachian Government has never refused to carry out the Decree of the British Consular Court of Constantinople against Madame Foca. In fact, Antippo has been engaged for several months in endeavours to effect seizures of Madame Foca's property, through the intervention and with the assistance of the Wallachian authorities." The only further information which we have now received on the subject is to the effect that, while Sir E. Hornby is "convinced that Madame Foca's object in seeking Wallachian nationality was to evade the jurisdiction of her lawful authority," he is "not in a position to prove that the naturalization given her was a pretext for the violation of the rights secured by Treaty to persons under British jurisdiction." We are not prepared entirely to subscribe to Sir E. Hornby's opinions that the Wallachian authorities acted improperly in giving to Madame Foca Wallachian naturalization, unless such naturalization was intended or permitted to be made use of, for the purpose of shielding her from the British jurisdiction, to which she was previously subject; and in the present state of our information we see no sufficient grounds for concluding, either that any such use has, in fact, been made of it, or that it was granted to her by the Wallachian authorities with any such intention.

The principle involved is important, inasmuch as if any British or Ionian subject could, by virtue of a Wallachian naturalization, succeed in setting at defiance a Decree of the Consular Court, justice might in all such cases be defeated, and the Capitulations practically violated. We apprehend that a Wallachian naturalization (whatever privileges it may confer) cannot have the effect of withdrawing from the British Consular jurisdiction any persons originally subject thereto, who cannot by reason of such naturalization be exempted from their original allegiance. In this case, however, the Wallachian Government has not thrown any obstacle in the way of Mr. Green's jurisdiction;

Claim of Mr. McWhan for losses sustained by capture of the "C. P. Knapp," part of her cargo belonging to his firm.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter, dated the 12th instant, from Mr. Mc Whan, complaining of the loss occasioned to the firm of which he is a member, from the capture by the United States' blockading squadron of a vessel named the "C. P. Knapp," which was taken into Key West, and subsequently released. And that Mr. Mc Whan stated that his firm owned a portion of the cargo of that vessel, and that he claims compensation from the United States' Government for the pecuniary loss which they suffered in consequence of its not being delivered in due course. And he was also pleased to inclose some further papers,* from which, he stated, I should see that Her Majesty's Minister at Washington has already been in communication with the Government of the United States with respect to the "C. P. Knapp," and to request that I would take this case into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether the claim of Mr. Mc Whan is one which Her Majesty's Government would be justified in presenting to the United States' Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears from the only information forthcoming (viz., the master's protest made before Her Majesty's Consul for Cuba, September 19, 1861), that this vessel was the property of Mr. Brunose, a British subject, but apparently residing in Louisiana, where he obtained, on purchasing her, from Her Majesty's Consul, a provisional certificate of registry (neither the date of which, nor the previous ownership or nationality of the ship, is given), nor does it appear at what British port her registration was to be completed.

She sailed on the 3rd August, 1861, from Berwick Bay, in Louisiana (forty-five miles south-west of the Bar of the Mississippi, a small port not blockaded, but where there was no United States' Collector of Customs), with a clearance from the Collector of the Customs at Franklin (Louisiana); she had a cargo of rice, and was bound to the Havana.

On the 8th August, in latitude 26° 40′ north, and longitude 87° 7′ west, the United States' ship-of-war "Santee" captured her, for what reason does not appear. She was sent to Key West for adjudication by the United States' Admiralty Court there, by which Court she was restored on the final hearing on the 16th September, 1861, the Judge declaring that "there were no grounds for condemnation as libelled." The United States' District Attorney-General entered an appeal from this sentence to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Nothing is stated as to the grounds of condemnation "libelled," or pressed in argument, or proved, nor as to the result of this appeal; nor does it appear whether the owners of the ship, or of the cargo, were represented in the suit; or if so, whether they applied for costs and damages, and what the Court decided with reference thereto. This application from Messrs. Mc Whan and Flood (a British firm established at New Orleans), the owners of the cargo, is the first application which has been made on the subject, and there is nothing from the owner of the vessel, notwithstanding the lapse of time.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 538, October 7, and No. 557, October 17, 1861; to Lord Lyons, No. 390, November 2, 1861; Lord Lyons, No. 684, November 20, and No. 698, November 25, 1861.

It is obvious that, if the capture of the ship was not unjustifiable, the owner of the cargo cannot claim compensation under the circumstances. It would appear that both the vessel and the cargo were the property of persons domiciled in the Confederate State of Louisiana, and therefore (internationally) "hostile" to the United States, notwithstanding their British origin, and the ship probably obtained her British provisional certificate after the commencement of the existing civil war.

Under these circumstances there would seem, primâ facie, to have been sufficient ground for the capture, quite independently of any question of blockade. By the Prize Law and practice of England, a vessel captured under similar circumstances would not have obtained costs and damages on restoration, even had she been restored upon some grounds not at present appearing in this case.

I must further observe that the papers do not contain any vouchers or particulars as to the amount of loss or damage actually sustained by Messrs. Mc Whan and Flood by reason of the capture; the "account sales" alluded to in their letter is not with the papers, and they do not state, as from themselves and of their own knowledge, that the amount stated by their agents is correct.

At all events, therefore, until these particulars are supplied, and until the circumstances to which I have alluded connected with the proceedings of the Admiralty Court at Key West, are further explained, your Lordship is not in a position to interfere.

The case does not, as it stands, appear a favourable one for the interference of Her Majesty's Government, but much will depend on the proceedings and Judgment, as to which Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Key West should furnish all the information in his power.

Mr. Alcock's circular to Her Majesty's Consuls in Japan relative to the rules and regulations for the peace, order, and good government of British subjects in Japan.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th March instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 26th ultimo* upon the rules and regulations for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects in Japan, issued by Mr. Alcock under the Orders in Council of the 23rd of January, 1860, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the draft of an instruction which was addressed to Mr. Alcock (No. 24, February 26, 1862) founded on our Report, a despatch from that gentleman (No. 109, December 28, 1861) inclosing copies of a circular to Her Majesty's Consuls in Japan, and a correspondence with the United States' Minister, on the subject of those rules and regulations; and to request that we would peruse these further papers and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, in view of them, it is necessary or desirable to address any further instructions to Mr. Alcock.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we see nothing in these papers to alter or affect the contents of our Report of February 26th, and we do not consider that they require the issuing of any further instructions to Mr. Alcock.

The fact that neither the French nor the United States' Consul has issued, or intends to issue, any such rules and regulations, only makes greater care and caution necessary on the part of the British Consul-General as to the substance and the wording of the rules and regulations issued by him.

Doctors' Commons, March 31, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th March instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 21st instant, respecting permits which have been issued by the United States' Government, authorizing trade between the loyal and the seceded States, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, a further despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 158, 10th March, 1862,) inclosing copies of the regulations laid down by the United States' Secretary of the Treasury, concerning the internal trade with the Southern ports.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these rules and regulations do not alter or affect the opinion expressed in our Report of the 25th March. They relate only to internal commercial intercourse between the United States and the Confederate States, and have no reference to maritime intercourse, or blockade.

Capture of the British vessels "Sarah Starr" and "Aigburth" belonging to Mr. C. Graveley, a British subject, residing at Charleston.

Doctors' Commons, March 31, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th March instant, stating that, with reference to that part of my Report of the 12th instant,* respecting the cases of the "Sarah Starr" and Aigburth," in which I stated that the letter from the owners of those vessels, which was forwarded to me in his letter of the 4th instant, did not contain sufficient particulars to enable me to judge of the special grounds on which they were condemned, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 7, January 11), inclosing copies of the decisions of the Prize Court in both of these cases; and to request that I would take these further papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether I see anything in them to alter my previously expressed opinion, and whether I consider that any more information on the subject is required. And he was also pleased to inclose the previous papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Judgment of Judge Betts, reported in the "New York Times" of January 10, 1862, condemning these vessels, confirms the opinion which I expressed in my Report of March 12th instant, and renders any further information unnecessary.

It appears from this Judgment that Mr. Graveley, the claimant of the ship "Sarah Starr," and of the ship "Aigburth" and her cargo, was commercially domiciled in the Confederate States when he purchased both these vessels and the cargo of the "Aigburth" from citizens of those States, their former owners; that, on this ground, both the ships, and the cargo of the "Aigburth," were rightfully condemned as "enemy's property."

This renders the question of the existence of a blockade, and of its breach by these vessels (which was the point on which these cases were at first supposed to depend), no longer material, and there is no ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.

Imprisonment of Mr. R. Maury and Mr. M. F. Maury for carrying letters from persons in Confederate States and their correspondents in the United States.

Doctors' Commons, April 3, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st of April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington relative to the imprisonment in the United States of two British subjects named Mr. Rutson Maury and Mr. Mathew F. Maury, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether any claim for compensation can properly be advanced by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of those gentlemen.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that, having regard to the facts alleged in Mr. Seward's letter to Lord Lyons of December 5, 1861, and to the concluding paragraph of Lord Lyons' No. 738 of December 6, 1861, to your Lordship, your Lordship's question must be answered in the negative.

These gentlemen have been severely and perhaps illegally punished, but this punishment has been inflicted by reason of their having been voluntarily concerned in carrying letters between persons in the Confederate States and their correspondents in the United States and in Europe, and vice versâ, which are alleged to relate (inter alia) to the supply of arms and munitions of war to the Confederates.

They voluntarily undertook to convey these letters at their own risk, and not without some prospect of remuneration. Lord Lyons states that this was a serious infraction of the regulations of the United States' Government, and under such circumstances Her Majesty's Government cannot properly support any claim for compensation on their behalf.

I may add that it does not appear that they have made any such claim.

With respect to the sum of 300 dollars, the property of Mr. Rutson Maury, it appears that this has been legally confiscated, and Mr. Seward states that he cannot interfere in the matter.

Case of the "Labuan," seized at Matamoros while taking on board a cargo of cotton.

Doctors' Commons, April 3, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* respecting the seizure, by the United States' man-of-war "Portsmouth," of the British steamer "Labuan," while taking on board a cargo of cotton at Matamoros. And that we should observe that this case has been already twice reported upon by Her Majesty's Advocate-General; and that an instruction was addressed to Lord Lyons by the mail of Saturday last, in the terms suggested by the Queen's Advocate in his Report of the 27th ultimo.† And that we should further observe that the Board of Admiralty has been requested to instruct Vice-Admiral Milne to provide for the security of British vessels and property at Matamoros, by one or more vessels of war of sufficient strength, against undue interference and molestation on the part of cruizers of the United States. But that the Board of Admiralty have, however, called attention, by their accompanying letter dated the 31st March ultimo, to certain questions that may arise in regard to this matter, viz., as to the right of a United States' cruizer to capture British vessels at Matamoros, either in the river or within the limits of the port; and also as to the alleged claim of the Commander of the "Portsmouth" to arrest "cotton the produce of rebel States," wherever he may find it. And that he was, accordingly, to request that we would take the points adverted to by the Board of Admiralty into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon with reference to the instructions to be addressed to Sir Alexander Milne for the guidance of Her Majesty's naval officers under his orders.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased, on the 1st April instant, to transmit to us a further despatch which has been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington relative to this case (No. 184).

Mr. Hammond was also pleased, on the 2nd April instant, to transmit a further letter (dated the 1st April instant, 1862), which has been received from the owners of the "Labuan."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is not possible for us to anticipate and provide beforehand for all the contingencies which may occur, having regard to the peculiar geographical position of Matamoros.

We can only say, generally, that with regard to British vessels at Matamoros (i. e., vessels in Mexican waters, either on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, the centre of the channel of which we understand to be the boundary between Mexico and Texas), or at sea within three miles of Mexican shore, and to the south of that boundary line when "produced" or extended seawards), such vessels will be absolutely protected from capture under all circumstances. We are not aware of the precise local or municipal limits of "the port of Matamoros;" but whether within such limits or not, all vessels in Mexican (neutral) waters will be internationally exempt from capture, howsoever laden. Whilst, therefore, British vessels in Mexican waters will be absolutely exempt from capture under all circumstances, the position of such vessels, when met with either on the high seas or in Texan waters, with goods on board the produce of Texas, is next to be considered.

The mere circumstance of the cargo of British vessels, wheresoever found, even on the high seas, being (whether composed of cotton or any other article) the growth or produce of Texas, will not of itself expose them to capture, assuming that their papers show that such cargo has been purchased and laden on board at or from a neutral port, and is bonâ fide British or neutral property, and that there is no probable cause for suspecting it to be Texan (or enemy's) property. It is not the origin, but the property or ownership of the cargo, which must determine the question of its liability to capture; and we would add that, even if such cargo were Texan property, the United States' Government having declared their intention of acting during the present war on the principle that the neutral flag shall cover enemy's goods, would not be at liberty to seize goods owned in Texas (not being contraband) on board a British vessel.

With respect to trade with the coast and ports of Texas on the left bank of the Rio Grande, and especially the ports of Brownsville on the Rio Grande, and Brazos Santiago on the coast to the north of the mouth of that river, Her Majesty's Government is not aware, at the date of the latest advices, of any effective blockade thereof having been established; but however this may be, no such blockade can by international law prevent neutrals from trading with the neutral port of Matamoros, or justify United States' cruizers in interrupting such trade.

If any such effective blockade should be established, the ordinary laws and principles of blockade will thereupon apply to all trade with such ports and coast. As regards the possible case of goods conveyed by internal navigation from blockaded ports in Texas to Matamoros, and there purchased and thence exported, we can only refer to the authorities cited by the Queen's Advocate in his Report of March 27th.

Vessels or small craft of any description, owned by persons, of whatever nationality, commercially domiciled in Texas, will be liable to be captured by the United States' cruizers and sent into a convenient port for adjudication, if met with either on the high seas or in Texan waters wheresoever, out of Mexican or other neutral waters, with whatever cargo they may be laden. The cargo, if neutral property, must be claimed in the Prize Court.

Unless, however, in the clearest and most flagrant case of violation of the neutral waters of Mexico by United States' cruizers acting against British vessels we cannot recommend the resort to force by Her Majesty's ships to prevent captures by United States' ships of war.

With reference to the case of the "Labuan" we adhere to the view taken by the Queen's Advocate. Mr. Seward's confidential communication does not appear to us to be by any means satisfactory. Mr. Seward admits (in effect) that the capture was not justifiable; and this being so the original wrong done by such capture is aggravated by the United States' Government persisting in submitting the case to the adjudication of a Prize Court, after and notwithstanding that Mr. Seward has been (confidentially) put in possession of the whole of the case on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and has declined to justify such capture.

The Counsel for the United States' must contend before the Court that the capture was justifiable, notwithstanding Mr. Seward's admission to the contrary; and the result of the suit, both as to the capture and as to the costs and damages, is distant and uncertain, very prejudicial to the interests of the owners, and cannot, under the circumstances, be properly accepted beforehand as binding on Her Majesty's Government.

Collision between a British and a Russian steamer in the Sea of Marmora. Jurisdiction of Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople.

Doctors' Commons, April 3, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a telegram from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople dated the 30th March ultimo, inquiring what course he is to pursue with regard to an application made to him by the Russian Minister at that place, to investigate certain questions connected with a collision between a British and a Russian steamer in the Sea of Marmora, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Sir Henry Bulwer on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That cases of collision between British and foreign vessels within the territorial waters of Turkey must frequently occur, and we presume that although jurisdiction in cases of collision at sea is not expressly conferred upon the Supreme Court by the Order in Council of August 27, 1860, yet that it has and exercises this jurisdiction (see Circular Letter of General Instructions, as to cases of collision, annexed to that Order, p. 7), and by section 13 of the Order "all Her Majesty's jurisdiction, civil and criminal, exerciseable within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte," is vested exclusively in the Court; and by section 26 it has and "may exercise all jurisdiction, power, and authority, legal, equitable, or other, which any Consul of Her Majesty by custom has or may exercise in the dominions of the Porte."

If, therefore, the Russian plaintiff chooses to sue the British defendant in that Court for damages in respect of this collision, we think that the Court will have jurisdiction; and we are of opinion that Sir H. Bulwer has taken a correct view of this point.

With respect to the resort to a "Mixed Commission" proposed by the Russian Envoy, we are not informed as to their peculiar jurisdiction in Turkey where foreigners are plaintiffs and British subjects are defendants, and in cases in which the Supreme Court has jurisdiction.*

---

* See Consular Letter of Instructions, p. 22.

With respect to the charge against the British master of not doing his utmost to save the Russian passengers, but leaving them to perish, we are not aware of any Court which can investigate such a charge with effect, or can punish the Master if guilty.

The Supreme Court has no such jurisdiction, inasmuch as such conduct as imputed to the master would not, by a Court of Justice having criminal jurisdiction in England, be deemed to be "a crime or offence rendering him amenable to punishment in England," under section 6 of the Order in Council, however morally censurable it may be, and we cannot see how the Consul-General and the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Wanderer," or any similarly constituted Court, could do anything effectual in the matter. Any such inquiry must be considered as extra-judicial. We would accordingly suggest that Sir H. Bulwer may be instructed to this effect.

As to compensation to be demanded for imprisonment of Mr. J. C. Brain at Fort Lafayette.

Doctors' Commons, April 5, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 66, November 18, 1861, and No. 162, March 10, 1862), reporting the circumstances under which Mr. John C. Brain, a British subject, has been arrested by the United States' authorities and imprisoned at Fort Lafayette, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether any claim to compensation can properly be advanced on Mr. Brain's behalf.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the question whether any claim for compensation can properly be advanced on Mr. Brain's behalf appears to depend upon the substantial truth or falsehood of the charges made against him in Mr. Seward's despatch to Lord Lyons of November 13, 1861, viz., "that he is a member of the secret treasonable association called the 'Knights of the Golden Circle;' that he held a commission in the insurgent service; that he had been engaged in buying arms and munitions of war for the rebels, and in conveying such arms to them." If there should be reasonable ground for any one of these charges, it will be useless for Her Majesty's Government to demand compensation. He asserts his entire innocence, and says that "there was no proof to sustain any of these charges."

This case differs in some degree from most of the others of the same class which have occurred, inasmuch as these charges, or some of them, were distinctly brought against him on his arrest in August 1861, at La Porte, in Indiana, when he was taken before some Court or Magistrate, and in the ordinary course of law, after some investigation or hearing, was committed for trial before some Municipal Court, in default of bail. It is apparent that there must have been some evidence adduced to support the charges then made; and this, indeed, would appear to have been the fact from his statement to Consul Archibald (as given in that gentleman's letter to Lord Lyons of October 29, 1861), as to the evidence of Major Mahon, which he declares to have been contrary to the facts.

After remaining a month in the prison at La Porte, under this committal, expecting his trial, he was removed by order of the Secretary of State, handcuffed and fettered, to Fort Lafayette, where he suffered a long imprisonment. He has been detained for six months in all, and released in a state of destitution; a sum of 220 dollars, his only available means, having been taken from him on his arrest by a private soldier by order of a military officer of the United States, as to which an inquiry is pending. His treatment appears to have been very cruel and unjustifiable; having been committed for trial on certain definite charges in Indiana, where the ordinary course of law was not suspended by the civil war, he should have been tried thereon in due course of law, and not arbitrarily removed to, and imprisoned in, Fort Lafayette.

Mr. Brain, however, in his letter to Consul Archibald of October 4, 1861, admits that "he signed the roll of a company of State Guards in Kentucky, which he believes has never been organized." If the fact is (as I apprehend) established by his own admission that, after the commencement of the civil war, he enlisted himself in a military corps which was designed to act in support of the Confederate Government against that of the United States, Her Majesty's Government cannot, in my opinion, fairly sustain a claim for compensation on his account upon the Government of the United States.

He has gone to Canada; and there is at present no statement from him but his letter of October 4, 1861, to Consul Archibald, in which he asks for the "restoration of his money and liberty," but not for compensation; and his letter of February 14, 1862, to Lord Lyons, in which he only asks again about his money, and I do not find that he has made any claim for compensation. In this state of things I cannot, therefore, advise Her Majesty's Government to make any claim for compensation on his behalf. The inquiry as to the money taken from him on his arrest will of course proceed.

Seizure of the "Empress" by blockading squadron off the Mississippi.

Doctors' Commons, April 8, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th April instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 30th January ultimo,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers,† a despatch from Lord Lyons,‡ inclosing copies of a report respecting the case of the "Empress," received from Her Majesty's Consul at New York, and the extended protest made by the master of that vessel on the 3rd of February last; and to request that I would take these papers into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as I might have to offer upon the facts which they disclose.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the only important new fact appearing in the master's protest is the statement therein that on the 19th or 20th November (seven days before her capture aground at the mouth of the Mississippi), the "Empress" spoke the American barque "Ellen Morrison," of New York, which vessel had heard there was a blockade of New Orleans. No particulars are given of the place where the "Ellen Morrison" was spoken with, the port from which she had sailed, or the date or place or manner of her having heard that the blockade existed. The importance of the particulars thus withheld to the interests of the owners is apparent; and the fact, as it stands, is obviously unfavourable to them.

The case is duly proceeding before the Prize Court, before which the interests of all concerned are duly represented; and Consul Archibald reports on March 13th, that "the evidence has all been taken, and the case stands for a hearing at an early day." He further states that "Mr. Gerard, a gentleman sent out from England by the owners of the ship, has arrived, and is giving his attention to their interests; that the master is in daily attendance at his office; and that he (the Consul) has omitted nothing which in the course of the proceedings it appeared to him could on his part be done to protect the rights of the owners."

Under these circumstances Her Majesty's Government cannot at present

Claim of Directors of Bank of Tunis against the Bey of Tunis.

Doctors' Commons, April 8, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th March, stating that with reference to the Queen's Advocate's Report of the 29th September, 1860, inclosed therewith, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, a letter from the Directors of the Bank of Tunis, again calling upon Her Majesty's Government to support their claim against the Bey of that Regency, arising out of his alleged refusal to carry out his engagements connected with the formation of the above-named Bank.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Mr. Wood, Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis, replying to the statements and allegations contained in the Director's letter, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government to take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to take any steps for the purpose of enforcing the claims made by the Directors of the Bank of Tunis upon the Tunisian Government. The Bank, proposed to be founded under the "Statutes" (both as originally framed by the Directors, and as afterwards varied from time to time), appears to us to have been an establishment of a different character from that contemplated by the "Concession," both according to its natural and fair construction, and as it must be presumed to have been understood by the Tunisian Government. The "Concession" had in view a Bank, subject, as to its general operations, to an effective superintendence on the part of the Tunisian Government. The "Statutes" (and no one can be surprised that it should be so, having regard to the security of the English capital embarked in the undertaking), would have had the effect of practically excluding any such effective superintendence. We think it extremely probable, and indeed almost certain, that the parties never well understood each other upon this essential point. The Tunisian Government would plainly have waived every other objection, if they could have secured this effective superintendence in any shape satisfactory to themselves. But we see no reason for supposing that they ever meant to waive this point, or that the Directors ever meant to concede it. Under these circumstances, we think that the terms of the "Concession" were virtually set aside, and were treated as insufficient or impracticable by the Directors; and that the Treaty as to the "Statutes" really proceeded on that footing, but without ever arriving at any practical result. We understand that the Tunisian Government offers now to pay 800*l*., so that it is not necessary to inquire whether they are strictly bound to do so; but we are at all events, unable to come to the conclusion that they are under any obligation to do more, and we see no ground whatever for imputing to them any breach of faith.

Conveyance of goods or merchandize to Hong Kong by a Spanish vessel of war.

Question as to extent to which the commercial character of the vessel affects its immunities and privileges as a ship of war.

Doctors' Commons, April 8, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th of March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 21st March ultimo, and its inclosures, received from the Colonial Office, respecting a question which had arisen at Hong Kong with reference to a Spanish vessel of war which had been engaged in conveying goods or merchandize to that Colony, and requesting that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we concur in the opinions which Sir Hercules Robinson has expressed as to the extent to which the commercial character of the vessel in question affects its immunities and privileges as a ship of war; and also as to the liability of the captain to be sued under the circumstances set forth in the inclosed correspondence.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we observe that the legal proceedings in this case commenced against the captain are stated by Sir H. Robinson to have been "amicably settled," and they appear to have originated in the agent (Mr. Reynolds) not only declining "either to make good the damage, or to answer in respect of the claim in Court, but referring Mr. Cecil (the Plaintiff) to the captain of the 'Malespina' as the only responsible person." The particular question, therefore, has been settled; the general principle involved is one of some legal nicety.

With respect to the liability of the captain to be sued in a Colonial Court, and to be served with process "if found in any portion of Hong Kong or its waters beyond the limits of his vessel," we concur with the opinion expressed by Sir H. Robinson. With respect to his liability to be served with such process, when on board his ship, or to the liability of the ship herself to any process, we are unable to concur with him.

The better opinion of jurists and the usual practice of nations appears to be that foreign ships of war in the ports or territorial waters of a country should be considered and treated as extra-territorial in relation to that country; and that, consequently, neither the ships themselves nor those actually on board of them, should be considered as being within the local jurisdiction. Although this concession has been made on the supposition that such ships and persons do not engage in any commercial operations, yet we cannot say that the fact of their doing so to a limited extent, as under the circumstances stated in this case, would of itself change their character or render them amenable to the local jurisdiction, a conclusion which would be attended with very inconvenient consequences to all concerned.

Sir H. Robinson has no power to interfere with the action of any Colonial Court, and the party sued or served with process must appear and raise any legal defence which may be competent to him. It must be borne in mind, however, that no process of the Court can be put in force against either person or goods on board the ship of war.

Sir H. Robinson's suggestion that the Spanish authorities should appoint an agent as the only responsible person in relation to the packets in question appears reasonable, but this appointment would not settle the international question involved.

We can only suggest that in case of any serious difficulty arising from the service of process at Hong Kong against a foreign naval officer on board a foreign ship of war, Sir H. Robinson would be authorized, in the exercise of his discretion, to direct the Crown Solicitor to appear and require the discharge of the officer or the ship as the case may be, as recommended by the Law Officers in their Report of April 24, 1860, on the case of an officer of the Sardinian frigate "Beroldo," served with a summons from the County Court of Bow.

PERU.

Claim of Mr. Barry Brown for interest on 5,000 dollars paid by Peruvian Government, as well as for payment of his expenses.

Doctors' Commons, April 10, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th April instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 17th August, 1860, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a despatch, and its inclosures, from the Acting British Chargé d'Affaires at Lima (No. 24, 28th February, 1862), and from which, he stated, it appeared that the Peruvian Government declined to allow interest on the sum of 5,000 dollars which they have paid on account of Mr. Barry Brown's claim; and to request that I would take these papers into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Mr. Barton should be instructed to continue to press for payment of interest on this claim.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that I should observe from Mr. Brown's letter to Mr. Barton of the 13th of September, that he adheres to his claim for "expenses;" and that he was to request that I would also inform your Lordship whether there is anything contained in Mr. Brown's letter which would induce me to alter my previous opinion on this point.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that Mr. Barton should be instructed to continue to press for payment of interest on the sum of 5,000 dollars paid by the Peruvian Government on account of the claim.

The unreasonable procrastination of the Peruvian Government in settling this claim (the validity of which was formally and conclusively admitted by a Government "Resolution" of the 23rd May, 1857) is apparent throughout the papers. The despatch of Mr. Jerningham to your Lordship No. 128 of the 26th December, 1859, exhibits in a striking manner what he justly calls "its dilatory and reprehensible way of proceeding."

Even as to the interest now in question, it appears that Mr. Jerningham's official note to the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs of the 25th June, 1860, in which it was expressly demanded, did not receive any answer until the 20th February, 1862, although Mr. Barton had requested an answer to that note on the 18th September, 1861.

The refusal to pay any interest contained in the above-mentioned note of Señor Ribeiro (20th February, 1862) appears to me to rest on no sufficient foundation; it is grounded merely upon the argument that the existing Peruvian Government does not consider Mr. Brown to have had any valid claim upon it, and that it paid the 5,000 dollars "only as a proof of deference, but never as a recognized obligation." This argument has no foundation either in the facts of this case, or the principles of international law. The Peruvian Government in 1857 formally admitted the validity of the claim; the only question which has since remained open, was the amount of compensation which Mr. Brown was entitled to receive.

The formal recognition by a Government of any State of the validity of a claim made against it internationally by another State, through its Legation, binds the State and all succeeding Governments by way of obligation, and gives the claimant a complete "title," which cannot be affected by the opinion which a subsequent Government may form of such claim, which it cannot (internationally) "repudiate."

The foundation of this claim is a recognized international obligation, binding on the Republic of Peru, and the declaration of the present Government that it has paid the money as a proof of deference, and not as a recognized obligation, cannot have any international effect, or alter the character of the obligation.

I may add (confidentially) that neither Mr. Brown nor Her Majesty's Government is in any degree responsible for the scandalous delay which has occurred in settling this small and simple case, for which the Peruvian Government is solely to blame; and that unless interest is paid, the unreasonable procrastination on the part of Peru which has been apparent throughout this protracted discussion, extending over a period of six years, will operate entirely to the pecuniary advantage of that State, and to the private injury of Mr. Brown, and will offer great encouragement to similar unreasonable delay in future cases. If the Peruvian Government had paid the principal sum as soon as the amount was ascertained and determined, no interest would have accrued; but, inasmuch as the delay in payment was solely the fault of the Government, it is clearly liable to pay interest upon the amount so retained by it, after it was due to Mr. Brown.

As regards Mr. Brown's claim for expenses, I cannot see any sufficient reason for altering my opinion.

I ought, perhaps, to add, that I cannot find with the papers his letter of June 27, 1860, to which he now refers; but I fear that even if his complaints of Mr. Jerningham's mismanagement of his case should be well founded, Her Majesty's Government cannot, after what has passed, properly re-open the whole case, or treat it as still unsettled ab initio. It can in my opinion now only insist upon the payment of interest on the 5,000 dollars.

Outrage on property of Mr. Lilley, a British subject trading in the Cameroons River.

Doctors' Commons, April 10, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 5th April instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 24th of October ultimo,* expressing my opinion that it would be inexpedient to comply with the request of Mr. Hawker to be furnished with copies of documents in the possession of Her Majesty's Government, relating to an outrage committed on Mr. Lilley's property in the Cameroons River, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further letter from Mr. Hawker renewing his request, on the ground that he is instructed to commence legal proceedings, and is referred for evidence to the papers in question; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be given to Mr. Hawker. And he was also pleased to inclose the former papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I see no reason to alter my former opinion, that your Lordship cannot properly be advised to comply with Mr. Hawker's request.

Mr. Hawker, in his first application of October 18, 1861, did not allude to any intention of making Mr. Sill legally liable to Mr. Lilley in relation to these occurrences; he alluded only to Mr. John S. Brunn. He now suggests that this person was the agent of Mr. Sill, and that in effect Mr. Sill is legally liable to Mr. Lilley in respect to Mr. Brunn's acts in Africa. Mr. Brunn was on the spot, and attended at the inquiry, and was implicated in the proceedings. Mr. Lilley preferred charges against him which he promised to meet before the Consul at Fernando Po: but Mr. Sill was not there; he was no party to, nor was he cognizant of, the proceedings of the (so-called) "Court of Inquiry" at Cameroons.

Mr. Lilley himself does not appear to have made any application to your Lordship in this matter.

I see nothing in these papers to establish Mr. Sill's liability to Mr. Lilley in respect of the acts of Mr. Brunn; and, however this may be, I see no sufficient reason why your Lordship should assist Mr. Lilley in making out his case against Mr. Sill, by furnishing copies of official papers.

Mr. Hawker is not a solicitor; he does not state that he is legally advised that copies of the papers in question are necessary for the purposes of justice, and no legal proceedings have as yet been commenced on behalf of Mr. Lilley against Mr. Sill; and under these circumstances he is not, in my opinion, entitled to have copies of the proceedings and letters in question.

I have, &c.

Claim of Messrs. Isaac, Campbell, and Co., to cargo of the "Stephen Hart," seized by blockading squadron off Florida.

Doctors' Commons, April 11, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 204, March 24), respecting the case of the schooner "Stephen Hart," which formed the subject of my Report of the 28th ultimo.* And he also stated that some of the points on which I suggested that information should be sought from Messrs. Isaac, Campbell, and Co., seem to be set at rest by the papers transmitted by Her Majesty's Minister, who, though doubtful as to the legality of the capture of the "Stephen Hart," has not thought it necessary to interfere on her behalf; and to request that I would again take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the papers now transmitted confirm the suspicions which I have expressed in my previous Report, and are conclusive as to the impropriety of any intervention, at present, on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Inasmuch, however, as the case may not be terminated by the decision of the Prize Court, and may lead to further correspondence, I venture to repeat my suggestion that Consul Crawford should report fully thereon.

The application of Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell, and Co. may, if it has not already been answered, now be answered to the effect that your Lordship is informed that the "Stephen Hart" was recently purchased at Charleston from some Confederate owner; that she had a cargo, contraband of war, and was consigned to Mr. Helm at Havana, a citizen of the United States, who is a partisan of the Confederate States; that none of these matters are explained in their letter, and that your Lordship requests full information on these subjects, and a candid explanation of the ultimate destination and design of both the ship and the cargo, and on whose credit or account such cargo was shipped; and that, at present, your Lordship cannot make any application to the Government of the United States in this matter.

Case of the "Labuan." Compensation granted to owners of a Spanish and Danish vessel.

Doctors' Commons, April 11, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th April instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 3rd instant† upon the case of the "Labuan," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 203, March 24), inclosing copies of two Messages of the President to Congress, recommending the payment of compensation to the respective owners of a Spanish and Danish vessel on account of their illegal seizure by vessels of the United States' blockading squadron, and Her Majesty's Minister observed that in each of these cases the vessel was released without judicial proceedings; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon, with reference to the course pursued by the United States' Government in the case of the "Labuan."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these papers show that the Government of the United States in two cases of unjustifiable captures of neutral merchant-ships by its naval officer (in addition to the case of the "Perthshire"), has not only released such vessels without sending them before a Prize Court, but has also consented to pay compensation to those interested therein, the amount of which has been either settled by arbitration, or paid as demanded.

It appears to us that a similar course should have been adopted in the case of the "Labuan," and that the Government of the United States (for the reasons adverted to in our former Reports) ought not to persist in leaving this case to the adjudication of the Prize Court.

The possible amount of the damages claimed cannot effect the international question of the validity of the capture; and, unless the Government of the United States is prepared to maintain, at least, the primâ facie validity thereof (which it is not), it has not any sufficient justification, internationally, in retaining wrongful possession of the ship and cargo, and sending them for adjudication before the Prize Court, after and notwithstanding the formal intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

Claim of Messrs. Armstrong and Gerard for losses sustained by the "Alliance" being warned off the port of Charleston in May 1861.

Doctors' Commons, April 12, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th April instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 20th of November ultimo,* upon the case of the "Alliance" and "Gondar," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the former papers,† a letter from Mr. Reed, inclosing a petition, dated the 2nd April instant, from Messrs. Armstrong and Gerard, the owners of the "Alliance," requesting Her Majesty's Government to give their support to a claim preferred by them against the United States' Government, on account of losses sustained in consequence of the "Alliance" having been warned off the port of Charleston by one of the United States' cruizers, in May last, at a time when it is stated that no efficient blockade of that place was in operation; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether this claim is one which Her Majesty, Minister at Washington might properly be instructed to bring before the United States' Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that your Lordship's question must be answered in the affirmative.

It appears that the "Alliance" left Newport, in England, on the 14th April, 1861, when she could have had no knowledge of any blockade, and that on the 28th May following she was boarded by a United States' naval officer, of the United States' steamer "Union," and informed of the existing blockade "of all the coast of the United States south of Maryland," and her manifest endorsed accordingly.

I gather from Consul Bunch's despatch No. 25 of June 12th (p. 16, Printed papers relating to the Blockade, presented to Parliament), that the blockade of Charleston, which had been commenced on May 11th by the "Niagara," and interrupted from the 15th to the 28th May by her departure, was resumed by the "Minnesota" on the 28th or 29th, and in this respect the fact may be open to discussion, notwithstanding the owner's representations to the contrary.

However this may have been, the notification was, in my opinion, of no effect against the "Alliance," being more extensive than the blockade itself

If the notification had been true in fact, the "Alliance" would have been liable to capture for proceeding in disregard of it, which risk she was not called on to incur, and the United States' Government must be held responsible for the act of its naval officers.

I would beg to refer to the Reports of the Law Officers on the "Monmouth," 17th February, and "Boyne," 13th March ultimo, as illustrating the principle in question.

I do not consider that the subsequent proceedings of the "Alliance" on a different voyage, adverted to in my Report of November 20, 1861,* can affect this claim.

Search of the "Marie Louise," of Quebec, at Paimbœuf, on suspicion of French deserters being on board.

Doctors' Commons, April 16, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th of April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft of a despatch which, upon the receipt of our Report of the 30th of January last,† your Lordship addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, instructing him to procure the further information requested by us to enable us to report more fully upon the question of the arrest at Painbœuf of part of the crew of the British barque "Marie Louise," of Quebec, on the charge of their being French deserters.

He also inclosed Earl Cowley's despatch, containing such additional information as he had been able to obtain in this matter, and requested that we would again take this case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our observations as to the bearing of Treaties on the facts as they are now stated.

Mr. Hammond further stated that the declaration of the captain and a portion of the crew of the "Marie Louise," mentioned as being inclosed in Lord Cowley's despatch, did not appear to be forthcoming; but as it is referred to by Mr. Consul Curtis as fully confirming the statements made in his communication of the 21st of January to Lord Cowley (being the inclosure of his Excellency's despatch No. 76), it might not be material in enabling us to reply to the present reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the declaration of the master and a portion of the crew (mentioned as being inclosed in Lord Cowley's despatch) not being forthcoming, the Consul's letter of March 22 containing no additional particulars of the facts and circumstances, his letter to the Commissary-General of Marine of March 5 containing no particulars as to names and circumstances, and that officer having only replied to it verbally, we are still without any such "full statement of the grounds as to each of the persons detained or apprehended on which the French authorities acted, and seek to justify what they have done," as we requested in our Report of the 30th January last.

The Consul does not appear to have represented the circumstances of the case, as they came before him, fully to the French authorities on the spot, as we suggested; nor do the French authorities appear to have distinguished between the French and British seamen arrested, to which material distinction their attention has not been called.

Subject to these observations, we can only say, at present, that we cannot see any sufficient justification for the treatment to which Francis Roberts, Walter Aylward, and Sanchez, a Spaniard, were subjected. Primâ facie, they could not be "French deserters," and there does not appear to have been any definite charge or proof against them of any offence against French law committed within French jurisdiction.

If it is the fact (as it seems to be) that the other seamen arrested were French subjects, and that evidence was adduced of their having deserted from French ships at Monte Video in 1850, and at Cardiff, at some date not given, we are of opinion that their arrest was legal; assuming (as we do) that they were punishable by French law for such desertion, notwithstanding the great lapse of time which, in one of the two cases, had taken place.

Under these circumstances, we would suggest that, inasmuch as the principle involved is of great importance, the cases of Roberts, Aylward, and Sanchez should be followed up, and distinct explanations required, in writing, as to the grounds for the treatment which each of them received.

We would also suggest that it would be very convenient if, when French authorities receive information which induces them to search British vessels lying in French ports, with a view to the arrest of any persons on board, whether as deserters or otherwise, and more especially where the persons in question form part of the crew which have entered such port in the vessel, and are suspected of being French deserters, they would previously communicate with the British Consul, and give him the opportunity of accompanying them on board, with the view of avoiding, as far as possible, any mistakes or international difficulties on the subject.

Restriction on the free sale of charcoal imported into Constantinople by Ionian, Demetrio Antippa.

Doctors' Commons, April 23, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th April instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 25th of January ultimo,* relative to the restriction placed by the Prefect of Constantinople on the free sale of charcoal imported into that capital by an Ionian named Demetrio Antippa, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying instructions, which were addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador and Her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople upon that subject, together with a despatch which had been received from Sir Henry Bulwer in reply;† and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the information given in Sir H. Bulwer's despatch of the 19th March, entirely alters the character of the question raised by Consul Cumberbatch. Sir H. Bulwer does not transmit any copy of the regulations of the Ottoman Government to which he refers, but he states its effect to be, to establish "a general rule, applicable to all persons, Ottoman subjects and others, with respect to an article of internal commerce." Assuming this representation to be correct, we agree with Sir H. Bulwer that such a regulation is one which, however impolitic, it is competent to the Porte to make; and that the only right which our Treaties give us, so far as relates to the internal trade of Turkey, is to enjoy that trade on the same terms as Ottoman subjects. If, therefore, the restriction placed by the Prefect at Constantinople upon the free sale of charcoal imported into that capital by Demetrio Antippa was (as we understand Sir H. Bulwer to state) not an arbitrary interference with the trade of one individual, but only a particular instance of the operation of a general law of the Ottoman Empire, we think Her Majesty's Government can do nothing more than use its influence to obtain the repeal or relaxation of so unwise a law.

The question is one of great importance in point of principle, inasmuch as it involves the right of the Turkish Government to fix and alter from time to time, at its discretion, the price at which all articles of Turkish produce may be sold within its dominions; and it may therefore be desirable that we should see a copy of the regulation, and be furnished with a reference to any Treaty stipulations which may be supposed to bear upon the subject.

Right claimed by the Porte to expel foreign lightermen and boatmen from the port of Constantinople without the intervention of a Mixed Court.

Doctors' Commons, April 25, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an instruction which was addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 252, April 25, 1861) on the receipt of the Queen's Advocate's Report of the 12th of April, 1861,* respecting the regulations proposed to be put in force by the Porte for the government of foreign lightermen and boatmen at Constantinople, together with the correspondence which had since taken place on the subject.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should perceive from Sir Henry Bulwer's last despatch (No. 144) that his Excellency applies for further instructions with regard to the right claimed by the Porte to expel such foreign lightermen and boatmen by its own authority, and by means of a decision come to without the intervention of a Mixed Court, from the "Esnaf" or Corporation in which they will have to be enrolled in order to carry on those occupations; and to request that we would take these matters into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Sir Henry Bulwer has taken a correct view of this question; and that the Turkish authorities are entitled to decide for themselves, without the intervention of any British authority, whether British subjects or persons under British protection have violated any regulation or bye-law of a Turkish Corporation of which they may be members, and whether they are liable to expulsion therefrom, or to withdrawal of a license to exercise the particular trade or occupation requiring such license. Expulsion from such a Corporation, or withdrawal of such a license, is, in our opinion, a penalty which may be lawfully inflicted by the Turkish authorities upon such persons without the assent or intervention of any British authority.

The fact that persons under British protection are members of a Turkish Corporation, or have a Turkish license to exercise any particular trade or occupation, will not, of course, justify the infliction of any punishment on them other than a reasonable fine in accordance with general regulations applicable to all persons in the same condition and circumstances, or expulsion from the Corporation, otherwise than as in ordinary cases, and in accordance with the existing Treaties and Capitulations for the equal treatment of British and Ottoman subjects. They will not thereby forfeit their British privileges generally, or be in any other respect subject to Turkish authority.

Application of Russian Ambassador to British Judge of Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople to act as Umpire in cases of differences between members of Russo-Turkish Mixed Commission.

Doctors' Commons, April 26, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 21), stating that he has acceded to an application made to him by the Russian Ambassador in that capital, requesting him to act as Umpire in cases in which the Mixed Ottoman and Russian Commission cannot come to an agreement; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether we see any objection to this arrangement.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear that any international Convention exists between Russia and Turkey on the subject in question; or that the Turkish Government has acceded or will accede to the selection of Sir E. Hornby as Arbitrator in cases of differences of opinion between the members of the Russo-Turkish Mixed Commission. Any effectual umpirage of Sir E. Hornby must, of course, be based on the express consent of each of the two Governments; and in the absence of such full consents, Sir E. Hornby ought not to interfere.

Subject to these observations, and as the case is actually presented to us, we see no legal objection to Sir E. Hornby's having acceded to Prince Lobanow's request.

Collision between British steamer "Laconia" and Russian steamer "Colchide."

Doctors' Commons, April 26, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th April instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 3rd instant,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Ambassador (No. 160), and Her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople (Nos. 15 and 16), containing further information respecting the recent collision between the British steamer "Laconia" and the Russian steamer "Colchide" in the Sea of Marmora, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether the further statements therein contained induced us to alter the opinion expressed in our above-mentioned Report.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the papers now transmitted do not alter or affect the opinion which we have expressed in our former Report.

There does not appear to us to exist any tribunal having jurisdiction to inquire judicially, or to decide upon the charge against the master of the "Laconia;" and any extra-judicial inquiry or examination into the truth of this charge would be unsatisfactory and nugatory, and might (as Sir E. Hornby remarks) tend to prejudice the case when brought before the Supreme Consular Court, or any other legal tribunal.

Request of Porte to prevent the distribution at Constantinople of Greek newspaper "British Star," published in London.

Doctors' Commons, April 26, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a telegram, dated the 18th April instant, which your Lordship had received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, stating that the Porte had requested him to prevent the distribution by the British Post Office in that city, of a Greek newspaper called the "British Star," published in London, on the ground that this journal incites to revolt against the Government and laws of Turkey. And he was also pleased to inclose a letter from the Post Office stating, in reply to an inquiry made by your Lordship, the measures which the Postmaster-General is prepared to adopt in order to meet the wishes of the Porte, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government would be justified in taking in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the setting up and existence of a British Post Office at Constantinople being, as we understand, a matter of mere "permission" on the part of the Turkish Government and not of Treaty stipulation, the rights (if such they can be called), both of the British Government and of British subjects in that respect are of such a very precarious character, and very far from such as can be insisted on against the reasonable wishes of the Porte: we therefore think that the Postmaster-General, with the sanction of the Government, would be perfectly justified in directing the British Postmaster at Constantinople, under the circumstances, to stop the papers in question. The persons transmitting such papers must be taken to have known the footing of the British Post-office establishment at Constantinople, and the consequent risk to which the delivery of the particular papers was, or might be, subject; and Her Majesty's Government cannot, it appears to us, urge any fair complaint against the request of the Porte described in the telegram of Sir H. Bulwer.

Whether the papers in question should be merely "stopped," or should (as suggested in the letter from the Post Office), be handed over "to an officer appointed by the Porte to receive them," is a question of policy. The obvious advantage of merely withholding the papers would be, that no means of proof or accusation against particular individuals to whom such papers might happen to be addressed, would thus be furnished. Possibly, the Turkish Government would not require more than the stopping of the papers; and we do not think that they could, in reason or in law, insist on the papers being delivered to their officer.

Request of Mr. Blagomerio, a naturalized British subject, that unofficial assistance be afforded him in the recovery of certain property.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence* which had passed between the Foreign Office and Mr. Blagomerio, a naturalized British subject, relative to a request made by him that Her Majesty's Government should instruct Her Majesty's Ambassador and the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople to afford him unofficial assistance in the recovery of certain property, and requested that we would take these papers into consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Mr. Blagomerio's request might be complied with.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

Application for restoration to United States' Government of the "Emily St. Pierre," captured for breach of blockade, but subsequently retaken by the master and brought to Liverpool.

Doctors' Commons, April 28, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying letter, dated the 24th April instant, from Mr. Adams, the United States' Minister at this Court, applying for the restoration to the United States' Government of the "Emily St. Pierre," a vessel which was captured by one of the United States' cruizers for an alleged breach of blockade, but subsequently retaken by the master and brought to Liverpool. And he was also pleased to inclose a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 38), containing further particulars respecting this case, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion, at our earliest convenience, as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Adams.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That an answer may be returned to Mr. Adams to the effect that Her Majesty's Government is unable to comply with his request for the restoration of the "Emily St. Pierre," having no jurisdiction or legal power whatever to take or acquire possession of her, or to interfere with her owners in relation to their property in her.

Acts of forcible resistance to the rights of belligerents, when lawfully exercised over neutral merchant-ships on the high seas (such as rescue from capture), however cognizable and punishable, as offences against international law, in Prize Courts of the captor administering such law, are not cognizable by the Municipal law of England, and cannot, by that law, be punished either by confiscation of the ship or by any other penalty, and Her Majesty's Government cannot raise, in an English Court, the question of the validity of this capture, or of the ensuing rescue or recapture; such recapture is not an offence against Municipal law, and Her Majesty's Government has no power to take any proceedings against the ship in relation thereto.

The Consul at New York should send the mate to England.

Liability of United States' Government to pay compensation in the case of the "Monmouth," warned off the Southern Coast of United States.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th April instant, stating that with reference to the opinions given by us on the 30th of October and the 17th of February ultimo,* on the case of the British vessel "Monmouth," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers,† a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,‡ inclosing a further reply from Mr. Seward contesting the liability of the United States' Government to pay compensation in that case; and to request that we would take Mr. Seward's reply into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Seward's note of the 24th March, 1862, contains nothing to alter or affect our opinion on this case, and does not, in our opinion, adduce anything relevant or material in answer to the demand of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Seward's reasoning appears to assume, that a notification given at Charleston that the whole coast of certain States was blockaded could not be operative (even if the fact had been so), except as notice of a blockade of the particular port of Charleston. If this assumption (which seems to us clearly erroneous) were not made, the fact would appear simply to be, that the "Monmouth" was warned off the port of Savannah, when that port was not blockaded, and she was thus prevented from accomplishing a lawful voyage by the wrongful act of an officer of the United States, which is adopted and justified by that Government; for the consequences of such an act the United States' Government is clearly responsible internationally.

Mr. Seward asserts that if she had, in disregard of the notification, proceeded on her voyage to Savannah, she would, if captured, have been restored by a Prize Court; but she was not called on to incur this risk.

The United States' Government cannot properly maintain that its officers may notify a blockade which does not exist, and that neutral vessels relying on such notification, and acting in obedience thereto, are not entitled to compensation for the wrongful interruption of a lawful voyage.

Jurisdiction of British Consular Court at Constantinople. Collision between Her Majesty's gun-vessel "Weser" and the Russian ship "Amalia."

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Sir Edmund Hornby, Judge of the Supreme Court at Constantinople (No 29, April 7th) inquiring with reference to the collision between Her Majesty's gun-vessel "Weser" and the Russian ship "Amalia," whether it is competent for that Court to decide the case.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter from the Admiralty, dated the 19th April instant (to which Department your Lordship caused Sir E. Hornby's despatch to be referred), inclosing a copy of a Report from the Admiralty Advocate on the subject; and to request that we would take the accompanying papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the answer which it may be proper to give to Sir Edmund Hornby.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Her Majesty's ships are only subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty in cases of collision, whether with foreign or with British vessels, by reason of the consent of the Crown to the exercise of such jurisdiction over them, expressed through the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, on application from the plaintiff; which consent is always given in such cases. Without such consent neither that Court nor any Consular Court in Turkey can exercise Admiralty jurisdiction over them, as, by arrest of the ship, and so forth. Whether such Consular Courts have (strictly speaking) Admiralty jurisdiction "by custom," we are unable to say; but adverting to page 7 of the Circular Letter of General Instructions issued by the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court, with the Order in Council of August 27, 1860, and to what appears in regard to the recent collision between the "Laconia" and "Colchide" reported on by us on the 3rd April,* we presume that the Consular Courts have, "by custom," some kind of jurisdiction, in cases of collisions at sea, occurring within their local limits.

To the exercise of this jurisdiction in the case of Her Majesty's ships of war, we think the consent of the Crown will be practically necessary; and we recommend that it should be given in this case. Under these circumstances, it appears to us that Consul Ward of Galatz (within the local limits of whose jurisdiction we assume that the collision occurred) will have jurisdiction over a suit duly instituted before him by the Russian Plaintiffs against the Captain of Her Majesty's ship "Weser."

We observe that a suit is stated by Sir E. Hornby to have been commenced in Consul Ward's Court; and adverting to the agreement stated by Sir E. Hornby to have been entered into by Consul Ward "in concert with the Russian authorities," that the case shall be tried before the Supreme Court, we would suggest that this agreement may properly be carried out under the 18th section of the Order in Council, by Consul Ward reporting the pending action, and Sir E. Hornby "ordering it to be heard and determined" before himself at Constantinople.

The consent of the Crown to this course of proceeding should be signified to the Captain of the "Weser" through the Admiralty, and he should be instructed to appear to the suit, and not to dispute his personal responsibility for the consequences of the negligent or improper management of the ship, if such negligence be proved.

With reference to the suggestion of the Admiralty Advocate that a suit should be instituted by the Russian Plaintiff in the High Court of Admiralty here, and the cause be tried in that Court, we do not see how this can be reconciled with the agreement stated to have been entered into by Consul Ward "in concert with the Russian authorities" for the trial of the cause in the Supreme Consular Court; and we consider that the practical result of such a course might be onerous to the Russian Plaintiff.

Sir E. Hornby may be informed that Consular Courts have no jurisdiction over Her Majesty's vessels of war, or over the officers on board such ships, when on service, and in the discharge of their duty; but that any difficulty arising therefrom may be removed by Her Majesty's instructions to such officers.

Claim of D. Charlton (alias John Bull, alias Francis Cox) for interference of British Government to obtain release of his wife and children from slavery, as British subjects.

Doctors' Commons, April 29, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th April instant, stating that with reference to my Report of December 3rd ultimo,* in which I suggested that a thorough investigation should be made by the Attorney-General at Nassau into the case of the wife and children of Dimmock Charlton, alias John Bull, alias Francis Cox, illegally held in slavery in Savannah, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the former papers, the Report of the Attorney-General at Nassau upon this subject; and to request that I would take these papers again into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to any further steps which it may be proper that Her Majesty's Government should take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Charlton having left Nassau for the United States without any expressed intention of returning, I do not see how Her Majesty's Government can take any further steps in this matter, unless (as I have already suggested) Her Majesty's Consuls at Charleston, New York, and Philadelphia should be able to furnish any additional material information.

Seizure of the "Adelso" for alleged violation of the blockade of the port of Wilmington.

Doctors' Commons, April 30, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Lord Lyons (No. 201, April 3, 1862), and Her Majesty's Consul at Boston (April 8, 1862), relative to the seizure and condemnation of the British schooner "Adelso" for an alleged violation of the blockade of the port of Wilmington; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether I see any reason to alter the opinion given in my Report on this case of the 3rd October last.† And he was also pleased to inclose the former papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this vessel, whose owner, Horton, resides at St. John's, New Brunswick, cleared from Halifax, United States, for Bermuda, 9th July, 1861 (see Mr. Dennis to Consul Lousada, August 14, 1861, Inclosure 4 in Lord Lyons' No. 460), under charter entered into by her master with some citizens of the Confederate States, to proceed to Wilmington, North Carolina, for a cargo of naval stores for Great Britain or a British Colony.

It is stated by her owner (see Report of Comptroller of Customs at St. John's, New Brunswick, Inclosure 2 in Lord Lyons' No. 231), that her first master entered into this charter-party, and substituted for himself another master, who took command of her under such charter-party without his (the owner's) knowledge or consent. It is alleged that her master was ordered not to attempt to enter any blockaded port.

Having cleared from Halifax as for Bermuda, she went to Wilmington, which she entered on the 30th July, where she loaded a cargo, and sailed on the 6th August, without seeing any blockaded force, or being interfered with on entering or leaving. She put into Newport, Rhode Island, on the 13th August, from stress of weather, and was there seized and proceeded against as a prize for breach of the blockade of Wilmington. She was condemned by Judge Pitman, in the Rhode Island District Court of the United States, on the 12th November, 1861, for breach of blockade. Her cargo was condemned as enemy's property.

Consul Lousada, in No. 21, April 8, 1862, reports that "every possible point of defence was made by the learned Counsel for the schooner and cargo, among others the legal existence of any blockade; and that the claimants of the vessel took an appeal from the Decree of the District Court Judge; and the case now stands for hearing on the appeal to the United States' Circuit Court, and it will probably be still further carried up to the Supreme Court at Washington."

This being so, I cannot advise your Lordship to make any application to the United States' Government for compensation to the owner. The question of the legality of the condemnation of the "Adelso" (involving the question of the validity of the blockade of Wilmington) is under appeal, and still pending, in the United States' Prize Courts; and any such application would, under these circumstances, be, at all events at present, premature.

I do not see upon what ground it can properly be held that she broke any effective blockade by entering and leaving Wilmington; but the owner's case as to the circumstances preceding her leaving Halifax is not of a favourable aspect. The seizure was made in August 1861; he submitted his claim to the Prize Court, where it was fully argued; and he has appealed from the adverse decision (pronounced in November last) without (as far as I can discover) making any application to Her Majesty's Government until now. I cannot therefore say that the circumstances now disclosed alter or affect my opinion of the inexpediency of any intervention by Her Majesty's Government on his behalf.

Case for Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown respecting the Proceedings of Her Majesty's Consuls in regard to the Effects of British Subjects dying Abroad Intestate.

In re José Augustin Lizaur, deceased.

URUGUAY.

Interference of Her Majesty's Consul-General to realize the intestate estate of José Augustin Lizaur, a British subject, there being heirs to the estate.

THE above-named deceased died in the Republic of Uruguay, on the 28th of August, 1861, intestate, leaving property, in lands and cattle, the value of which is estimated to be about 66,000*l*., but it does not appear that he was possessed of any other personal estate beyond the cattle.

The deceased is stated to have been a British subject, but whether his domicile was Uruguay the Consul has omitted to state, and he is represented to have left (as his heirs) Señor de Orense, a Spanish nobleman, who it is believed married a sister of Mr. Lizaur, and there is a gentleman at Monte Video, named Gereda, who is empowered to act for Señor de Orense.

The other heir is a gentleman named Trezevant, the husband or widower of another sister of the deceased who was residing some time since in or near Edinburgh.

The deceased is also alleged to have left two illegitimate children, who by the laws of the country in which he died are entitled to a certain provision from the estate, but as to their respective ages and residence there is no information.

It is also stated that the only debt of any amount due by the deceased is one of 10,000*l*. owing to Mr. R. J. Gower, living in London, for money advanced for the original purchase and stocking of the estate, which was managed as a joint concern by the deceased, but in what way does not appear.

Under these circumstances, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General at Monte Video proposes to realize the effects with a view to transmit them to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury as the trustees for the heirs, under the General Consular Instructions.

To this course, however, the Solicitor to the Treasury (Mr. Greenwood) has reported adversely, considering that, where there are heirs, no interference by Her Majesty's Consul ought to take place, except in aid of the family, and at their request.

On the 26th August, 1842, a Treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation between Great Britain and Uruguay was signed at London, the VIIIth Article of which is as follows, viz:—

"In whatever relates to the police of the ports, the lading and unlading of ships, the safety of merchandize, goods, and effects, the succession to personal estates by will or otherwise, and the disposal of personal property of every sort and denomination, by sale, donation, exchange, or in any other manner whatsoever, and to the administration of justice, the subjects and citizens of each of the two Contracting Parties shall enjoy in the dominions and territories of the other the same privileges, liberties, and rights as native subjects or citizens, and they shall not be charged in any of these respects with any higher imports or duties than those which are or may be paid by natives; conforming, of course to the local laws and regulations of such dominions or territories.

"And it is further agreed that the subjects and citizens of the two Contracting Parties shall have and enjoy in all the dominions or territories of each other, the most full and perfect liberty to devise or dispose of their property and effects of every kind and denomination, and wheresoever situate, by will or testament, to such person or persons, and in such proportions, as their own free will may dictate.

"If any subject or citizen of either of the two Contracting Parties should die without will or testament in the dominions or territories of the other, the Consul-General or Consul, or in his absence the representative of such Consul-General or Consul, shall have the right to nominate Curators to take charge of the property of the deceased so far as the laws of the country will permit, for the benefit of the lawful heirs and creditors of the deceased, without being interfered with by the authorities of the country, but giving to those authorities due and proper notice."*

The following letter (and inclosures) has been addressed to the Queen's Proctor upon the subject by Mr. Layard, the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs:—

"Foreign Office, March 24, 1862.

"Sir,

I AM directed by Earl Russell to transmit to you a correspondence between this office and the Treasury, growing out of a despatch (also inclosed herewith) from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General at Monte Video, reporting his proceedings in regard to the property left by Mr. Lizaur, an intestate British subject, and requesting instructions for his guidance in that matter.

"You will perceive from the Reports made by the Solicitor to the Board of Treasury that that officer is of opinion that Mr. Lettsom had no right to interfere with regard to the property in question, and that the instructions to Her Majesty's Consuls, in regard to taking charge of and administering intestate property left by British subjects abroad, are defective, and I am to request that you will prepare a case for submission to the Law Officers requiring their opinion, first, upon the course to be pursued at Monte Video; and secondly, as to the instructions which it may be proper for Lord Russell to issue generally to Her Majesty's Consuls for their specific guidance in regard to cases of intestate property.

"I am, &c.

(Signed) "A. H. LAYARD.

"Monte Video, November 26, 1861.

"My Lords,

"I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordships with the death, on the 28th of August last, near Paisandie, in this Republic, of Mr. José Augustin Lizaur, a British subject.

"Mr. Lizaur died intestate, leaving property in lands and cattle of the value of some 400,000 current dollars, or about 66,000*l*.

* Hertslet's "Treaties," vol. vi, page 926.

"His heirs, as far as I have been able to ascertain as yet, are Señor de Orense, a Spanish nobleman, who, I believe, married a sister of Mr. Lizaur, and a gentleman named Trezevant, the husband or widower of another sister of the deceased.

"Mr. Trezevant was, I believe, residing some time since in or near Edinburgh.

"I have written to Mr. R. F. Gower, a gentleman living in London, to inquire for all particulars respecting Mr. Trezevant.

"The only debt of any amount due by the late Mr. Lizaur is one of, I think, 10,000*l*., owing to the above Mr. R. F. Gower, for money advanced for the original purchase and stocking of the estate, which was managed as a joint concern by Mr. Lizaur.

"The deceased left two illegitimate children, who, by the laws of this country, are entitled to a certain provision from the estate.

"Twenty per cent. of the proceeds are set aside for law expenses, management, administration, and other expenses, and what remains over, after all those costs are deducted, is divided equally between any illegitimate children there may be.

"By Paragraph 35 of the General Consular Instructions I am ordered to realize the property and effects of British subjects, not seamen, dying abroad intestate, and remit the proceeds to your Lordships as the trustees for the heirs.

"The sums concerned upon the present occasion are, however, so large, that I fear the Government of the Republic will endeavour to get the management of the whole matter into their hands, and, once fairly in the power of the tribunals of the country, next to nothing will be left for the heirs, and, what little they do get will be kept from them for years, inasmuch as the simplest legal proceedings here are next to interminable, what is termed 'justice' in this Republic being a solemn and costly farce.

"I write by this mail to Earl Russell, requesting him to favour me with such instructions as will enable me to prevent this matter being made over to the legal authorities of this country; and I venture to beg your Lordships, as the trustees for the heirs, to solicit his Lordship to direct his attention to my request.

"From the sale of cattle next month a sufficient sum will be received to pay a great part, if not all, of the amount due, as I have said, to Mr. R. F. Gower.

"I shall endeavour to transmit the proceeds to your Lordships, and shall be able to ascertain, approximately at least, by the action of the Judge of the Court of Intestate Estates what is likely to be the course taken in this affair generally by the judicial authorities of the Republic.

"I have, &c.

"My Lord,

"I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship with the decease, near Paisandie, in this Republic, on the 28th of August last, of Mr. José Augustin Lizaur, a British subject.

"Mr. Lizaur, I have every reason to believe, died intestate, leaving property in lands and cattle the value of which, from which I have as yet been able to learn, may be estimated to be worth some 400,000 current dollars, or about 66,000*l*.

"Mr. Lizaur left two heirs, one a Spanish nobleman of the name of Orense, who claims, I believe, as the widower of a sister of Mr. Lizaur. There is a gentleman here named Gereda, who is empowered to act for Señor de Orense.

"The other heir is, I fancy, a gentleman of the name of Trezevant, who, from what I can learn, was some time since living at or near Edinburgh.

"I have written to a gentleman named Robert F. Gower, residing in London, to inquire for particulars as to Mr. Trezevant.

"The only debt due by the late Mr. Lizaur that I have as yet been able to hear of, with the exception of a few trifles due to servants for wages, is a sum of 10,000*l.* owing to the above Mr. R. F. Gower for sums lent to Mr. Lizaur to establish and manage the estate, the same having been conducted for their joint benefit.

"By the General Consular Instructions, Section 35, I am ordered, in the case of British subjects, not seamen, dying abroad intestate, to realize such property and effects, and remit the proceeds to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury as the trustees for the heirs.

"But this property is so large that I cannot but fear the Oriental Government will throw every impediment in the way of the affairs of this estate being wound up here as speedily as the above instructions contemplate should be done, and that endeavours will be made to get the entire matter into the hands of the Tribunals here; in which case the greater part, if not the whole, of the proceeds will be devoured by the cormorants of the law.

"Such has been the case very frequently here, and there is no reasonable doubt to be entertained it will also be so on the present occasion.

"If the matter once gets fairly into the clutches of the lawyers here, a suit is almost certain to be entered into on some pretext or another; and once commenced, it is quite impossible to say when it will be concluded.

"During next month I shall have an opportunity of judging whether the impediments which I foresee are likely to occur.

"The Court here, charged jointly with Consuls with the management of the estates of intestate persons, has, at my request, authorized the sale of a considerable number of cattle; and as soon as the money is received for them I shall claim the proceeds in order to transmit the amount to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury for the total or partial extinction of the debt due by the late Mr. Lizaur to Mr. R. F. Gower.

"I hold that, with the exception of such charges as the Republic may make for duty, I am entitled to transmit those proceeds to England for the purpose I have mentioned.

"I shall be greatly obliged to your Lordship if you would kindly furnish me with your instructions on this case generally, for, as I have stated, I have the utmost dread of the matter once coming into the power of the Tribunals of this country.

Report of Treasury Solicitor on Mr. Lettsom's Despatch.

"Treasury Chambers, January 10, 1862.

"Sir,

"THEIR Lordships have been pleased to refer to me a letter of the 26th November, 1861, from Mr. Lettsom (Monte Video), reporting the death of a British subject, José Augustin Lizaur.

"Mr. Lettsom states that he died intestate, leaving property worth 66,000*l.*, and that, as appears at present, Señor de Orense, a Spanish nobleman, and Mr. Trezevant, each of whom had married a sister of the deceased, were his heirs.

"This, of course, is impossible: but it may be understood, as meant by the Consul, that these two gentlemen, in right of their wives, are entitled to shares of the property in distribution with the illegitimate children of the deceased.

"In the South American States generally, and I presume in Monte Video, as in Spain, the illegitimate daughters who, in certain modes, have been recognized by their father, are by law entitled to a defined status, and to a share of the property.

"In what proportion these members of the family are by the law of Monte Video entitled to the succession, or to whom falls the legal rights of distribution, like administration in this country, I am unable to say; but I venture most strongly to urge that, except in the aid of the family and at their request, the Consul ought not to intermeddle in the matter.

"The Consul quotes his general instructions to realize the effects of British subjects, not seamen, dying abroad intestate; and he entreats their Lordships to urge upon Lord Russell a compliance with his request that influence may be used to prevent the Tribunals of the country disposing of the matter.

"I cannot help thinking that the Consul has misunderstood the instructions that he cites. I have been from time to time furnished in similar cases with extracts from the Consular Instructions, and have seen no such injunctions.

"But, in truth, such injunctions would be inoperative; they cannot give a title to a Consul, or to anybody else, adverse to the family.

"There are some places, indeed, where by positive enactment, the Consul has the care and administration of the estate of his deceased countrymen; but except in such places (and Monte Video is not one) the duty of the Consul (not his right) may be to aid the family in the realization of the estate, and to prevent its plunder by strangers, but not to displace or contest the title of the relatives.

"I ask pardon for urging this most strongly on their Lordships, because enormous wrong and damage has been done to families by a wrongful assumption of authority by Consuls.

"I have taken every occasion in my power to call attention to these cases: the circumstances of some of them were so flagrant that I think their Lordships would forgive me in again alluding to them.

"I humbly venture to recommend to their Lordships that in submitting Mr. Lettsom's letter to Lord Russell, their Lordships should move Lord Russell to consider the expediency of warning the Consul that he has no title paramount to that of the surviving relatives, and that though he may exert himself to ascertain their wishes, he ought in no event to arrogate to himself a right to the administration of the effects in opposition to their title.

"Foreign Office, January 24, 1862.

"Sir,

"I AM directed by Earl Russell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22nd instant, inclosing copies of a despatch addressed to the Lords of the Treasury by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General in Monte Video, respecting the disposal of the effects of Mr. Lizaur, a deceased British subject, and of a Report from their Lordships' Solicitor to the effect that Mr. Lettsom had no right to interfere in regard to the property in question.

"In reply, I am to request that the Lords of the Treasury will call the attention of their Solicitor to the VIIIth Article of the Treaty between this country and Monte Video of the 26th August, 1842, by which it will be seen that it is both the right and the duty of the Consul-General in Monte Video to interfere in regard to property left in that country by British subjects dying intestate."

"Treasury, February 11, 1862.

"Sir,

"THEIR Lordships were pleased some days ago to refer to me a letter of 26th November, 1861, from Mr. Lettsom, Her Majesty's Consul at Monte Video, reporting the death of Mr. Lizaur, a British subject (leaving property worth 66,000*l.*), and stating his intention of selling a portion, and transmitting the proceeds to this country.

"Mr. Lettsom urged their Lordships to solicit Lord Russell to send him such instructions as would enable him to prevent the matter being made over to the legal authorities of the country.

"It appeared to me unadvisable that their Lordships should urge upon Lord Russell any particular instructions to the Consul, who acts entirely under the directions of the Foreign Office, but I ventured to submit (in reference to some recent cases where great wrong had been done through a mistake of their powers by the Consul) that a warning might be properly sent to Mr. Lettsom, that he has no title adverse and paramount to that of the family of the deceased, and that as the relatives in the present case seem known or discoverable, he ought to endeavour to ascertain their wishes, and to intermeddle only in their aid.

"I take the liberty of referring to my Report of the 10th January, 1862.

"A copy of the Report appears to have been transmitted by my Lords to the Foreign Office, and their Lordships have now been pleased to refer to me Mr. Murray's reply of the 24th January.

"Mr. Murray refers to the VIIIth Article of the Treaty between this country and Monte Video of 26th August, 1842, which he says makes it both the right and the duty of the Consul to interfere in regard to property left in that country by British subjects dying intestate; and this too, it seems, whether in aid or not, or whether in compliance with or adversely to the wishes of the relatives of the deceased (for otherwise Mr. Murray's observation has no application to my Report, since it cannot be doubted that the Consul has a right to assist the family, if they desire it).

"Mr. Murray, therefore, is apparently of opinion that it is not only the duty, but the right of the Consul of his own mere motion, without the authority of the family, and even against their wishes, by force of the Treaty to realize the effects of the deceased, and transmit the proceeds to this country.

"I venture to submit that the Consul has no such duty or right.

"The Consul himself rests his authority upon the instructions which he has quoted, saying nothing of the Treaty, while Mr. Murray quotes the Treaty alone.

"1st. I am satisfied that the Consul has received no such instructions as he quotes.

"He quoted, perhaps, from memory, and no doubt intended to quote correctly, but has failed to do so. Section 35 has no such injunctions as the Consul cites (and section 34, relating to the same subject, is, by some singular mistake, an exact transcript, to a letter, of the whole page which contained section 35).

"I venture also to submit that Mr. Murray has equally mistaken the whole object and effect of the Treaty.

"The Treaty was manifestly intended to assist the families of British subjects dying in the Republic of the Uruguay, but not to impair or supersede their title to the effects; they were enabled to invoke the aid of their own Consul, and to ask him to appoint curators 'without being interfered with by the authorities of the country,' but 'in all that relates to the succession of personal estates by will or otherwise, and the disposal of personal property,' British subjects were to have the same rights as native subjects and citizens.

"It is abundantly clear, I think, that the Treaty gave no power to the Consul to displace or suspend the rights of the next of kin.

"Indeed, it only enables him in any case to nominate curators to take charge of the property for the persons entitled to it; for example, in their absence, not certainly, to administer it himself, nor does it even purport to enable him to collect and realize the proceeds, or to remit them to England as now proposed. Yet Mr. Murray apparently thinks that the Consul is justified (even bound) to do so by the Treaty.

"But even if the Treaty assumed such power, if it affected to subject the property of Englishmen to the control of the Consul, it would be invalid.

"The Executive Government of this country has no power, without Act of Parliament, to deal with the property of Her Majesty's subjects; they might as well subject persons as property to the control of the Consul.

"It is quite familiar to provide by Act of Parliament for giving effect to any Treaty that deals with the lives, persons, or property of Her Majesty's subjects, as in the case of the numerous Treaties for the suppression of the Slave Trade, the Extradition Treaties, Treaties for the reciprocal compensation of foreign and English claimants, &c , &c.; and even as late as last session an Act (24 & 25 Vict., cap. 121) was passed for giving effect to any Treaty that might be made for the administration by Consuls of the effects of their deceased countrymen.

"If Mr. Murray's construction of the Treaty is correct, if there is an absolute right and duty of the Consul to intermeddle, then if a merchant still domiciled in Monte Video, but resident in London, were to die here, with his wife and family about him, the Consul in London of the Republic of the Uruguay may, nay must, nominate curators of the property. Nevertheless, I venture to say that the Consul would have no more right to meddle with the estate than with that of any living inhabitant of London. And the same may be said of the British Consul at Monte Video; and if he insists, as other Consuls have done (except in aid of the family), in administering this estate, and takes 1,300*l*. or 1,400*l*. from it for his 2½ per cent. commission, he will be answerable for it to the personal representative, upon his return within the jurisdiction of our Courts.

"I take the liberty, therefore, of again urging upon their Lordships to warn the Consul, if they interfere at all, that he has no title, except in aid of the family of the deceased, and that his first duty is to ascertain their wishes.

"I ask pardon for once more referring to the numerous occasions upon which I have endeavoured to express what I believe to be the true and only duty of the Consuls, and in particular, since the question is to be re-opened, to refer to two cases:—

"First, to a case in 1854, where the proceedings of the Consul at Callao were involved, because in that case their Lordships were pleased to state, in forwarding the report to the Foreign Office, that they concurred in the opinion.

"Secondly. I would refer to a case in 1859, where the Consul at Caracas had assumed the right to administer large estates of a deceased British subject (sugar plantations, &c.) against the wishes, and to the vast and irreparable injury, of the family. Of these estates he kept forcible possession for above four years, appropriating to himself in his accounts 2½ per cent. on the very large sums that figured in them, and charging the estate with considerable amounts for his legal expenses.

"I ventured to report that he had no right to interfere with this property.

"The Secretary of State was pleased to adopt this opinion, and, further, to request that their Lordships would bear the report in mind in case the Consul should ever ask for a pension.

"After this concurrence of opinion, both of my Lords, and of the Secretary of State, it is to be regretted that the question is raised again. The pretensions put forward on behalf of the Consuls are very mischievous if they are groundless.

"They have possibly originated in a misconstruction of Statute 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, the Schedule to which allows 2½ per cent. for the management of property of British subjects dying intestate.

"Upon this there has, apparently, been inferred an absolute right in the Consuls to administer such estates and to earn the 2½ per cent.

"It is manifest that the Statute, like the Treaty quoted by Mr. Murray, is applicable only to cases where the Consul acts in aid of the family, not adversely, or in assumption of any supposed independent rights.

"And the obvious misconstruction of the Act is the more remarkable from the following circumstance:—

"The Act enables Her Majesty in Privy Council to alter or abolish the fees in the Schedule; and, accordingly, by an Order in Privy Council dated 1st May, 1855, the fees were divided into two lists, one described as 'Fees to be taken in respect of matters in which the Consul's interposition is required by law,' the other is headed 'Fees to be taken in respect of matters in which the Consul's interposition is to be given only when required by the parties interested.' And amongst these is 'Management of property of a British subject not being a seaman, dying intestate, 2½ per cent.'

"And these lists are included in the General Instructions placed in the hands of all Consuls.

"It is difficult, therefore, to understand how this injurious misapprehension should continue to prevail.

"I am far from saying that, in the present case, the Consul intends to administer the estate in opposition to the relatives, but Mr. Murray's views are calculated to encourage him.

"Indeed, the Consul already talks of selling effects, paying debts, and remitting proceeds, as if it were quite unnecessary to consult the family; and for this reason I again humbly submit to their Lordships (if they interfere at all at the present stage) the expediency of sending warning to him to aid the family rather than to send him any encouragement to believe that he has an absolute inherent right of his own in the administration of the estate.

"The Secretary to the Treasury"

Paragraph 35 of Consular General Instructions.

Property of British subjects dying abroad intestate.

"35. Whenever it may be the duty of a Consul to take possession of, and administer to, the property and effects of British subjects, not seamen, dying abroad, intestate, he will realize such property and effects, and remit the proceeds to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, as the trustees for the heirs.

"The Consul will, at the same time, furnish the Lords of the Treasury with a detailed statement of all particulars relating to the deceased and his property; and he will also give any information which be may have obtained respecting the family and friends of the deceased.

"With respect to the property and effects of British subjects, being seamen, the Consul will be guided by the separate Instructions with which he is furnished on matters relating to the British Mercantile Marine."

It is to be observed that neither paragraph 34, as alluded to by the Solicitor of the Treasury, nor any other paragraph of the General Instructions to Consuls, has reference to the administration of the effects of British subjects dying abroad intestate.

Under the aforegoing circumstances the opinion of the Law Officers is requested on the following points:—

1. What is the duty of the Consul-General at Monte Video in the present case, and what instructions should be given to him in respect thereto?

2. Does the 35th paragraph of the General Instructions require to be amended, and how, with regard to the course to be pursued generally by Consuls in cases of intestacy of the like nature?

3. And, generally to advise whether any, and if so what, further instructions should be given to Consuls for their general guidance, with a view, on the one hand, to protect the interests of absent British heirs and creditors, and, on the other, to avoid improper Consular interference?

Opinion.

1. The terms of the Treaty with Uruguay are peculiar, and in the absence of any explanation of the Uruguayan law and procedure in cases of succession, it is impossible to say whether, in this particular case, the Consul's intervention was strictly justifiable or requisite, or what would be the practical result of his proposed further intervention, as by taking possession of, and transmitting to England, the money arising from the sale of the cattle, or by his retaining it, and proceeding further in the administration of the personal estate in Uruguay. It would seem, however, that there is a "Court of Intestate Estates" in Uruguay; and that it has, on his application, authorized the sale of the cattle, but not (as yet) the transmission to England of the proceeds of such sale. The Treaty only enables the Consul "to nominate curators to take charge of the property of the deceased, so far as the laws of the country will permit, for the benefit of the lawful heirs and creditors of the deceased, without being interfered with by the authorities of the country, but giving to those authorities due and proper notice;" and, therefore, save as to such nomination of curators, &c., the succession to personal estates of British subjects in Uruguay is by the Treaty placed on the same footing as that of native citizens, and is to be in conformity with the local laws and regulations. We do not see that any curator has been appointed; but the Consul has (properly) applied to the Court of Intestates' Effects, and purposes to renew such application. He has apparently, as yet, acted in conformity with the local law.

It would seem, however, that Señor Orense (a brother-in-law of the deceased, and stated to be interested in the succession) has a duly constituted agent at Monte Video, named Gereda; and it does not appear that either he or Mr. Gower (a creditor of the deceased, resident in London, in whose interest the Consul appears to have intervened), or any other person interested, has made any application for his intervention. The instructions only direct the Consul how to act "whenever it may be his duty to take possession of and administer the property." Here there is no constat as to its being "his duty" to take this course. It is not stated where the deceased was legally domiciled at the time of his death, nor who are by the law of Uruguay (if he died domiciled there) entitled to his personal estate, or in what shares or proportions each of such persons is entitled. This essential information should be supplied by the Consul. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case, until this information is supplied, it is not easy to give him any definite or final instructions. He should, however, be instructed not to remit to England any money on account of the deceased's estate, whether arising from the sale of the cattle or otherwise, until he has furnished a full explanation as to the conformity of his proceedings with the Treaty and the Uruguayan law, and furnished further information as above suggested, and has received further instructions so to do.* Subject to this qualification, and, if he is duly authorized by the Uruguayan law, or so far as he may be thereby authorized, he may be instructed to continue to act in accordance therewith for the protection of the property, subject to any objection on the part of any of the heirs or parties interested. He should explain whether Señor Orense's agent, or any and what other person interested in the succession, is able and willing to administer, or has applied to him for his intervention.

2 and 3. The 35th paragraph of the General Instructions appears to us to require amendment, the present form being too general. It will be desirable in the amended Instructions to refer the Consuls to the local law of each country, and the existing Treaties with Great Britain, for their guidance in determining whether it is or is not their "duty" to interfere at all in matters relating to the successions of British subjects, and to explain to them that without positive authority by law or Treaty they have no right or power of interference therein; and that as to the nature and extent of such interference, where authorized, they must be guided by the existing law and Treaty, and act in conformity therewith. The Instruction as to realizing and remitting to the Lords of the Treasury the proceeds of the property of British subjects dying abroad intestate should be qualified by reference to the extent of the power which may be conferred on the Consul by existing Laws and Treaties; and even where the power in question exists, it may be advisable to limit its exercise to cases in which there is no party on the spot entitled and willing in person, or by a duly appointed agent, to administer to the effects, other than the Consul, or to cases in which his assistance is invoked by or on behalf of any such party. Where any of those legally interested in the succession are on the spot, or duly represented there, and more especially if they are British subjects, the Consul should either desist altogether from official intervention, or only interfere to aid them. We agree with Mr. Greenwood that the Consul has not, as against the parties entitled at law to the personal estate, any absolute or inherent right of his own in the administration of the estate. Possibly when the further information required is received from the Consul, we may be able to suggest some further instructions as to the particular case in question or generally.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 3.)

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 28th ultimo* on the case of the "Emily St. Pierre," the British vessel which was captured by a United States' ship of war for an alleged breach of blockade, but which was subsequently recaptured by the master and brought to Liverpool, he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would inform your Lordship whether it is possible for the United States' Minister at this Court to raise the question in a Prize or Admiralty Court in England.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we cannot say that it is absolutely impossible for the United States' Minister at this Court to raise the question of the title to the "Emily St. Pierre" in the High Court of Admiralty; he may possibly attempt to extract a warrant or monition in the Registry of that Court, in a cause of possession, as in the name of the captor, or possibly of the President of the United States; although we do not consider that he would succeed in doing so, at all events without special application to the Judge by motion, in which case the registered owner would be heard against the application, and probably with success.

Even if the application should be granted, and a monition or a warrant for the arrest of the vessel should issue, we are of opinion that the High Court of Admiralty would, on the facts of the case being made apparent to it by the British owner, refuse to entertain or decide the question of the validity of either the capture or the rescue; and would not practically disturb the title of the registered owner of the "Emily St. Pierre," or even allow it to be questioned.

The Minister cannot, in his own name or public character, raise the question as suggested.

Right of Confederate States to confiscate, by Act of Congress, the property and debts of alien enemies, subjects of Great Britain and other neutral Powers domiciled in Northern States being comprised in that designation.

Doctors' Commons, May 5, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 13th of November last,† relative to the Act of the Congress of the so-styled Confederate States, confiscating the property and debts of alien enemies, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch, dated the 10th March ultimo, from Her Majesty's Consul at Richmond, inclosing copies of an amended Sequestration Act which was passed in February last by the Confederate Congress, which it appears is intended to remove the hardship and injustice of which Her Majesty's Government had reason to complain, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the effect of the law as now modified.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear from the papers in what manner either the original Act, 30th August, 1861 (on which our previous Report was founded) or the amended Act, 15th February, 1862, has been carried into effect against the property of British subjects, or how far the instructions of the Confederate Attorney-General for carrying the original Act into effect have been modified in conformity with the amended Act. It may, we presume, under these circumstances be taken for granted that British interests have not been seriously injured, in practice, under the legislation of the Confederate States on this subject.

The amended Act, 15th February, 1862, appears to us to contain some material improvements upon the former Act; and unless some attempts should have been or should hereafter be made to enforce the provisions of either or both Acts in a manner practically injurious to British interests, we do not recommend that any formal remonstrance should be addressed to the Confederate Government. The legal effect which may be given to the words in section 6, paragraph 3, relied on by the Consul, viz., "All subjects and citizens of neutral countries who cannot be shown to have voluntarily contributed to the cause of the enemy," is not altogether free from doubt; but it remains to be seen what construction will be given to this amended Act by the executive and legal authorities in practice, and by the Courts of the Confederate States, when the subject is brought before them; and inasmuch as, at all events, in a large portion of cases, the injury to British interests expected or apprehended under the former Act will be obviated by the qualifications introduced in the latter, we do not at present recommend Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps in this matter.

As to power of granting permission to American mail-steamers to enter and come out of Mexican ports in the Pacific, under British blockade, without affecting the validity of the blockade.

Doctors' Commons, May 6, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Admiralty dated the 29th April ultimo, inclosing a copy of a letter from Rear-Admiral Sir Thomas Maitland, requesting to be informed whether American mail-steamers may be allowed to enter and come out of Mexican ports in the Pacific, under blockade by British ships of war, without affecting the validity of the blockade; and to request that I would take this question into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, I am of opinion that Sir Thomas Maitland's question may be answered in the affirmative.

It will be desirable, however, in the event of a blockade of the Mexican ports, that the permission in question should be specially conceded by the Admiral, as a favour, "until further notice," and subject to such conditions and regulations as the officer commanding the blockading force at each blockaded port may find it expedient to impose and make, from time to time, according to the exigencies of the case.

Exemption of British Jews in Russia from liabilities to which Russian Jews are liable.

Doctors' Commons, May 6, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th April last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch, with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh (No. 179), calling attention to the position in the Russian dominions of British subjects of the Jewish religion, and to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified, under the provisions of the Treaty between Great Britain and Russia of 1859, of which a copy was inclosed, in claiming exemption for British Jews in Russia from the disabilities to which persons of that persuasion were there liable.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that, having regard to the language of the Treaty between Great Britain and Russia of 1859, and to the facts stated with reference to the legal status of Russian Jews in their own country, Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in claiming exemption for British Jews in Russia from the disabilities to which Russian Jews are there liable by law. We think the effect of the Ist and XIth Articles of the Treaty is to place British subjects on the footing of Russian subjects, before the law; each class being alike, and one not more than the other, amenable to all general laws applicable in like cases. Russian subjects, being Jews, incur certain disabilities; and we think that the equality intended and provided for by the Treaty is not infringed by British subjects in Russia, who are Jews, whilst residing there, also sharing the same disabilities. It would seem to be far beyond the scope and general intent of a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation, if it were to be held to repeal, in the persons of foreigners, the legal disabilities to which (for reasons of general State policy) particular classes of individuals, natives of the country, had been subjected; and it is hardly to be supposed that any independent Government would accept or adopt such an interpretation, as against itself.

Request of British subjects at Constantinople that parties in Civil suits in the Supreme Consular Court may have the right of demanding a trial by jury of six British subjects.

Doctors' Commons, May 7, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th April ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a Memorial signed by numerous British subjects at Constantinople, praying Her Majesty to confer on parties to a civil suit in the Supreme Consular Court in that city the right of demanding a trial by jury of six British subjects, as is already provided for by Order in Council in criminal cases. And that your Lordship thought it advisable in the first instance to ascertain the opinion of Sir Henry Bulwer and Sir Edmund Hornby on the matter, and that your Lordship therefore sent the inclosed instructions; and he was also pleased to inclose the answers received from them respectively. And he also inclosed a similar Memorial from Smyrna, together with a letter from Mr. Hyde Clarke, in which he inclosed a letter which he had addressed to the Legal Vice-Consul at Smyrna respecting trial by jury, and generally respecting the proceedings in the Consular Court; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report our opinion, first, as to the propriety of complying with the request; and, if it should be in the affirmative, secondly, as to whether trial by jury should be confined to the Consular Courts at Constantinople, Smyrna, and Alexandria, which are presided over by persons having a legal education; and thirdly, by what process and under what conditions the system of trial by jury should be established.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the question raised, and upon which our opinion is desired, is one of policy; namely, whether it is expedient, for the administration of justice in civil cases in the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, to introduce trial by jury, either upon the English or any other modified plan.

We have read and fully considered the petitions in favour of juries, as also the observations on the subject of Sir Henry Bulwer, Sir Edmund Hornby, and Mr. Hyde Clarke; and on the whole, and as at present advised, we are disposed to agree in the conclusions at which Sir E. Hornby has arrived. He necessarily has the best opportunity of acquiring a knowledge of those facts with reference to the numbers, pursuits, position, &c., of British residents without a careful consideration of which no practical conclusion can be reasonably drawn; and it appears to us that, granting to Sir E. Hornby the facts which he adduces, and which there is nothing in these papers to impugn or qualify, but one conclusion is possible, and that is adverse to the proposed introduction of juries, even limited to six jurymen, at the present time, from the impracticability of forming a sufficient panel or jury list.

We are not informed how the resort to juries in those criminal cases to which they are made applicable by Order in Council has answered, and it may be better, before a final course is resolved on, to seek for some detailed information upon that point. We presume, however, that the empanelling of a jury in criminal cases is of comparatively rare occurrence, whereas it would appear from Sir E. Hornby's despatch that if the jury system were to be adopted for the trial of civil suits, either as of course or on special requisition of parties, the demands upon the time of the class of jurors might be inconvenient and oppressive, and there might also be considerable difficulty in securing the attendance of impartial and indifferent jurors. If this be a correct view, then even the successful working of juries, as at present applied to criminal cases, would very little, if at all, affect the opinion which we have expressed upon the question submitted to us.

There is no information in the papers as to Smyrna, but we presume that it is not in a more favourable condition than Constantinople on the point in question.

Mr. Duddell's claim on account of destruction of flour and baking-stores at Hong Kong.

Doctors' Commons, May 7, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th April ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying letter from the Board of Treasury, dated the 19th April ultimo, inclosing a petition addressed to that Board by Mr. George Duddell, claiming compensation for the destruction of certain factories belonging to him at Hong Kong, which were burnt in March 1857, and to request that I would take this petition into consideration, together with the former papers, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether there is anything in Mr. Duddell's present statement to cause me to alter the views which I had previously expressed with regard to his claim in my Reports of the 14th of May, 1857, and 29th of June last.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I must answer your Lordship's question in the negative.

In explanation of the view which I have taken of this case (which now comes before me for the third time), I may perhaps state that, excepting the despatch of Sir J. Bowring (No. 128, March 14, 1857), which contains nothing material, I am not cognizant of any statement or information in support or corroboration of Mr. Duddell's case having been supplied to Her Majesty's Government from any public officer, or, in effect, from any person but himself. The only proof furnished by him that the burning of the storehouses was, in effect, attributable to the Chinese Government, or to its officers at Canton generally; or that it was "a loss sustained through the misconduct of the Chinese authorities at Canton," within the meaning of the Separate Article annexed to the Treaty of June 26, 1858, of which I am aware, is contained in a Memorandum published in the Hong Kong Gazette of April 25, 1857, of the contents of some Chinese papers captured on board some junks on the 4th of April previous, which is set forth in his petition of May 28, 1861, in which petition he states that "he verily believes that the arson and destruction of flour and other materials as aforesaid was an act of the Esing bakers, or other emissaries of the Provincial Government, virtually the Queen's enemies." This same Memorandum is also annexed to his recent petition to the Treasury.

Seeing nothing in this statement, or in the Memorandum, sufficient to show that the fire was, in effect, designedly caused by the Chinese Government or its officers, I reported, on the 14th May, 1857, that Her Majesty's Government could not properly bring forward any claim against the Chinese Government for the losses occasioned by this fire, no Treaty being then in question.

By the Separate Article annexed to the Treaty of Tien-tsin of June 26, 1858, it was agreed that a sum of 2,000,000 taels should be paid to Her Majesty's Representative in China by the authorities of the Kwang-tung Province, on account of the losses sustained by British subjects, through the misconduct "of the Chinese authorities at Canton." Mr. Duddell's claim was again submitted to me, but no additional information was forthcoming; and there being nothing in the papers sufficient to show that "the Chinese authorities at Canton" had caused the fire, and no suggestion from any officer or Department of Her Majesty's Government that this was the fact, I reported on June 29, 1861, that his petition contained nothing to alter or modify the opinion I had previously expressed in my Report of May 14, 1857; in effect, that he had established no case under that Treaty.

The IIIrd Article of the Separate Convention annexed to the Treaty of Pekin, ratified October 24, 1860, expressly annuls the Separate Article annexed to the Treaty of Tien-tsin of 1858, and stipulates that "in lieu of the indemnity therein specified the Emperor of China shall pay 8,000,000 taels by certain instalments;" and, "in order to prevent future discussion it is moreover declared that, of that sum, 2,000,000 will be appropriated to the indemnification of the British mercantile community at Canton for losses sustained by them, and the remaining 6,000,000 to the liquidation of war expenses."

No additional information is (as far as I am aware) forthcoming in support of Mr. Duddell's case. With respect to the statements in his petition to the Treasury (p. 7,) that he "did, both prior and subsequently to the conclusion of the said Treaty (1858), submit to the local authorities in China the particulars and grounds of his claim for his said losses as having been occasioned by emissaries and under the sanction of the Canton Government, but failed in his applications on the ground that the claim was not in respect of property destroyed or abandoned at Canton itself;" and to his observations thereon,—I can only say that I have no knowledge of the authority by which any such decision on his case was made in China, of the actual grounds of that decision, or of the proofs, if any, which he adduced of the responsibility of the Chinese authorities at Canton for his losses at Hong Kong. However this may be, I never advised that any such construction, as he therein submits to be erroneous, should be given to the Separate Article of the Treaty of 1858. Assuming such a decision to have been made, and bearing in mind the terms of the IIIrd Article of the Separate Convention, signed at Pekin, October 24, 1860 (now in force), annulling the Separate Article of 1858, and substituting for that Article new and different stipulations, I fail to perceive how this IIIrd Article can be construed to extend to Mr. Duddell's claim as he snggests. His claim is not, in my opinion, either in respect of "a loss sustained by any member of the British mercantile community at Canton," or in respect of "war expenses;" to which two classes, the indemnity to be paid by China is appropriated by the last paragraph of that Article.

If (as he suggests in his petition to the Treasury, p. 12), there will remain a considerable balance in Her Majesty's Treasury out of the sum to be paid by China, after satisfaction of all claims in consequence of the misconduct of the Chinese authorities, which have been allowed by Her Majesty's Government, and if the disposal of such balance is question for the discretion of the Treasury, Mr. Duddell's claim to receive compensation from such balance may be open to the consideration of that Department, upon its being satisfied, first, that his losses were in fact designedly caused by the officers of the Chinese Government, or the local authorities of Canton; secondly, that the amount claimed in respect theerof is correct: but this separate question does not, as I conceive, come properly within your Lordship's cognizance as Foreign Secretary.

I have dealt with Mr. Duddell's claim throughout, internationally, as between Great Britain and China; and in that point of view I can only repeat that there is nothing in the papers to satisfy me of its validity. If his losses were in point of fact designedly caused by the Chinese Government, or the local authorities at Canton, he has not, as far as I can see, established this either by direct proof or by any certificate, admission, or even expression of opinion from any British authority.

GREECE.

Loan contracted by Greek Government on security of Government property, already mortgaged to holders of bonds of the loans of 1824 and 1825.

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, May 9, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th April ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a correspondence relative to a loan lately contracted by the Greek Government, on the security of certain Government property in Greece, against which proceeding the holders of the bonds of the loans of 1824 and 1825 have protested, as the property in question is already mortgaged to them. And he was also pleased to transmit the correspondence which passed on a similar occasion in 1853 and 1854; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the steps which Her Majesty's Government should now take in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That by the 6th paragraph of the XIIth Article of the Convention of 1832, the Sovereign of Greece and the Greek State are bound to appropriate to the payment of the interest and sinking fund of such instalments of the loan as may have been raised under the guarantee of the three Courts (Great Britain, France, and Russia), the first revenues of the State, in such manner that the actual receipts of the Greek Treasury shall be devoted, first of all, to the payment of the said interest and sinking fund, and shall not be employed for any other purpose until those payments on account of the instalments of the loan raised under the guarantee of the three Courts shall have been completely secured for the current year. It is, moreover, stipulated that the Diplomatic Representatives of the three Courts in Greece shall be specially charged to watch over the fulfilment of the last-mentioned stipulation.

I assume that the payments in question have not been completely secured for the current year. If this is so, and if the Representatives of the three Courts have reasonable grounds for suspecting that any of the actual receipts of the Greek Treasury are about to be employed for any other purpose (as, for instance, in raising or guaranteeing a fresh loan), they will be perfectly justified in insisting upon receiving full information from the Greek Government as to its intentions with reference to any such prospective disposition of the actual receipts of its Treasury.

Inasmuch as the information in question appears to have come from a Director of the Bank, who stated to M. Bourée, before February 27th ultimo, that the Government had made an application for a loan, and had offered as a security portions of the national lands, and a certain amount of the proceeds of the Customs; and as M. Conduriotti's note of $\frac{\text{March 22}}{\text{April 3}}$, in reply to two notes of the Sir T. Wise on the subject, only states that he has referred the question to the Minister of Finance, and does not deny any such intention as suggested to to be entertained by the Government of Greece, so that Sir T. Wyse's inquiries are in effect unanswered, it appears to me that they have grounds for suspecting that there may exist an intention of violating the Convention.

It is, of course, desirable that the Representatives of the three Courts at Athens should act conjointly; and I would suggest that they should address to the Greek Government a joint note containing a categorical demand for information, within a short definite period (say ten days), as to the intentions of the Greek Government to raise a loan, and to offer as a security for it some portion of the receipts of the Treasury, with reference to the peculiar stipulations of Article XII of the Convention.

With respect to ulterior measures, these must, to some extent, depend on the answer which may be given by the Greek Government to this demand.

With respect to the protest of the bondholders, I am not sufficiently informed of the precise grounds of that protest to express any opinion on this subject. This protest should not be adverted to in the joint note. "The hypothecation of lands or any other of the national property of Greece" (to which the protest is apparently confined) is not expressly mentioned in the Convention; but "the proceeds of the Customs," mentioned by M. Stavros to M. Bourée (see Sir T. Wyse's No. 39), as offered to the Bank by the Government by way of security for the loan, seem clearly to be "actual receipts of the Greek Treasury," within the letter and spirit of the Convention.

Claim of Mr. McClure for damage done by United States' troops on his farm near Alexandria.

Doctors' Commons, May 13, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 1st of May instant, and its inclosures, from Mr. James H. Leekie, relative to a claim made by Mr. McClure, a British subject, upon the Government of the United States, for damage done by their troops to a farm belonging to him near Alexandria; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to any steps that can be taken in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I cannot advise that any formal steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter, at all events without further information.

The facts are imperfectly stated; but it would seem that Mr. McClure, a British subject, is domiciled in Virginia, where he only registered himself as a British subject when that State seceded from the United States. It is not stated whether he had ever done any act inconsistent with his British allegiance, as by holding any office, taking any other oath of allegiance, &c.

He complains in the character of mortgagee (as would seem) of damage done to landed property in which he is interested in Virginia, by the military forces of the United States, in taking timber therefrom for military purposes, and of some personal property, not specified, having been forcibly taken by them from him; the whole claim is for 100*l*. The "items" are not forthcoming, but were transmitted to the United States' Secretary of War.

The date of the acts complained of is not given, but must have been previously to February ultimo.

As regards the United States' Government, Mr. McClure can only claim to be placed in the same position as that then occupied by the native citizens resident in Virginia. At that date I presume that the State of Virginia (as one of the Confederate States) may have been regarded as "enemy's territory" in the military occupation of the United States' forces. If so, foreigners domiciled therein would only be entitled to the same rights as native citizens there resident, who may not be considered by the United States' Government as entitled to compensation for timber taken for military use by its military forces on the spot.

Lord Lyons appears to have advised Mr. McClure to apply to the United States' Secretary of War for compensation, which he did, and the answer returned to his application from the Quartermaster-General's Office, to which it was referred, dated February 24th, is unsatisfactory. It does not impugn or question the facts suggested, but merely states that there is no appropriation by Congress out of which damage of this description can be paid by that Department. This would seem to amount to an implied admission that the facts were as suggested, and that Mr. McClure's claim was well founded.

It does not, however, appear whether Mr. McClure has communicated with Lord Lyons since he received this answer, or has taken any other steps in support of his claim, if such are open to him. If other claims have been admitted by the United States' Government, under the same circumstances, this claim should be supported; but there is no information on this point. There is nothing forthcoming from Mr. McClure himself; nor does it appear in what character Mr. Leekie, of Enfield House, Southampton, applies on his behalf.

Under these circumstances I can only suggest that the case should be referred to Lord Lyons, for the exercise of his discretion thereon, with reference to its peculiar circumstances.

Interference of United States' cruizers with the "Lion," "Florida," and "Southport," while in the Gulf of Mexico.

Doctors' Commons, May 14, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 256, April 21, 1862), relative to the interference on the part of the United States' cruizers with the British merchant-vessels "Lion," "Florida," and "Southport," while pursuing their respective voyages in the Gulf of Mexico, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is scarcely necessary for us to observe that, in every case in which a complaint is made of interference by the United States' ships of war with British ships, Her Majesty's Government must have full and accurate information of all the material facts before it can determine upon the course which it may be disposed to adopt. No sufficient particulars are forthcoming in either of the cases of the "Lion" or the "Florida" to enable Her Majesty's Government to interfere, or to take any steps, internationally, on behalf of the parties interested. There is no "protest" or statement of the precise facts in either case from the owners of ship or cargo, or their agents, or from the masters; and if (as would appear to be the case, from Lord Lyons' statement that Consul Crawford states that the masters of the "Lion" and the "Florida" "complain exceedingly of the conduct of Mr. Welch," Acting Vice-Consul at Key West, to which port these vessels were sent by their captors), the Consul has not received any written communications from the masters since their capture, containing the necessary particulars, these have not been transmitted.

We observe that the facts of each case, as far as known, have been brought to Mr. Seward's cognizance by Lord Lyons, and that Mr. Seward promised that he would request the Secretary of the Navy to cause an inquiry to be made concerning them. We do not consider that any further steps can, at present, be taken by Her Majesty's Government.

With respect to the "Lion," no particulars are given as to the port from which she sailed, her destination, cargo, or place of capture.

With respect to the "Florida," bound from Havana to Matamoros with "lawful goods," her capture would appear to be unjustifiable, but no particulars are given as to her cargo. It appears, from Lord Lyons' despatch, that an active trade is kept up between Havana and the blockaded ports of the Confederate States, notwithstanding the blockade. Bearing in mind the situation of Matamoros, and that vessels intending to break this blockade will probably clear out with their papers in order and with false destinations (not improbably, in some cases, to this and other Mexican ports), it cannot be safely assumed that the captures of such vessels, on the high seas, are unjustifiable merely because their cargoes are not contraband, and that they are captured at a considerable distance from any blockaded port, and that their ostensible destination is a neutral port. None of these cases approaches that of the "Labuan," in the total absence of any justification for the capture, and neither in that nor in any other case of which we are aware have the friendly remonstrances of Her Majesty's Government been attended with any success.

As regards the case of the "Southport" nothing further can be done, at all events until the promised explanation is forthcoming.

The propriety of forthwith sending a properly qualified person as Vice-Consul to Key West seems apparent, more especially if (as is suggested) the present Acting Vice-Consul is the Marshal of the United States' Prize Court established there. This, however, is entirely for your Lordship's consideration.

ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION.

As to sons of British subjects born in one part of the Argentine Confederation being exempt from military service in the other during war against the territory in which they were born.

Doctors' Commons, May 14, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th May instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 27th of November last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Mr. Thornton (No. 18, March 24, 1862), inclosing a copy of the Argentine Law of Nationality alluded to in my Report, and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, together with Mr. Thornton's previous despatch, and to report to your Lordship my opinion on the question put by Mr. Thornton, namely, whether in case of war between two portions of the Argentine Republic, and of belligerent rights being accorded to both, the sons of Englishmen, born in one part of the Confederation, could be forced to take up arms within the other, and to assist in hostilities against the place of their birth.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I conceive that the previous Report alluded to is that of the 14th (and not 27th) November, 1861.

Although in the case supposed the peculiar circumstances of hardship to the persons in question, and the serious international difficulties likely to arise from the Government of one State or portion of the Confederation compelling them to bear arms in a civil war with another State or portion thereof, might justify, and even require, the strongest remonstrances of Her Majesty's Government against the adoption of such a course (see my Report of November 17, 1857), yet I cannot say that its adoption would constitute a breach of international law. In the absence of any Treaty stipulation, even aliens may be rendered liable to military service in the country of their domicil, without any violation of international law (see Law Officers' Reports, 31st July, 1860, and 30th September, 1861, on this question in the United States), and it is to be remembered that the persons in question are not "aliens" in the Argentine Confederation, but Argentines by birth, ratione loci nativitatis, both internationally and by the Municipal Law of the Republic (see the Law of October 7, 1857, Article 2.)

It is to be further observed that although Her Majesty's Government might recognize both the "parts of the Republic" (or the contending parties in a civil war) as belligerents, yet that one (if not both) of such parties (as for instance the Federal Government, or that of the majority of States in the event of a single State revolting against or separating from the Confederation) would probably treat the separate State or States seceding as rebels, and would not admit that the accident of birth in that portion of the Confederation which might thus be in revolt should, of itself, exempt all the persons so born from the obligation of military service to the de facto Government within whose territory they were domiciled; the question would, moreover, not be confined to the sons of foreigners born in the Republic, but would extend to the sons of native citizens born in the territory of the opposite party.

The Law of September 29, 1857 (according to my construction of it), in effect allows the children of foreigners (wheresoever born) who prefer the nationality of their fathers, the right, on manifesting this preference, to be treated as foreigners of their father's nationality, and not as Argentines. If this be the effect of the law, it will enable the Argentine Government to contend that the persons in question, who have not exercised the preference thereby permitted, are to be considered as "Argentine" by their own deliberate consent or admission.

If the exemption of foreigners generally, or of British subjects, from military service, could be secured (as to the grounds for which I beg to refer again to my Report of November 17, 1857), the sons of British subjects born in the Republic might, apparently, by the exercise of their "preference" under this Law, claim such exemption as not being "Argentines," but "British subjects" by the nationality of their paternal "origin." This point may be kept in view with reference to the probable repeal of the Law in question, suggested by Mr. Thornton; a measure which, unless accompanied by some fresh arrangements, will render the position of the sons of Her Majesty's subjects born in the Argentine Confederation even worse than it now is in relation to military service, and which would seem to call for some settlement of this question by negotiation.

I have, &c.

Case of the "Emily St. Pierre," captured for breach of blockade, but subsequently retaken by the master.

Doctors' Commons, May 20, 1862.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th May instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 3rd instant* he was directed to transmit to us a further letter from the United States' Minister at this Court, dated the 10th instant, relative to the case of the "Emily St. Pierre," and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon. And he was also pleased to annex the former papers.†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we observe that Mr. Adams does not attempt to dispute or question the general principles of international law relied on by your Lordship in your note of the 7th of May, nor does he adduce any additional arguments in support of his demand for the restoration of the "Emily St. Pierre;" the only authority cited or referred to by him in his note of May 10th is a passage from the Judgment of Lord Stowell, in the case of the "Catherina Elizabeth," reported in 5 C. Robinson's Reports, p. 232. Mr. Adams must either completely misunderstand the effect of this Judgment, or he is citing it in support of a position to which it has no application. It is obvious that Lord Stowell was there speaking, as the Judge of the Prize Court of a belligerent captor, of the consequences incurred in such a Court (exercising a peculiar and exclusive jurisdiction by the law and consent of nations), by a violation of, or resistance to, the rights of a belligerent captor, on the part of a neutral master; as, by an attempted rescue. Doubtless the master of the "Emily St. Pierre" may have (to adopt Mr. Adams' phrase) "brought himself within the scope of the condemnation expressed in these words of Lord Stowell;" if by that it be meant, that a Prize Court of the United States might have lawfully condemned the ship if the attempt at rescue had failed, and she had been brought within the jurisdiction of such Court: but the Judgment of Lord Stowell is no authority (and Mr. Adams has not referred to any other) for contending that the Municipal Law of a neutral country is under any obligation, or has any jurisdiction, to enforce, or to aid in enforcing or carrying into effect, the belligerent right of capture; or, in effect, to exercise Prize jurisdiction, as between captors and claimants. The absence of any such obligation on the part of neutral States, or of any such jurisdiction on the part of their Municipal Law or Courts, so far from being (as Mr. Adams suggests) "a purely technical ground," is a leading principle of international law, established and confirmed by the unanimous consent and uniform practice of all civilized nations, but more especially by the United States. "A neutral," says Kent,‡ "has no right to inquire into the validity of a capture, except in cases in which the rights of neutral jurisdiction were violated; and in such cases the neutral Power will restore the property, if found in the hands of the offender, and within its jurisdiction, regardless of any sentence of condemnation by a Court of a belligerent captor." And so Wheaton:§ "This jurisdiction of the national Courts of the captor to determine the validity of captures made in war, under the authority of his Government, is exclusive of the judicial authority of every other country, with two exceptions only; (1) where the capture is made within the territorial limits of a neutral State; (2) where it is made by armed vessels fitted out within the neutral territory."

We observe that Mr. Adams does not deny or question this position, nor does he suggest that, if the circumstances of this case, as between Great Britain and the United States, were reversed, the Municipal Law of the United States would operate differently from that of this country, or that its Executive Government could interfere either to any such extent as Her Majesty's Government is now required to do by Mr. Adams, or to any extent whatsoever. Mr. Adams has thus entirely failed to support his demand by judicial authority, by the admitted law and usage of nations, or even by the principle of reciprocity in a similar case on the part of his own Government,

The only other topic alluded to by him is the Queen's Proclamation of May 13, 1861, which he describes as "being most unfortunately worded," and from the language of the concluding paragraph of which he seeks to infer that it is to be implied "that there is a jurisdiction in Great Britain capable of taking cognizance of cases arising under the Law of Nations, and beyond the range of the Municipal Law." We need scarcely point out that Mr. Adams does not suggest that this very peculiar jurisdiction exists, or is exercised by the Courts of the United States, or of any other civilized country: the non-existence in this country of any such jurisdiction ("beyond the reach of the Municipal Law"), as is alluded to by Mr. Adams, must have been always legally notorious to all persons in any degree conversant with the law, but more especially to citizens of the United States, whose legal system is, to so great an extent, founded on and identical with that of England.

"Capture" alone does not divest a neutral of his property; this can only be done by the sentence of "condemnation" of a competent Prize Court. The "Emily St. Pierre" did not by her capture become the property of the captor, or cease to be the property of her British owner, and no British Court is competent to pronounce on her a "sentence of condemnation," which is a technical expression peculiar to Prize Law and practice, and in this sense used by Lord Stowell. "But by the modern usage of nations," says Chancellor Kent,* "neither the twenty-four hours' possession, nor the bringing the prize infra præsidia, is sufficient to change the property in the case of a maritime capture. A judicial inquiry must pass upon the case, and the present enlightened practice of commercial nations has subjected all such captures to the scrutiny of judicial tribunals, as the only sure way to furnish due proof that the seizure was lawful. The property is not changed in favour of neutral vendee or re-captor so as to bar the original owner, until a regular sentence of condemnation has been pronounced by some Court of competent jurisdiction belonging to the Sovereign of the captor." "Now, the right is everywhere understood to continue until sentence of condemnation, and no longer."†

With respect to the wording of the Proclamation, we need only observe that it refers to and recites the material portions of the "Foreign Enlistment Act," and then proceeds to warn persons acting in violation thereof (viz., by committing the particular acts therein specified), "or by carrying officers, soldiers, despatches, arms, military stores, or materials, or any article considered and deemed to be contraband of war, according to the law or modern usage of nations, for the use or service of either of the said contending parties; that all persons so offending would incur and be liable to the several penalties and penal consequences by the said statute or by the law of nations in that behalf imposed or denounced." This concluding clause would be read (as is done in all similar cases) reddendo singula singulis; it could not reasonably be understood as meaning or implying that persons violating the statute would incur the peculiar penalties denounced by the law of nations for the violation of such law, or that persons violating the law of nations would incur any penalty imposed only by the statute; the meaning of the Proclamation being obviously that any breach of the statute would be punished thereunder by the same national authority which enacted that statute, whilst any breach of the law of nations (which was not also a breach of the statute) would be left to the determination of the Courts entitled to enforce that law, which Courts have, by the consent and usage of nations, exclusive jurisdiction to enforce the penal consequences consequent upon its violation.

* Kent's "Commentaries," vol. i, p. 102.

† Ibid., vol. iii, p. 119.

Mr. Adams cannot mean seriously to contend or even to suggest that the wording of the Proclamation induced him to believe that the peculiar offences therein mentioned as being "against the law of nations" (such, for instance, as breach of blockade) would be visited with penalties by any English Court "exercising a jurisdiction beyond the range of the Municipal Law," or that "the Government of the United States" (as a belligerent) "had any just right" (as he suggests) "to infer from it that Her Majesty's Government (as a neutral) had the power to shelter it" against acts, which although described as "wrongful and fraudulent" are only in breach "of the peculiar rights conceded by international law to belligerents exclusively, and which are done neither in violation nor in fraud of any English (or neutral) law or jurisdiction."

Under these circumstances, we do not see any sufficient justification for what he describes as "the very natural mistake" into which he admits that he has fallen.

Writ served on Count Persigny, French Minister for the Interior, Count Billault, Ministre sans Portefeuille, and M. Meygret, at the suit of Serjeant Glover.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 21, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a private letter from Lord Cowley inclosing a writ which has been served on Count Persigny, the French Minister for the Interior, Count Billault, Ministre sans Portefeuille, and M. Meygret, formerly in the Department of Police, at the suit of Serjeant Glover, and in regard to which M. Thouvenel has requested Lord Cowley to ascertain what course the parties should adopt; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience. And he was also pleased to add that Serjeant Glover, not long since, served a writ on the French Ambassador in this country, but on being cautioned as to his Excellency's privileges he desisted from proceeding in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the proceedings of Mr. Serjeant Glover are taken under the 19th section of the "Common Law Procedure Act, 1852," being the 15th and 16th Vict., cap. 76. Under that section, a person residing out of the jurisdiction of the English Courts, and not being a British subject, may be served with such a notice of action and proceeding as that which has been addressed to, and, we presume, served upon, Count Persigny, Count Billault, and M. Meygret; such notice being founded on a writ of summons issued out of the Court to which the notice refers (in the present case, the Queen's Bench). Moreover, should a person served with such notice not cause an appearance to be entered in the English Court, that Court, or a Judge, upon being satisfied by affidavit that there is a cause of action which arose within the jurisdiction, or in respect to the breach of a contract made in the jurisdiction, and that the notice has reached the defendant, who wilfully neglects to appear, may direct from time to time that the plaintiff shall be at liberty to proceed in the action in such manner and subject to such conditions as may seem fit, regard being had to the circumstances of the case (see sections 18 and 19 of the same statute). In the present case, if, the defendants not appearing, Mr. Serjeant Glover should succeed in obtaining an order to proceed, and should proceed accordingly, and obtain judgment, he would still be bound to prove, by satisfactory evidence, the amount of the debt or damages before he could obtain execution; and such execution, if obtained, could be only available against goods of the defendants, or some or one of them, being within English jurisdiction, or against the persons or person, being also within that jurisdiction, and unclothed with any character of privilege, such as that of Ambassador, and the like.

With reference to the course to be adopted on behalf of the defendants, under the circumstances, we are not in possession of sufficient information as to what, if anything, has at any time taken place between Serjeant Glover and the defendants, or any of them, and where (that is, in England or in France) the matters occurred. It is most desirable that, with as little delay as possible, we should be furnished with this information. In the meantime, we would recommend the placing of the papers in the hands of the Solicitor to the Treasury, who should be directed to put himself in communication with Messrs. Chapman and Clarke, the attorneys for Mr. Serjeant Glover, and to ascertain from them the exact state of the proceedings. Care must be taken not, for the present at least, to enter any appearance, as that would operate, in itself, as a waiver of all objection to the jurisdiction.

In the end, it may probably become desirable to apply to the Court to set aside the proceedings; but this would depend upon the facts, when fully ascertained. It will be observed, that the period of the arising of the plaintiff's alleged claim is from the 9th of May, 1857, to the 23rd of October, 1858; and it will be material to learn whether the defendants, or any of them, were within the jurisdiction of the English Courts during any and what portion of that period, and, if so, whether they were residing within such jurisdiction in any and what diplomatic character.

Question as to navigating merchant-vessels on the seas under the flag of the Swiss Confederation.

Doctors' Commons, May 22, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 280, 26th April 1862), inclosing a copy of a letter which has been addressed by the Department of Commerce and Tolls at Berne to the Swiss Consul-General at Washington, directing him to furnish a report on the question of navigating merchant-vessels on the seas under the flag of the Swiss Confederation; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we observe that it does not appear that the letter in question has been diplomatically or formally communicated either to Her Majesty's Government or to that of the United States, or even that it was ever intended to be so communicated; it was not officially communicated by Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons; and Mr. Seward did not state that he had received a copy of it from the Swiss Consul-General (to whom it is addressed); nor did he give Lord Lyons any intimation of the view which the United States' Government is disposed to take on the question therein raised.

The question whether the Swiss flag could be hoisted at sea, and how the maritime Powers would regard its appearance, is, as far as we are aware, primæ impressionis; and in principle is not confined to Switzerland, but extends to and includes all other civilized Governments in the same condition, in not being possessed of any seaport or communication with the sea; and is therefore to be regarded, in some respects, as a question of policy, and not one of pure international law.

It will be for your Lordship to consider, under these circumstances, whether any, and what, notice should be formally taken of the letter in question.

Subject to these remarks, and viewing the question merely on abstract principles of international law, we think that, jure naturæ et gentium, no State destitute of communication with the ocean can claim any right to be recognized by other nations as a maritime Power; and that the degree to which, and the conditions upon which, such recognition may be accorded, must be left to the determination of every separate nation.

JAPAN.

Claim of Mr. M. Moss for compensation for arrest and ill-treatment by Japanese police.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 23, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 1st May instant, which has been addressed to Lord Palmerston by Mr. Michael Moss, stating the grounds upon which he considers himself entitled to receive compensation from the Government of Japan; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this paper into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are not aware whether any, or what, communications have passed between Mr. Alcock and the Japanese Government on the subject of Mr. Moss's arrest and ill-treatment by the Japanese police. We can scarcely suppose that Mr. Alcock has suffered the conduct of the police to Mr. Moss to pass in silence, and without some remonstrance or demand for reparation; or if so, on what grounds he has abstained from making any such demand; but without full information on this subject, it is impossible for us to offer any practical suggestions to your Lordship as to the steps to be taken by Her Majesty's Government.

We beg to refer to the Law Officers' Report of April 26, 1861,* in which we pointed out that Mr. Moss had not committed any act which, according to the terms of the Treaty, was criminal in him; and that the Japanese police officers had no legal authority to apprehend him. We also invited the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the treatment of Mr. Moss by the Japanese police officers, and to the necessity of a stipulation that any British subject arrested by Japanese authority should be immediately brought and delivered to the custody of the Consul. The unfortunate omission of any express stipulations on these points in the Treaty, taken in conjunction with the subsequent Consular proceedings and sentences in Mr. Moss's case, may probably cause the Japanese Government to resist payment of any compensation to Mr. Moss.

We observe that this gentleman, in his Memorial (p. 7), states that "the Treaty, wisely foreseeing difficulties and complications that might arise, should no provision be made for personal misconduct or disturbance, determines that a British subject, unless in the open commission of an offence or misdemeanour, cannot be seized or arrested by Japanese officials without a warrant from a British Consul; that in all cases, whether a prisoner has been so apprehended by warrant, or flagrante delicto without one, in every case are the Japanese officials at once, and without delay, to take him before his Consul, to whom they will state the nature of his offence, and their complaint; and that such offender will be judged by the law of England, as if the offence had been committed in England. These Treaty regulations are clear, full, and bear no misinterpretation."

We are not aware of any Treaty regulations binding on the Japanese Government to the above effect. There are none such in the body of the Treaty of Yeddo (ratified June 11, 1859), or in the Regulations annexed thereto, and incorporated therein by Article XX; by this Article, however, provision is made for the "making of such rules as may be required to carry into full and complete effect the provisions of the Treaty and Articles by the Diplomatic Agent of Great Britain in Japan, in conjunction with such person or persons as may be appointed for that purpose by the Japanese Government."

* See Reports for 1861, page 79.

Under these circumstances we must request further information, and reference to any such rules as are apparently alluded to by Mr. Moss; and especially as to whether they were in force at the date of his seizure, November 26, 1860.

As at present advised, we can only say, generally, that he appears to have been barbarously and unjustifiably treated; and if the transaction were recent, and if the Consular authority on the spot had not dealt judicially with the case, as one in which Mr. Moss was guilty of criminal misconduct, we should have been disposed to recommend a demand of adequate compensation; but, under the circumstances of the case, and remembering that Mr. Consul Alcock's judgment was only set aside on technical grounds, not involving any review of the merits of the case, it will be for your Lordship to judge how far it may be consistent with sound policy now to insist on any such demand.

Capture of the British steamer "Bermuda" by United States' blockading ship "Mercedita."

Doctors' Commons, May 23, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st of May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, therewith, a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Philadelphia (No. 21, 6th May, 1862), relative to the capture of the British steamer "Bermuda," while on a voyage from Bermuda to Nassau, New Providence by the United States' blockading ship of war "Mercedita;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the papers submitted to us, and have the honour to report—

That although it is alleged that this vessel was captured in British waters, the facts stated by the master seem to show that this was not the case, but that, on the contrary, she was captured on the high seas.

It appears from the master's letter to the owner (Inclosure 2 in Mr. Haigh's Memorial) that at 4·30 A.M. of the 27th April, Abaco light bore south-west half south, distant not more than eighteen miles; that at 5 A.M. the United States' steamer "Mercedita" was seen; that the "Bermuda" was brought to at twenty minutes before 6, "Abaco lighthouse bearing about south-west half south distant, in the opinion of all on board between seven and eight miles at most." Mr. Haigh, in his "Memorial," states that the vessel was captured "near the land, and within the bay at Abaco;" but this information can only be founded on the master's statement, and we do not, therefore, see how it can be established that she was captured in British waters.

Assuming that she was, in fact, captured on the high seas, and not in British waters (as to which, if we should be in error, we request further information), we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to make any application to the United States' Government on behalf of her owner.

We proceed to point out some circumstances appearing in the papers, which, although not by any means decisive as to the legality of the capture, appear to us to be not undeserving of consideration in relation to the question of the propriety, and probable result, of any intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government in favour of Mr. Haigh. Nothing is stated as to the ownership or ultimate destination of the cargo, which was shipped "by several different parties" at Liverpool, from which port she sailed for Bermuda on the 1st March, and part of which consisted of cannon and gunpowder, in what quantities does not appear (see affidavit above cited), but which was consigned to Mr. Butterfield at Bermuda, to whom, according to Mr. Haigh's affidavit (Inclosure 1 in his memorial), the master "had instructions to deliver her cargo, and, thereupon, to ship a homeward cargo for one of the ports of Great Britain." She arrived at Bermuda, 19th March, and "lay there five weeks for orders," without apparently attempting to deliver her cargo, or to ship that which she was to bring from thence back to England (see sworn statement of master, chief officer, and seamen, inclosed in Consul Kortright's No. 21. According to Mr. Haigh's affidavit, Mr. Butterfield, "being desirous that the said cargo should be carried on to Nassau, made an arrangement with the master that the cargo, instead of being discharged at Bermuda, should be carried on to Nassau in the Bahamas, together with some additional cargo shipped at Bermuda for Nassau." In his memorial, Mr. Haigh states that, upon the ship's arrival at Bermuda, "Mr. Butterfield, as the consignee of the said cargo, made a new contract with the captain to carry on the said cargo to the port of Nassau, together with certain additional cargo shipped at Bermuda for Nassau." The master in his sworn statement (above cited) merely states that, "on the 23rd, he left Bermuda for Nassau under orders from N. T. Butterfield to report to Messrs. Adderley and Co., Nassau," thereby meaning (as we presume) to follow their orders as to subsequent destination. Thus nothing appears as to the beneficial interest in, or the ultimate destination or intended disposal of, the cargo (including cannon and gunpowder) originally shipped at Liverpool; and we must observe that Mr. Haigh does not distinctly state (although he implies) that the change of destination at Bermuda, and the abandonment of the design of returning thence with a cargo to a British port was wholly contrary to his intentions, and not within his contemplation (as a contingency) when the "Bermuda" left Liverpool, nor does he state anything as to his belief with respect to the destination of the ship or cargo, in case it had arrived at Nassau, where apparently it was not sent to be sold or landed, but only "for orders" from Adderley and Co.

It is apparent that the "Bermuda" had contraband of war on board, of direct and exclusive use in war; that she had changed her original destination in the course of her voyage, although in a manner apparently not originally contemplated by her owner; a cargo partly of cannon, not for Her Majesty's service, is a somewhat singular cargo for Bermuda, or for Nassau, and she was in waters not remote from blockaded ports, where the contraband portion of her cargo would have proved of great value, with five Confederate passengers on board, of whom no particulars are given; and no information is forthcoming as to the ownership, interest in, or ultimate intended destination of cargo, or of the destination of the ship, which, on her arrival at Nassau, was to follow the orders there to be given.

It will be for the captor to establish a hostile destination, or intention to break blockade, in order to justify condemnation; but we cannot say that, under these circumstances, a total absence of all possible justification for the capture is apparent, or that it amounts to a breach of international law: and it is to be borne in mind that none of the friendly remonstrances of Her Majesty's Government to that of the United States, in cases of capture, have hitherto been successful.

We observe that the captor stated that he had particular instructions to capture the "Bermuda." If this vessel has previously broken the blockade, or carried contraband to a Confederate port, this would make it more useless for Her Majesty's Government to interfere.

With respect to Consul Kortright's question about the passengers (five of whom he states to be natives of the so-called Confederate States, the sixth being a subject of Her Majesty, but as to whose occupation, or design, or reason for going from Bermuda to Nassau he gives no particulars), the Consul cannot interfere on behalf of the "Confederates;" he should refer to Lord Lyons, if necessary, as to the British subject.

We beg to refer to our Report of the 3rd March ultimo, on Lord Lyons' question on this subject in connection with the case of the schooner "M. S. Perry," or "Salvor," captured by a United States' cruizer.

Claim of Ionian, Dionisius Focca, for illegal proceedings of superior administrative authorities of Moldavia.

Doctors' Commons, May 23, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Jassy (No. 14), respecting an indemnity claimed by Dionisius Focca, an Ionian, in consequence of the alleged illegal proceedings of the superior administrative authorities of Moldavia towards him.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 236), inclosing the observations made by the Judge of the British Consular Court upon this case, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course which it would be right and proper for Her Majesty's Government to pursue in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the claimant's case appears to us to be fully substantiated and supported by the papers transmitted, more especially by the despatch of the Moldavian Minister of Justice to Her Majesty's Consulate of the 19th September, 1857 (Inclosure No. 6 in Consul Churchill's No. 14 of 1862), and the Legalized Statement (or Report) of the three Law Officers (Inclosure No. 2 in the same despatch).

We concur generally with the view of the case taken by Sir E. Hornby in his despatch No. 36 to Sir H. Bulwer, May 2, 1862. Sir E. Hornby points out that the claimant being entitled to British protection, it was a breach of Treaty on the part of the Moldavian authorities to decide the case in the absence of the British Consul or dragoman.

Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the claimant is entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government on this ground, in addition to the grounds relied on by himself and Consul Churchill.

We observe that the contract is dated 1854; the date of the claimant's first eviction or ejectment is not supplied; it apparently was in or after 1855; nor is the correspondence with the Moldavian authorities, on the part of the Consulate, forthcoming.

It does not appear whether the objection, on the ground of Treaty stipulations (pointed out by Sir E. Hornby) was ever, or when, taken by the Consulate, either on the claimant's first or second eviction, or if not, why not.

He was, apparently, reinstated in the possession of his rights under the contract in the beginning of 1858, by the Government of Prince Vogorides, upon the letter of the Minister of Justice, 19th September, 1857, pursuant to the Report of the Law Officers, and (we presume) remained unmolested until 1859; and on the 28th May of that year he seems to have been again evicted illegally by the "Divan Princier." This seems to have been done not on the application of the peasant proprietors, his former opponents, but at the instigation of Mr. Manolaki Kostaki Tepoureano, then Prime Minister and President of the Council, who had been previously, on the occasion of the first attempts to disturb the claimant, been irregularly appointed to report on the case, and who is alleged by the claimant to have originated or instigated the first opposition to him in 1855. On this second illegal eviction the Moldavian Government now relies. The last communication from that Government is apparently dated June 1861 (Inclosure No. 4 in Consul Churchill's No. 14), but it would seem that Consul Churchill has since this date made some efforts to obtain redress for the claimant, the precise dates and particulars of which are not forthcoming.

We would suggest that the point of violation of Treaty (suggested by Sir E. Hornby) should be adverted to, and the different representations made by the Consulate to the Moldavian Government, on behalf of the claimant, should be referred to, and that thereupon a formal representation should be addressed to the proper quarter in support of the claim.

Capture of the "Bermuda" by United States' blockading ship "Mercedita."

Doctors' Commons, May 24, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd May instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 22nd instant, he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 308) respecting the case of the "Bermuda;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the other papers which have been submitted for our opinion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That adverting to our Report of the 23rd May instant,* on this case, these papers do not require any additional observations from us.

With reference to the Confederate passengers, we see that Lord Lyons has, in his instructions to Consul Kortright, not to intervene in any way on their behalf, anticipated our suggestion to that effect.

With reference to the vessel, his Lordship's statement that she ran the blockade of Savanah with a cargo of arms for the Confederate Government in the month of September last, confirms our previous impression of the impropriety of any official intervention in the case on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Liability of Admiral Slade to be proceeded against in British Consular Court at Constantinople, as a British subject in the service of the Porte, at the suit of an Austrian subject.

Doctors' Commons, May 24, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Sir E. Hornby, Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, requesting to be informed whether Admiral Slade is amenable to Turkish or British Consular jurisdiction in the matter of a suit brought against him by an Austrian subject; and he also stated that Admiral Slade is a Captain in the Royal Navy, but employed with the rank of Admiral in the Turkish service, where he is chief of the "Liman Odassi," under the name and title of "Munchauer Pasha," and to request that we would take Sir E. Hornby's despatch into consideration, and report to your Lordship at our earliest convenience our opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Sir E. Hornby in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that the real question now in this case is, "Is Admiral Slade a 'British subject' within the letter and spirit of the Order in Council?" And this question cannot, in our opinion, be answered by determining whether in case of a difference with the Turkish Government, he would be entitled to the benefit of diplomatic interference on his behalf by Her Majesty's Government or Representative; for we apprehend that assumed foreign citizenship may disentitle to such interference, without withdrawing the individual from a jurisdiction based on his inalienable character of "British subject." We can discover nothing in the position of Admiral Slade to take him out of the category of "British subject;" and, expressing no opinion as to what would be the duty of the Supreme Consular Court if proceedings were therein commenced with reference to the Admiral's conduct in his character of a naval officer of the Porte, we think that in a matter (such as has been raised) of alleged debt, incurred by Admiral Slade in his private capacity, and within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court, he is, as a "British subject," liable to be proceeded against, and ought to answer in that Court.

1862

At the same time, it appears to us that the question can be entertained by Sir E. Hornby judicially only, and that the process of the Court having been served on Admiral Slade, the case should be allowed to take its course; the defendant being heard, if he objects to the jurisdiction, and the Judge deciding according to the effect on his own mind of the pleas and arguments on the one side and on the other: and in the event of non-appearance, judgment being given against the defendant by default, unless Sir E. Hornby, without argument, feels satisfied that he is without jurisdiction. Such does not appear to us to be his impression; nor do we think that such a view ought to be taken.

PERU.

Claim of Captain Carvell to administer to property of late Mr. Winder.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 24, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th April instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 15th of January ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Barton, inclosing a statement of Captain Carvell's case, together with the opinions of the Peruvian lawyers on the question of the legality of the proceedings of the Peruvian authorities in this case. And he was also pleased to inclose two despatches that have been received from Mr. Barton on this subject since the date of our last Report; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether the circumstances of the case are such as to justify Her Majesty's Government in further interfering on behalf of Captain Carvell, and, if so, to what extent. And he was also pleased to annex the former papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to say with confidence (in the present defective state of our information as to the real character of the legal proceedings in Peru, and the legal grounds upon Captain Carvell relies as against them), that Her Majesty's Government will be justified in further interference on his behalf, or, if so, to what extent it can properly interfere.

Captain Carvell began by refusing to admit that the Peruvian Courts had any jurisdiction over him in the matter in question (the will of his late father-in-law, Mr. Winder, who had died in England, leaving property in Peru, of which will he had obtained probate in England as one of the executors). He has taken refuge, first in the French, and subsequently in the British Legation at Lima, to avoid submitting to the jurisdiction of the Peruvian Courts; and we fear that by this mistake he has, in effect, enabled the adverse parties to obtain certain acts and orders from the Peruvian Courts, "in his default" as it were, and without contest or objection on his part; which, however injurious to his interest, or questionable if they had been contested by him, may not now be capable of being treated as "null and void," or amounting to such violations of natural right and justice as to justify the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

We are still uncertain whether the legal ground of Captain Carvell's restraint is not, in effect, his omitting or refusing to acknowledge the jurisdiction, or give security according to the practice of the Peruvian Court, as we understood it to have been at first; and whether the acts of the Courts of which he complains are not attributable to some extent to his deliberate "non-appearance" or "default" consequent upon his (erroneous) notion of his exemption from their jurisdiction. If, owing to any such omission or refusal, the case has been taken in the absence of any one representing Captain Carvell, and, in effect, as an "undefended cause," we do not see that Her Majesty's Government can properly interfere. If an opportunity was, however, afforded for the Counsel for Captain Carvell being heard, then we do not see why the arguments of the lawyers, who have now written opinions favourable to Captain Carvell, were not addressed to the tribunals. If, however, these gentlemen or others were really intimidated from appearing by officers of the Courts or persons in the service of the Government (such appearance being, under the circumstances, legally permissible), then we think that from such conduct, when taken in conjunction with that of Judge Ponce, a fair ground of complaint and remonstrance by Her Majesty's Government may have arisen. (See our Report of July 15, 1861,* and the inclosures in Mr. Jerningham's No. 22, May 28, 1861, therein referred to.)

We cannot ascertain from the papers the precise nature and state of the proceedings, particularly whether they are only "interlocutory" or otherwise; and whether the irregularities and excesses of jurisdiction relied on in the legal opinions now forwarded were committed by the Courts notwithstanding objection and argument on behalf of Captain Carvell, or in his absence and default, by reason of his refusing to appear, or admit the existence of any jurisdiction in the Courts over him. In this event, we fear that so long as Captain Carvell shall persist in contesting the jurisdiction of the Peruvian Courts, and declines to appear and support his case before them, it will not be possible for Her Majesty's Government to interfere with effect for his liberation from personal restraint, or to address to the Peruvian Government any effective remonstrances as to the treatment he has received from the Peruvian Courts of Law.

We can only suggest that Mr. Barton should be directed to satisfy himself to the best of his ability:—

1st. Whether by the intimidation or undue influence of the Peruvian Government, or of the Judges of its Courts, Captain Carvell has been really disabled from having the assistance of Counsel to argue his case; bearing in mind that three advocates have recently given a strong written opinion in his favour, and against the proceedings and acts of the Courts, in decided terms (see our Report of 25th June, 1861,† and the letters of Captain Carvell therein referred to).

2nd. Whether the irregular or illegal acts of the Courts (adverted to in the opinion of the three advocates) have been done in his absence from the Courts by reason of his refusal or omission to "appear" therein, or notwithstanding his having "appeared" and contested the validity and legality of such acts?

3rd. Whether the acts of the Courts are not, hitherto, only "interlocutory" (as opposed to "final"), and whether they are open to further question, as by appeal, re-hearing, application to set them aside, and so forth, on the part of Captain Carvell. And whether it is or is not still open to Captain Carvell to be heard before the Courts upon the real substance and merits of the case, before any final decree is made as to the validity or operation of the will, or as to the title to the property of the deceased Mr. Winder?

4th. With reference to our Report of November 8, 1861,‡ whether Captain Carvell has, in effect, admitted the Peruvian Courts to have jurisdiction in several other suits or proceedings arising out of the same matter, whilst he continues to deny it in the particular suit in which the "arraigo" has issued against him, which led to his taking refuge in the Legations.

Questions to be submitted to the Judge of the British Consular Court at Constantinople as to British Consular jurisdiction in cases of offences committed by British subjects.

Sir, Doctors' Commons, May 27, 1862.

WITH reference to several cases which have occurred, and which may be expected to recur, of British subjects committing offences, either against other British subjects, or against foreigners, or against natives in Pagan or Mahometan countries in which British Consular Jurisdiction exists under Treaty (e.g., Turkey, Japan, China), I find it necessary to request information as to the existing procedure and practice in Turkey, where from the existence of a Supreme Consular Court, and of Legal Vice-Consuls, and fully drawn Rules, and other circumstances, the course of procedure in such cases may be considered as more formal, better regulated, and reduced to a sounder practical system than elsewhere. I have accordingly to request that Sir E. Hornby may be desired to furnish the following information, either in direct answers to the questions, or in whatsoever shape he may find most convenient with a view to clearness and conciseness.

* See Reports for 1861, page 149. † Ibid., page 133. ‡ Ibid., page 274.

1. In case of a British subject committing any crime or offence, of whatever character, against a Turkish subject (say assault, or say murder), what is practically done, by what authority, and by what officers? (1) As to his arrest; (2) detention; (3) preliminary charge or hearing; (4) final trial, judgment, and sentence—as, for instance, who is authorized to arrest him, British or Turkish officers? both, or which exclusively? with or without formal warrant, in any and what cases, and issued by whom, within that time? and before whom must he (and by what stipulation or rule) be brought up for hearing or committal? under whose custody is he retained until tried? and by or before whom tried and sentenced? and in whose custody imprisoned or punished? distinguishing particularly what intervention is permitted throughout, or in any part of the proceedings, to the Turkish, and what is reserved exclusively to the British jurisdictions and officers respectively.

2. Explain the difference on the above points in cases where the crime or offence is committed. (1) against a foreigner, also subject to his own Consular jurisdiction; (2) against another British subject.

3. Annex any forms, as of summons, warrant, commitment, judgment or sentence, and so forth, in use in Turkey.

Demand of Moldo-Wallachian Government that an Ionian sailor be given up to local authorities at Bucharest for assault on a Moldavian on board a British vessel.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th May instant, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying two despatches from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Jassy (Consular, No. 17, April 2, and No. 21, April 26, 1862), relative to a demand made by the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Moldo-Wallachian Government, that an Ionian sailor charged with committing an assault on a Moldavian should be given up to the local authorities at Bucharest, notwithstanding it had been settled at Jassy through the Director of the Moldavian section of the Ministry of the Interior, that the assault having occurred on board a British vessel should be left to be decided by Her Majesty's Consul at Galatz; and requested that we would take the accompanying despatches from Mr. Churchill into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the principal question for consideration is, whether, adverting to the Convention between the European Powers and Turkey of August 19, 1858, the Treaties and Capitulations in force between Great Britain and Turkey are to be considered as still extending to and having full operation in the Principalities, especially Moldavia, in which (at Galatz) the incident in question occurred.

Adverting to what has transpired in some former cases (see Queen's Advocate's Report on Dr. Barbieri's case, December 20, 1860; Law Officers' Report, September 25, 1861, on a communication from Consul Green on the resistance offered by the Wallachian authorities to the operation of the Capitulations; and Sir E. Hornby's Report on the case of Focca, see our Report thereon of May 23), we should have had no doubt but that this question was to be answered in the affirmative; but we do not observe that this important point is insisted on by any of the Consular authorities whose despatches are with these papers.

If this question is to be answered in the affirmative, then it is obvious that the demand for the "surrender of the accused into the hands of the local authorities" made (apparently for the second time) by M. Arsaky in his note to Mr. Green of the $\frac{\text{2nd}}{\text{14th}}$ April, is in breach of the Treaty stipulations with Turkey (as we understand them), and that compliance with this demand ought to be refused, and an explanation required of the grounds on which it was made. The case must, in this view, be proceeded with as if it had occurred in Constantinople; where, although we are not precisely aware of the steps which would be taken, yet the accused would certainly not be given up by the Consulate to the local (Turkish) authorities, to be disposed of at their absolute discretion by their own law and jurisdiction exclusively; but the Consul would, if he did not deal with the case exclusively, at least have the right, by himself or his Dragoman, of assisting at the trial, and concurring in the sentence. This is really the important question in the case; and upon its determination the course to be taken by Her Majesty's Government must chiefly depend.

There is, however, a secondary or subsidiary question, as to the effect upon the question of jurisdiction, of the assault having taken place on board a British vessel, on which (secondary) ground, apparently, it was arranged between Consul Churchill and the Director of the Moldavian section of the Interior Department (see Inclosures 5 and 6 in No. 17) that the case should be left to the exclusive disposal of the British Consulate. This question will only become of any importance if the Capitulations and Treaties with Turkey should be held not to be in force in Moldavia; in which case, the circumstance of the assault having taken place on board a British vessel, in the Moldavian waters, cannot be relied upon by Her Majesty's Government as giving jurisdiction over the accused to the British Consulate, unless this should be in accordance with the Municipal Law of Moldavia (which is not stated).

It will be observed that the demand for the surrender of the accused made by M. Arsaky at Bucharest on Mr. Green (Inclosure 3 in No. 21), is directly at variance with this previous "arrangement" entered into at Jassy, between Consul Churchill and the Moldavian Minister of the Interior. M. Arsaky disavows the arrangement, and alleges that the Minister of the Interior at Jassy had exceeded his powers in entering into it.

We are not able to offer any material observations on this portion of the case, from not being acquainted with the facts and circumstances bearing thereon. We observe, from Consul Churchill's No. 17 and Consul Green's Inclosure No. 1 therein, that this subject requires attention.

With regard to the alleged violation of Moldavian territory by the marines of Her Majesty's ship "Weser," the telegram from Mr. Ward to Consul Churchill of March 24 (Inclosure 4 in No. 17), and the order of the Director of the Ministry of the Interior to the Prefect of Galatz, March 15 (Inclosure 6 in No. 17), clearly show that that there is no foundation for any such charge on the part of the Moldavian authorities.

We need scarcely observe that the question of who is to exercise jurisdiction over Her Majesty's subjects in the Principalities (more especially in criminal cases, and where a British subject is charged with committing acts of personal violence on natives of the Principalities) is one urgently requiring prompt and conclusive settlement; if loss of life should happen in such cases, the international difficulties ensuing from the present state of things may become very serious.

We would suggest that directions should be sent by telegraph not to surrender the accused, without further instructions.

Capture off Mobile of the "Andreita," purchased at Havana by Mr. Dexter from Confederate broker.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd May instant, stating that with reference to the suggestion contained in my Report of the 14th of March ultimo,* that Her Majesty's Consul-General at Havana should be instructed to furnish all the information in his power as to the circumstances attending the purchase of the vessel "Andreita," which was captured by the United States' blockading squadron off Mobile, in January last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 307, 8th May, 1862), forwarding one from Consul-General Crawford (No. 19) containing such information as he has been able to procure on the subject; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any further observations that I might have to offer thereupon. And he was also pleased to inclose the former papers.†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these papers confirm the opinion which I expressed in my former Report (March 14th) of the inexpediency of any intervention by Her Majesty's Government in favour of the alleged owner of this ship (Mr. Dexter of the Havana), from whom no application is forthcoming, and as to whom Consul Crawford supplies no information.

No material information is given by the Consul as to the real circumstances of the alleged purchase at Havana, on the 8th of January last, and the change of nationality (from "Confederate" to "British") consequent thereon.

Francisco Capella, of Mobile (her former "Confederate" sole owner, who was the apparent vendor), acted as master, after the sale, and up to the capture; and he is the only person who has applied to Her Majesty's Government for its intervention, although he professes to apply on behalf of Mr. Dexter; it is observable that he signed the bill of sale (8th January) by mark, although his signature to the Memorial to your Lordship (dated Mobile, 7th February) is legibly written.

I do not see any distinct statement in the papers as to what has been done with the ship; but prize proceedings are pending against the cargo (which is apparently Spanish property), and possibly against the ship also at New York (see Consul Archibald's despatch to Lord Lyons of March 24th).

Under these circumstances, and adverting to the peculiar occurrences attending her capture (more particularly alluded to in my former Report) which show that it was not primâ facie unjustifiable, Her Majesty's Government cannot properly interfere with the United States' Government, on behalf of her alleged British owner; more especially seeing that, although she was captured in January, he has not made any application to any British authority.

Claim of Mr. Otto Rotton to property withheld from him in Mexico.

Doctors' Commons, May 31, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me, therewith, a letter dated May the 22nd instant, from Admiral Sir F. Moresby, inclosing a petition from Mr. Otto Rotton, praying for the interference of Her Majesty's Government on his behalf, to recover certain property alleged to be improperly withheld from him in Mexico; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and favour your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the applicant, Dr. Otto Rotton, a natural-born British subject, is domiciled and resident and has purchased landed property in the United States; to which country he appears to have gone from Mexico (where he was previously resident) in the year 1846. At some date (not stated) he has been naturalized as a citizen of the United States (Memorial, p. 6). In order to obtain such naturalization, he must not only have taken an oath of allegiance to the Federal Government, but must have expressly renounced his British allegiance. His claim against Mexico arises in respect of judgment recovered by him and certain Mexican and British partners, in respect of the purchase money (about 12,000 dollars) of certain works and manufactures carried on in Mexico, under a Mexican patent, which the firm sold to a Mexican citizen, named Alvarez; this judgment was recovered in 1845 or 1846, in an action brought by the firm against Alvarez, for the purchase money, in some Mexican Court, "the name of which he has forgotten" (see Memorial, p. 4). He suggests that Alvarez (who had, according to his information and belief, some months after the recovery of this Judgment, paid into the Court "a large portion of the money" adjudged to be due from him) afterwards abstracted from the possession of the Court (Memorial, p. 5) the money so paid in (which was a penal offence), and that his wife "in order to absolve him therefrom" afterwards gave the said Court "responsible guarantees or securities" (the particulars of which he cannot state) for the satisfaction of the Judgment. He further states that he made numerous applications by letters and friends, but has never been able to obtain any information concerning the Judgment or any part of the money; and that the Judgment remains wholly unpaid.

This appears to be his first application on the subject to Her Majesty's Government, or to any British authority, and no reason is assigned for his long delay in making any such application. The claim (if any) arose in 1845 or 1846; and whilst he remained entitled to British protection and support, he made no application in respect thereof to Her Majesty's Government; he has never made any such claim until now, when he has renounced his allegiance, and become a citizen of the United States, where he is domiciled and resident.

I observe:—(1.) That non constat that he ever had any bonâ fide claim against the Executive Government of Mexico. (2.) That he does not appear to have made any effort to obtain any legal redress, or even to have changed his agent (Macedo), from whom he received no information, or to have employed ordinary diligence in enforcing his alleged claim. (3.) That he has not explained or accounted for his long silence. (4.) That he has renounced his British allegiance, and is a domiciled citizen for the United States.

Under these circumstances I cannot see any ground or reason for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government with that of Mexico in support of this claim.

Status of British subjects naturalized as citizens of the United States, and residing in States that have seceded from the Federal union.

Doctors' Commons, May 31, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, a despatch and its inclosure from the British Acting Consul at New Orleans (No. 14, March 22), containing certain questions as to the status of British subjects who had become citizens of the United States by naturalization, and who were residing in States that had seceded from the Federal Union, and requested that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon—

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. That a natural-born British subject, in order to obtain naturalization in the United States, must not only take an oath of allegiance to the United States, but must, in express terms, renounce and abjure his British allegiance (see 2 Kent's Commentaries, p. 65, 27th Edition, 1851). Whilst he remains in the United States he will not be recognized by Her Majesty's Government as a British subject; but on returning to his native country with a view to permanent residence there, his status as a natural-born British subject revives, or, rather, adheres to him: and in the Queen's dominions he always remains a natural-born British subject. The law of England knows nothing of that which in some countries is recognized as "de-nationalization," and considers the status of "natural-born subjects" as permanent and indelible, and applying to them whenever they are within its jurisdiction; and the natural allegiance due from them, as a permanent and indelible obligation, of which they cannot divest themselves by any act of their own.

2. In the event of a natural-born British subject, subsequently naturalized in the United States, remaining resident in the so-called "Confederate States." and in the event of those States succeeding in severing themselves from the United States, and such severance being internationally recognized by Great Britain, the question of his status and allegiance must be left to the determination of the Government of the Confederate States. Her Majesty's Government would not interfere in favour of those who had expressly renounced their British allegiance, nor consider them as "British subjects," whilst they remained in a foreign country. It is impossible for us to anticipate the view which the United States' Government might take of the status and allegiance of such persons in the event of their being found within its jurisdiction, and supposing it to have recognized the independence of the so-called "Confederate States;" but in such an event, foreigners who had become naturalized would have the right to claim to be treated on the same footing as native citizens, and to be, with them, practically released from their allegiance to the United States. Until the United States' Government shall have recognized the "Confederate States," it may enforce, as against all persons resident therein, the obligations of the oath of allegiance which they have taken to it.

3. This question is answered by our answer to the first question. Whether the person in question acquired any second right (as of Confederate citizenship), passively or actively, would be immaterial on his return within British territory, where he will be considered a natural-born subject owing allegiance to Her Majesty, virtute loci nativitatis.

With regard to the question put, and the opinion given thereon by the Consul (as stated in his letter of March 22), we have to observe that although it must remain with Her Majesty's Government to determine whether, in the event of the recognition of the independent sovereignty of the Confederate States, it would recognize as British subjects in the Confederate States, those who, having been originally natural-born subjects, had subsequently renounced their allegiance and been naturalized in the United States, and then remained domiciled in the Confederate States, on an application from such persons to this effect,—yet we cannot advise that this should be done. Nor, in our opinion, would the Government of the Confederate States be called on to recognize them as British subjects, unless by virtue of some special stipulations to this effect. Such persons having for their own objects renounced British allegiance, and acquired United States' nationality, and taken an oath of allegiance to the United States, must be considered, while resident there, as having the same status, and owing the same allegiance, as citizens of the United States in the same condition and circumstances. Their mere return within British jurisdiction, and making a declaration that they were British subjects by birth, would not in law have any effect, and ought not in practice to entitle them to the privileges and protection of British subjects in "the Confederate States," supposing those States to be recognized as sovereign and independent.

RUSSIA.

As to right of British subjects under Treaty of 1859 to navigate a river which, after leaving British territory, flows through Russian territory to the sea.

Doctors' Commons, May 31, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th May instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 2nd May instant, inclosing a despatch from the Governor of British Columbia, in which the question is raised as to the right of navigating a river which, after leaving the British territory, flows through Russian territory to the sea; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the rights of navigation, under the circumstances mentioned by the Governor of British Columbia, which can be claimed for British subjects by the terms of the Treaty with Russia of 1859. And he was also pleased to inclose a Memorandum on the subject, together with a copy of the Treaty.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That by the last clause of the XIXth Article of the Treaty of St. Petersburgh of 1859 it is stipulated that, "in regard to commerce and navigation in the Russian possessions on the north-west coast of America, the Convention concluded at St. Petersburgh on the $\frac{16}{28}$th February, 1825, shall continue in force. The VIth Article of this Convention of 1825 is in the following words: "It is understood that the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, from whatever quarter they may arrive, whether from the ocean or from the interior of the continent, shall for ever enjoy the right of navigating freely, and without any hindrance whatever, all the rivers and streams which, in their course towards the Pacific Ocean, may cross the line of demarcation upon the line of coast described in Article III of the present Convention."

The Stickeen River clearly appears to be one of such rivers, and Russia appears, with reference to the expedition fitted out in 1834 by the Hudson's Bay Company, for the purpose of forming a trading establishment on that river (mentioned in the Foreign Office Memorandum transmitted with these papers), to have admitted this to be the case.

Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the rights of navigation which can be claimed for British subjects by the terms of the Treaty with Russia of 1859, as regards the Stickeen River, and all other rivers in the same position geographically, with reference to the line of demarcation between the British and Russian possessions and the line of coast in question, are precisely those contained in the VIth Article of the Convention of 1825, i.e., the right of navigating such rivers, either from the ocean or from the interior, freely, and without any hindrance whatever.

With reference to the further rights of commerce and navigation within Russian territorial limits, either on land or water, on the north-west coast of America, which may be claimed by British subjects, I can only say, that these will be the general rights of commerce and navigation secured to them by the Treaty of 1859, modified, however, as to the particular territory now in question, by the special stipulations relating thereto which are contained in the Convention of 1825 (see more particularly the Articles from the Vth to the XIth thereof inclusive).

With reference to the 13th paragraph of the Governor's despatch, Article X of the Convention will apply as to taking shelter and refitting in Russian "ports" in case of "storms or accident." With reference to the remainder of that paragraph, I can only say, at present, that I do not see how the Russian Government can claim, consistently with the Convention, to levy duties on goods in transitu to the British possessions in the interior, assuming that vessels conveying such goods do not put into Russian ports unless "compelled by storms or accidents" so to do; but, adverting to Articles VII, IX, and X of the Convention, it may rightfully claim to place certain restrictions on vessels resorting to the "bays and harbours of the coasts, as well as at the mouths of creeks and rivers," without being thereto "compelled by storms or accidents."

The 11th paragraph of this despatch appears to be perfectly correct.

Adverting, however, to the peculiar character of the stipulations of the Convention on the subject in question, I venture to submit that, until some specific cases or facts are stated, or are at least assumed hypothetically, it is scarcely practicable to define beforehand (and, as it were, "in the abstract") the precise character, nature, and extent of the rights which may be claimed, in regard to commerce and navigation, by Her Majesty's subjects in the Russian territories on the north-west coast of America under the Treaty of 1859, as modified by the Convention of 1825.

It may be found expedient, in view of the state of things which may be expected in the locality in question, in connection with the recent discoveries of gold and coal alluded to by the Governor, for the Governments of Great Britain and Russia to agree upon some further and more specific arrangements for giving complete effect to the stipulations of the Treaty and Convention (taken together), and for avoiding, as far as practicable, international complications or collisions in relation to the very peculiar circumstances of the locality in question, and to the possible results of the recent discoveries of gold and coal in the British territory communicating with the ocean by navigable rivers whose mouths are in the Russian territory.

FRANCE.

As to legality of detention of British schooner "Fuen Santa" by Custom-house authorities at Oran.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st May ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (No. 717, May 30, 1862), relative to the detention of the British schooner "Fuen Santa," by the French Custom-house authorities at Oran, and to request that I would furnish your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, with my opinion as to whether the detention was justifiable, and, if not, whether any claim for indemnity can be sustained.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, according to the best opinion which I can form upon the papers transmitted, although the legality of the detention of this vessel is open to some question (see more particularly Inclosures Nos. 24 and 25 in Consul Bell's No. 1), yet it cannot be assumed, or confidently insisted on, by Her Majesty's Government that such detention constitutes or amounts to a breach of international law; and I do not see how a claim to indemnity can, at present, be made.

In an international point of view it is to be observed that the seizure was made in a French port, for an irregularity, or fiscal default or offence, committed in French jurisdiction; the charge was formally made and prosecuted under the French law before a magistrate ("Juge de Paix"); the master made (or might have made) his defence; and I presume has some remedy, as by way of appeal (see the "Procès-verbal," Inclosure No. 9, and "Deductions" or "Conclusions pour le Capitaine," Inclosure No. 25, in Consul Bell's No. 1). The master brought himself into trouble by his own irregular acts; and the British Consul fruitlessly recommended him to submit, and to arrange the matter, which the French authorities were willing to do; and, in this state of things, the first object should be to endeavour to obtain the release of the vessel on reasonable terms, keeping open the legal merits of the case for further consideration.

There are, however, certain questions of French law, the answers to which may have an important bearing, but on which (from the text of the French law not being supplied) I can form no opinion. Possibly a good French legal opinion may be promptly obtained in Paris by Earl Cowley upon these questions for the guidance of Her Majesty's Government, which can only insist upon such points as are material, and clearly in favour of the vessel.

It is suggested in Inclosure No. 25 (above cited) that Article 4 of the Law of the 9th and 12th February, 1832 (and see page 7 of the "Procès verbal," Inclosure 9), only applies to the territory of continental France, and to prohibited merchandize; and that no merchandise is prohibited in Algeria. There is, however, another law, viz, Article 4, titre 2, of August 22, 1791 (as to the manifest), also adverted to in the Procès-verbal, page 4. See also a legal question suggested as to the effect of the "visa" on the manifest, in Inclosure No. 26, which does not strike me as so decisive. If it should turn out that these objections, or any of them, are legally valid, and that the seizure or detention was contrary to or in excess of the French law, or not warranted by such law, then the case may ultimately justify or require different treatment.

I proceed to extract from the forty-one inclosures in the Consul's No. 1, some of the principal facts and considerations which apply to the case, as to which a connected Memorandum or narrative from the Consul would have been desirable.

The "Fuen Santa," a small Gibraltar schooner, would appear to have sailed thence on the 23rd March, with a cargo of cotton, linen, and woollen goods, much of which was French property, and which seems to have had an "alternative destination," viz., to be smuggled into Spain direct, or by transhipment at sea, or to be conveyed to Oran; but there was no intention of smuggling it into the French (African) possessions, and this is admitted by the French Director of Customs at Algiers. (See page 16 of Consul Bell's No. 1.) Having (as alleged by "stress of weather") been driven into the Halibas Isles (a small French post on the coast of Africa), she produced there her original "manifest," which was apparently correct as to the cargo then on board, and which was duly visé by the French officers on the 28th March. She subsequently, instead of going direct to Oran or some French port, as she apparently ought to have done by the French Customs' regulations, transhipped eighty bales of her cargo, which appears to have been owned by French subjects, into Spanish vessels at sea, and this portion has since reached Spain. After doing this, she arrived at Mers-el-Kebir on the 8th April, and the master there presented to the French Custom-house officers, not the original, but some new or altered "manifest," corresponding with the then state of his cargo (viz., minus the eighty bales transshipped), and went on to Oran, where he arrived the same day. This manifest was duly visé at Oran on the 9th April. The preparation and presentation of this new manifest appears a transaction open to question; it apparently contained no reference to the transhipment. On the 10th April, during the temporary absence of the master, the Custom-house officers went on board, and obtained from the mate the original manifest (visé at the Halibas Isles), by which it appeared that the goods transhipped as above-mentioned were then actually missing and unaccounted for. Thereupon the French Custom-house officers seized the vessel, apparently on the ground of her having presented a false manifest, under some French laws or regulations, the text of which is not furnished, and which the owner contends do not apply to the case.

The seizure, however, seems to have been made (in effect) for violation of French Custom-house regulations; and on the suspicion of having smuggled the missing goods into the French territory.

It would seem that the French Custom-house authorities were disposed to settle the case by "transaction"* (i. e., I presume, by inflicting a moderate fine for the sake of regularity), being apparently satisfied that there was no real contraband act or design as against France; but the master and owner stood upon their rights, and contended that the seizure was illegal, and that France was responsible to them for all losses consequent thereon. It would seem that bail to the amount of 95,000 francs was demanded as a condition of her release.

The British Consular authorities, without contending that the seizure was altogether illegal, have exerted themselves to the utmost to explain and arrange matters, but without success; the owner's agent was advised by Consul Bell to submit, and come to terms with the Custom-house,† but he refused to do so. The French authorities (apart from the strictly legal questions) appear to me to have had a primâ facie case of suspicion, fairly arising from the master's conduct; but on further investigation this suspicion was cleared up; and they were not morally justified in detaining the ship, or requiring such an amount of bail.

Under these circumstances, I can only suggest that a friendly representation should be made by his Lordship to the French Government of the peculiar circumstances, and of the grievous practical hardship of the case to the shipowner; the missing cargo being now accounted for, being French property, and having actually arrived in Spain, and the French authorities having admitted that there was no intention of smuggling into French territory.‡

As regards France, therefore, it is apparent that the master has only been guilty of a formal or technical error, to be adequately punished at the utmost by a fine; and which cannot, in reason, require or justify the confiscation of the vessel, or her detention until bail or security in 95,000 francs is given for her, even if this course should be technically warranted by law. This should, in my opinion, be pressed on the French Government by Earl Cowley, with a reserva-

Bill to be presented to Congress providing for the establishment of naval depôts on Lakes Michigan, Erie, and Ontario.

Doctors' Commons, June 6, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th May ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 314, May 8), reporting a conversation which his Lordship had had with Mr. Seward, relative to a Bill which had been prepared for presentation to Congress by the Select Committee on River and Lake Defences, which provides for the establishment of naval depôts on Lakes Michigan, Erie, and Ontario, and requested that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the bearing, on such Bill, of the Treaty engagements between Great Britain and the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the same into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That no copy of the Bill in question for the establishment of Naval Depôts on Lakes Michigan, Erie, and Ontario, is with the papers; and that as regards Lord Lyons' suggestion that "such naval establishments on the lakes would be inconsistent with Treaty stipulations" (which does not seem to have been disputed by Mr. Seward), we must observe that the only document to which we are referred, on this head, is the Proclamation of President Monroe of the 28th April, 1818, which recites that an arrangement was entered into at Washington in April 1817, between Mr. Rush (at that time acting as Secretary for the Department of State of the United States), for and on behalf of the Government of the United States, and the Right Honourable Charles Bagot (His Britannic Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary), for and on behalf of His Britannic Majesty; which arrangement is in the words following:—

"The naval force to be maintained upon the American lakes, by His Majesty and the Government of the United States, shall henceforth be confined to the following vessels on each side, that is,—

"On Lake Ontario, to one vessel not exceeding 100 tons burden, and armed with one 18-pound cannon.

"On the waters of Lake Champlain, to one vessel not exceeding like burden, and armed with like force.

"On the Upper Lakes, to two vessels, not exceeding like burden each, and armed with like force.

"All other armed vessels on these lakes shall be forthwith dismantled, and no other vessels of war shall be there built or armed.

"If either party should hereafter be desirous of annulling this stipulation, and should give notice to that effect to the other party, it shall cease to be binding after the expiration of six months from the date of such notice.

"The naval force, so to be limited, shall be restricted to such services as will, in no other respect, interfere with the proper duties of the armed vessels of the other party."

The Proclamation proceeds to recite that the Senate of the United States have approved of the said arrangement, and recommended that it should be carried into effect, and that the same has received the sanction of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, acting in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, and then "makes known and declares that the arrangement aforesaid, and every stipulation thereof, has been duly entered into, concluded, and confirmed, and is of full force and effect."

The arrangement (as thus recited in the Proclamation) is confined to the naval force in national vessels of war to be maintained (in effect) afloat upon the "American Lakes," as therein mentioned; it contains no stipulation as to naval depôts or establishments on shore; and we are therefore of opinion that there is nothing in the arrangement, as recited in the Proclamation, which would render the establishment of such depôts, or the formation of naval establishments on shore, a breach thereof.

MEXICO.

French blockade of ports of Tampico and Alvarado. British packet-vessel not to be interfered with on captain declaring that he carries no contraband of war.

Doctors' Commons, June 7, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 63, April 21), inclosing a copy of a note which he had received from the French Admiral, announcing that the ports of Tampico and Alvarado would be blockaded from the 1st of May, but that orders would be given that the British packet-vessel should not be interfered with, on the captain making a declaration that he did not carry contraband of war; and to request that I would take this note into my consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I observe that the letter of the French Admiral Jurien to the British Plenipotentiaries is dated "Orizaba, April 20th," and states (in effect) that having taken measures to insure, as on and from the 1st May ensuing, the blockade of the ports of Tampico and Alvarado, he has given orders that, on the mere declaration of the master that his ship is not transporting contraband of war, the communication with the port of Tampico of the British packet should be free from any impediment whatsoever.

I observe, 1st, the suggested declaration of the master as to not transporting contraband of war, must be taken to mean "for the service of the enemy," although these words are wanting; and although nothing is said as to officers or despatches for this service, the British packet ought not to venture to carry either under the circumstances.

2nd. As to the notice of blockade. It is obvious that this letter is not a notification of any existing blockade, in the ordinary international sense; it is only a notice of the Admiral's intention to establish a blockade of the two ports named, at the future date indicated; and further that, on the 20th April, he had a competent force on the spot, and had taken measures to secure the establishment thereof, as on and from the 1st May then ensuing.

The special exception, stated in his letter, as to the British packet to and from Tampico, seems necessarily to imply that the Admiral's intention was to establish, on and from the 1st May, a complete blockade of the two ports named, and to enforce it by the ordinary methods sanctioned by the law of nations (including, for instance, the capture and condemnation as prizes in Courts of competent jurisdiction. and administering the Prize Law of nations, all ships and cargoes attempting to break it by ingress and egress), without any other exceptions; such a measure (especially as against neutrals) is founded on a belligerent right (exclusively), and in connection with the mention of "contraband of war," implies the existence of war between France and Mexico, at all events, as on and from May 1st, always supposing the Admiral's conduct to be ratified and adopted by the Imperial Government, and the measure to be practically carried out.

Unless as a "belligerent," France cannot, by international law, enforce a blockade of Mexican ports, at all events as against neutrals. The existence of a state of war between France and Mexico also infers and carries with it the right of France to prevent and punish by capture and by condemnation, in such a Court as above-mentioned, in accordance with the law and usage of nations, the conveyance by neutral ships of "contraband of war" to Mexico, for the service of the Government hostile to France, or, in technical language, "with a hostile destination" in relation to France.

In view of this state of things, and of the probability that the intended blockade in question will have been practically carried out as on and from May 1st ultimo, many serious international questions suggest themselves, which may possibly be susceptible of amicable arrangement, at least to some extent, between the Imperial Government and that of Her Majesty.

I am not in a position at present to offer any useful observations as to the bearing upon this matter of the Convention of London of October 31, 1861, between Her Majesty, the Queen of Spain, and the Emperor of the French, or of the recent events in Mexico. I remark that your Lordship makes no allusion thereto.

I observe that (in No. 125, to the Admiralty, dated May 17th, at page 131 of Part II of the printed "Correspondence relating to the affairs in Mexico," presented to Parliament by command of Her Majesty, 1862), your Lordship states "that the execution of this Convention must be suspended."

I observe also that (in No. 29 to Sir J. Crampton, printed at page 5, Part I of this Correspondence), your Lordship states that "certain rights on the Customs of Vera Cruz and Tampico have been secured to Her Majesty's Government by Convention" (I presume with Mexico).

Upon general principles, and apart from all the peculiar circumstances arising out of the existing state of things as between Her Majesty's Government, that of France, and that of Mexico, I would suggest:—

(1.) That this blockade, when actually established, should be formally and diplomatically notified by the Imperial Government to that of Her Majesty, in the ordinary form, and in such precise terms as that Her Majesty's Government may thereupon insert the usual notification in the "London Gazette."

(2.) That a reasonable time should be allowed and announced, for the egress from the blockaded ports, of British and other neutral vessels, with cargoes laden or afloat for lading before the actual establishment of the blockade; and those previously in the ports should be allowed egress in ballast at any time, notwithstanding the blockade.

(3.) That clear and formal notice should be given whether the French Government will in this instance adhere to what (I believe) has hitherto been its practice, viz., the principle of giving actual notice by visit and endorsing the papers of each and every ship not to enter, as a condition precedent to her capture; or how otherwise?

Your Lordship is aware that British and United States' Prize Law does not require this condition, and considers it sufficient to prove that the master (in effect) had notice of the blockade, even constructively, or by any sufficient means of knowledge, considering this as a question of evidence.

(4.) It should also be ascertained where the French Courts exercising prize jurisdiction will be established, before which vessels captured for breach of the blockade, or for carrying contraband of war to a hostile destination, will be sent for adjudication. These should be the "most convenient" ports in French territory with regard to their geographical position, in relation to the ports blockaded.

(5.) The definition of "contraband of war," especially as regards the communication of the British packet to Tampico, and in relation to possible questions as to passengers and despatches on board of her, should be clearly arranged and laid down.

(6.) The serious question of the effect upon Her Majesty's subjects settled in Mexico, of the doctrine of "domicil in the enemy's territory," as applied in Prize Courts, will also require consideration.

Upon these and other similar questions a prompt and explicit arrangement with, or a distinct announcement on the part of, the Imperial Government will be obviously desirable; more especially with the view of obviating beforehand (as far as may be found practicable) the risk of serious international difficulties in connection with the state of war existing, or imminent, as between France and Mexico, and its effect on the position and rights of Her Majesty's Government and of British subjects, ships, property, and interests in connection therewith.

UNITED STATES.

Case of the "Emily St. Pierre," captured for breach of blockade, but subsequently retaken by the master.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 7, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd June instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a further letter from the United States' Minister at this Court, dated the 28th May ultimo, in answer to the one which was forwarded on our Report of the 20th of the same month,* relative to the case of the "Emily St. Pierre," and to request that we would take the same, together with the previous papers,† into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we observe that Mr. Adams in this letter professedly "re-examines" the whole case of the United States in support of the original claim for the restoration of the vessel. He cites no new authorities, excepting only some further Judgments of Lord Stowell, when sitting (as we have explained in our former Report) as Judge of the Prize Court of a belligerent captor; he does not allege or suggest that, if the circumstances of the case had been reversed, the Government of the United States (as a neutral Power) would have had either the will or the power to do in favour of Her Majesty's Government (as a belligerent) that which it now requires at the hands of Her Majesty's Government; he does not refer to any one case in the nature of a precedent, or allege that a similar demand to that now made by the Government of the United States upon that of Her Majesty has ever been acceded to or even made by any belligerent upon any neutral Government either in ancient or modern times. Subject to these general observations, we proceed to offer some remarks upon certain more prominent portions of his letter.

Mr. Adams commences with observing, "I do not permit myself to imagine that your Lordship will deny that whenever the subjects of one nation knowingly and wilfully commit an act described by the highest authorities of that nation both as hostile, wrongful, and fraudulent, as well as in direct contravention of the laws of another nation with which they are connected by the highest obligations of Treaties to maintain friendship and goodwill, they do to a certain extent involve the Government of their country in a responsibility for that act, provided that Government do not, by positive measures of its own, manifest either the will to repress the commission of such an act, or the desire to repair it after it is done. It is bound to inflict its own penalty upon its own subjects, and not merely to leave the infliction of that penalty to chance, or to the possibility that the nation receiving the injury may have an opportunity of doing it, provided it can catch the offenders within its jurisdiction."

To this we would reply that the reasoning here attempted is unsound, and unfounded upon principle, precedent, authority, or analogy.

It is not, for instance, correct to contend that foreign nations involve their Governments in responsibility for wrongful and fraudulent acts committed by their subjects against friendly nations, unless they take positive measures of their own manifesting either the will to repress the commission of such acts, or the desire to repair them after they are done. On the contrary (as a general principle, and in the absence of express Conventions) each nation only assumes to deal with offences against its own laws; it does not carry into effect, or aid in carrying into effect, foreign law (i. e., the laws of other nations) as against those violators of them who may be found within its territory.

Thus, "France, Russia, England, and the North American United States have constantly, either by diplomatic acts or decisions of their tribunals, expressed their opinion that upon principles ~~of~~ international law, irrespective of Treaty, the surrender of a foreign criminal cannot be demanded."‡ Such a criminal has not offended against the law of the country in which he is found; and that country is not bound to take notice of his having violated a foreign law; nor, therefore, pari ratione, are neutral nations bound to punish their subjects for offences committed only against the laws of war as enforced by belligerents, or to restore property rescued by them from their "captors." Mr. Adams refers to no instance where this has ever done; et non adhuc placuit gentibus.

Another familiar illustration of this principle is the notorious fact that one nation takes no notice of offences either begun, or committed, or carried out and concluded within its territory against the fiscal laws of other nations; it lends such nations no aid in enforcing these laws, or in apprehending or punishing those who break them; it does not restore property brought into its territory out of a foreign State by smuggling; it does not interfere with property in its territory, or on board its vessels in transitu (as contraband), to be smuggled into a foreign State. It adopts the very course denounced by Mr. Adams; it incurs no international responsibility by tolerating their acts; it attempts not by any "positive measures of its own," to manifest "either the will to repress the commission of the act, or the desire to repair it after it is done."

The principle of the Foreign Enlistment Act (to which Mr. Adams refers) is broadly distinguishable from and a plain exception to that which is here stated. Attempts on the part of subjects of a neutral Government to take a part in the war, to make use of the neutral territory as an arsenal or a barrack for the preparation and inception of direct and immediate hostilities against a State with which their Government is at peace—as by enlisting soldiers or fitting out ships of war, thus, in effect, converting neutral territory into a hostile post or depôt, in order to carry on hostilities therefrom—have an obvious tendency to involve any neutral Government which tolerates them in the war; if unchecked, they might imply at least an indirect participation in hostile acts, and are therefore, consistently, treated by the Government as offences against the public policy and safety of the neutral State which may be thereby implicated. These acts are widely different from such offences against the laws of war exclusively, as attempts by merchant-ships to break blockade, or even the rescue of an individual ship from her prize crew.

Not only, therefore, in the case of neutrals in war, but in all cases falling within the same general principle, the nation to whom the so-called "offenders" belong, adopts towards other nations who may suffer by their acts, precisely the conduct objected to by Mr. Adams, viz., it "leaves the infliction of the penalty to chance, or to the possibility that the nation receiving the injury may have an opportunity of doing it, provided it can catch the offenders within its jurisdiction; and Her Majesty's Government, in adhering to this line of conduct, are therefore acting in accordance with reason, policy, and the common universal usage of nations in pari casu.

With respect to Mr. Adams' arguments as to the rescue being "a fraud" by the law of nations, it may be sufficient to observe that whether the act of rescue be viewed as one of fraud or of force, or as partaking of each character, the act is done only against the rights of a belligerent under the law of nations relating to war, and in violation of the law of war, which, whilst it permits such belligerents to exercise and enforce such rights against neutrals by the peculiar and exceptional right of capture, at the same time casts upon such belligerent alone the duty and power of vindicating such rights, and of enforcing such law, reserving to all neutral Powers their strictly neutral character, and not requiring or even permitting them to carry out "belligerent rights," or to enforce the "law of war," to which they are not parties, as contrasted with that of peace or neutrality, of which alone all nations, not "hostile," take cognizance, etiam flagrante bèllo inter alios.

As regards the conduct of the United States' Government in the case of the "Trent," alluded to somewhat strangely by Mr. Adams, it is to be observed that the flagrant wrong done in that case was done by a naval officer of the United States; the prisoners were in the direct custody and keeping of the Executive Government; and the Government of the United States had actually the power to deliver up Messrs. Mason and Slidell to Her Majesty's Government, which it wisely and happily did.

The "Emily St. Pierre" is not in the power of Her Majesty's Government. The law of England, as well as the law of nations, forbids its interference in the manner requested by Mr. Adams, and prevents it from taking the ship from its legal owner.

With respect to Mr. Adams' remarks (repeated in this letter) on the terms of Her Majesty's Proclamation, and on the construction put thereon by Her Majesty's Government, more especially as to the suggestion of such construction "detracting from the dignity with which he had regarded Her Majesty to be surrounded," it may suffice to say that Her Majesty's Government must reserve to itself the right of construing and enforcing it consistently with the Sovereign's dignity. Her Majesty's Government must entirely decline to advise Her Majesty (as suggested by Mr. Adams) to visit the act in question with some "mark of Her Majesty's righteous indignation," a feeling which Her Majesty's Government cannot affect to entertain towards Mr. Wilson, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, and which they have not any intention of advising Her Majesty to express. Any such expression would (even if attempted) be perfectly ineffective, and would, in its inevitable result, instead of affording any effectual reparation or satisfaction to the Government and people of the United States in this matter, only excite feelings amongst the British people towards those of the United States which their Government, acting in its strictly neutral character, particularly desires to avoid exciting in connection with this or any other exceptional case of international difference of opinion.

Interrogatories to which masters of vessels seized for alleged breach of blockade are subjected in the Prize Courts of the United States.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 7, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd June instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Philadelphia (No. 22), inclosing a statement of the interrogatories to which masters of vessels seized for alleged breach of blockade are subjected in the Prize Courts of the United States; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations that I might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am not aware of any complaint having been made, since the breaking out of hostilities between the United States and the Confederate States, on the subject of these interrogatories; and I do not observe that Consul Kortright complains of, or directs attention to, any portion of them. I am not, under these circumstances, aware of the point (if any) upon which my opinion is desired.

They are of the same general character, but much shorter and less searching than those made use of by British Admiralty Courts exercising prize jurisdiction in war; and they do not appear to me to require any observations.

SPAIN.

Protestant worship compulsorily suspended by authorities at Seville.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 7, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 31st May last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 207), reporting the circumstances under which the authorities at Seville had compelled a suspension of Protestant worship at that place. He also inclosed a Memorandum drawn up in the Foreign Office as to the bearing of Treaty stipulations on the case; and requested that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship such observations as we might have to make thereupon, as well as our opinion regarding the extent of privileges which British subjects are by Treaty entitled to claim, of attending religious worship in Spain.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the first question for determination is, "What, if any, are the rights or privileges secured by Treaty to Her Majesty's Protestant subjects in Spain, as regards the exercise of their religion? and more especially the celebration of, and the attendance on, Protestant religious services on Sundays and sacred festivals within the walls of a British Consulate?"

In the event of the enjoyment of any such rights or privileges being secured by Treaty stipulations to Her Majesty's subjects, the question of their conformity or compatibility with the law of Spain will be comparatively unimportant, it being the duty of Spain, internationally, in relation to this country, either to provide by her law, or otherwise howsoever, to secure practically to British subjects the enjoyment of all rights and privileges to which they are entitled by Treaty. "A Treaty, when ratified, is obligatory upon the Contracting States, independently of the auxiliary legislative measures which may be necessary on the part of either in order to carry it into complete effect" (Wheaton's "Elements," part iii, cap. 2, sec. 7). In this country special legislation by statute is constantly resorted to in order to enable Her Majesty to give full and practical effect to Treaty obligations.

The Treaty stipulations on the subject are very scanty; but we collect from the printed Memoranda A and B (transmitted with the papers) that the XIXth Article of the Treaty of Munster, 1648 (between Spain and Holland), and also the XXVIIIth Article of the Treaty of Peace of 1667 (between Spain and Great Britain), are still in force as between these two countries; inasmuch as they have been renewed and confirmed by the subsequent Treaties of Utrecht, 1713 (Article I); of Versailles, 1783 (Article II); and of Madrid, 1814 (Additional Article I). If this assumption be correct, then we observe that British subjects in Spain are "obliged, with regard to the public exercise of religion, to govern and behave themselves with all modesty, without giving any scandal in word or deed, or uttering any blasphemies" (by the Treaty of Munster, 1648, Article XIX); and moreover, "that none of them shall be molested or disturbed for their conscience so long as they give no public scandal or offence" (by the Treaty of 1667 between Spain and England, Article XXVIII). It results therefrom (in effect) that the right to "the public exercise of their religion" is secured to Her Majesty's subjects in Spain by Treaty, provided only they govern and behave themselves with modesty, and give no public scandal or offence in word or deed. Considering the circumstances under which, and the mode in which, the services were solemnized at the Consul's residence (as described in Sir J. Crampton's despatch No. 207, Confidential), viz., with closed doors, and with the outside blinds of the windows shut, Spaniards not being invited or permitted to attend, and even German Protestants requested not to do so; and considering that the Spanish authorities had been previously informed of what was intended, and had made no objection thereto, we are further of opinion that Her Majesty's subjects at Seville did, on the occasion in question, in fact "govern and behave themselves with all modesty;" and that they did not "give any public scandal or offence by word or deed" They can scarcely even be said to have "publicly exercised their religion" under these circumstances; and the conduct of Señor Escosura, in threatening that if upon the following Sunday the meeting took place, he would cause the Consulate to be surrounded by a police force, and would place all persons there found under arrest, and at the disposal of the Courts of Justice, was unjustifiable; and, if carried into effect, it would have amounted to a breach of the existing Treaty stipulations between Spain and this country, and would have been a grave international wrong.

Your Lordship's question as to the extent of privileges which British subjects are entitled to claim of attending religious worship, will be best answered by reference to the above Treaty stipulations, which speak for themselves, and secure to Her Majesty's subjects in Spain the right of "publicly exercising their religion," provided they, in so doing, govern and behave themselves with all modesty, and give no public scandal or offence—as, for instance, by attending divine service in a Consulate, or in a private house, with the doors closed, and none but British subjects present, and after having given notice thereof to the authorities. No other observations appear to us to be requisite.

The state of things existing throughout the British dominions, and particularly at Gibraltar, with regard to the public exercise of the Roman Catholic religion (as described in the extract from the pamphlet or review "La Cruz," published at Seville in 1861, and transmitted with the papers), speaks strongly for itself, in favour of the British case, on the grounds of reciprocity and international comity.

As to inserting in the "London Gazette" a notification from the "Moniteur" of the French blockade of Tampico and Alvarado in the Gulf of Mexico, such notification not having been officially communicated.

Doctors' Commons, June 10, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th of June instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying copy of a notification, inserted in the "Moniteur" of the 7th instant, announcing the blockade of the ports of Tampico and Alvarado, in the Gulf of Mexico, by the French naval forces; and to request that, if this notice is sufficient, I would have the goodness to prepare, at my earliest convenience, the proper notification to be inserted in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the mere insertion of this notice in the "Moniteur" (a copy of which is transmitted by Earl Cowley) will not, in my opinion, of itself require or justify a "Gazette" notification.

A formal notification of the actual establishment of the blockade should, agreeably to the regular usage in such cases, be sent from the French Government to Earl Cowley, or from the French Legation here to your Lordship. I do not understand this to have been done.

If this is not actually done, or about to be done immediately, a suggestion, or confidential communication, may be given to the Legation here, or to the Government at Paris, to the effect that this is expected and required. This course was (I believe) followed in the case of the Turkish blockade of the coast of Albania (see my Reports of the 10th and 20th of April, 1861).

When a proper international notification is received (and not before), a "Gazette" notice may be prepared and published, in accordance with the ordinary and regular course in such cases.

To make my meaning clear, I would beg to explain that Her Majesty's Government cannot properly merely "copy the advertisement" from the "Moniteur;" but the Imperial Government must notify (internationally and formally) to that of Her Majesty the fact that this blockade is actually established, and thereupon Her Majesty's Government will publish a "Gazette" notice.

Points to be ascertained from French Government relative to the blockade of Mexican ports of Tampico and Alvarado.

Doctors' Commons, June 11, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th of June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acknowledge the receipt of my letter of the 7th instant containing certain observations on the subject of Mr. Wyke's despatch No. 63, inclosing a copy of a note from Admiral Jurien de la Gravière, announcing that the ports of Tampico and Alvarado would be blockaded from the 1st May last; and also stating that, with reference to those observations, and to my suggestion that it would be desirable to come to a prompt and explicit arrangement with, or to obtain a distinct announcement on the part of, the French Government on various points arising out of this blockade (as prospectively announced), he was to request that I would specify the questions which it might appear desirable that Earl Cowley should put to the French Government upon the various points at issue.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it will be obvious that, in specifying the questions which Earl Cowley should put to the French Government upon the various points at issue in relation to this subject, many considerations of Imperial and international policy and expediency will suggest themselves to your Lordship and his Lordship, partly depending on the tone, and (if I may use the word) the "temper" or "mood" of the French Government in relation to the existing, and constantly changing, state of affairs in Mexico (in French I would say, "leur manière d'envisager cette affaire en ce qui regarde l'Angleterre"), which may have an important effect upon the substance, as well as on the form or "style," of Earl Cowley's questions or communications with the French Foreign Minister. I cannot, of course, enter upon this delicate ground, but (subject to these observations) I proceed to suggest the most material points as they now occur to me; others may hereafter arise.

I will endeavour to distinguish between (1) Demands (i.e., points on which we have a right to insist by international law); and (2) Questions, on which we are ready to admit discussion, on which we want information, or may look for some relaxation of strict belligerent rights on the part of France in consideration of the very peculiar circumstances of the case as affecting British subjects and British interests.

Preliminary considerations.—Blockade, enforced against neutrals, implies and infers the existence of a state of "war" between France and Mexico; no French explanation can displace or shake this basis, or first principle, on which the whole rests. If France is not at war with Mexico she cannot exercise belligerent rights over us as neutrals; if she is, she may lawfully exercise such rights. Let Earl Cowley refer to "Pistoye and Duverdy," vol. i, p. 376 et passim, if the French Minister questions or demurs to this principle.

Hereupon arises—

Demand 1.—That France will strictly adhere to the "Declaration of Paris," April 16, 1856.

Hence it follows:—

Illustration 1.—The blockade is only binding when it is effective.

Illustration 2.—The British flag will cover Mexican cargo, not contraband of war, and when not breaking an effective blockade.

Illustration 3.—British ships may carry Mexican cargoes to and from all Mexican ports, excepting Tampico and Alvarado, bello non obstante.

Illustration 4.—British cargo will not be liable to capture (sed quœre to condemnation ("saisie") when captured?) under the Mexican flag.

Demand 2.—A reasonable time will be allowed, and notice of it given at each of the blockaded ports, for British vessels to come out, with all cargo, laden, or "water-borne for loading" (as in lighters, launches, or small craft), before the actual commencement of the blockade.

Demand 3.—All British vessels entering a blockaded port before the actual establishment of the blockade of that particular port may freely come out "in ballast" (i.e. empty), at any time during the blockade.

Demand 4.—That the French Government will, in this case, adhere strictly to its own law and well-established practice as to giving actual notice ("notification particulière ou spéciale") of the blockade to each and every ship, before capturing her for breach of blockade by ingress. (See Pistoye and Duverdy, vol. i, p. 370, and M. Molé's note, 17th May, 1838, p. 373; Hautefeuille's "Droits des Nations Neutres," vol. iii, p. 70, Note 2, p. 80, Note 1, and see p. 191.) And, if necessary, let Earl Cowley get the ablest French legal advice for precise authority on which this clear point of French prize law rests, which, in this case, is of such great importance as regards British interests.

Question 1.—In what "convenient" French "ports" will the French Prize Courts sit, before which British ships which may be captured will be sent for adjudication?

Possibly the French Government will renew its old and unfounded (or, at least questionable) pretensions, to send them before a French Consular Court, sitting in a Spanish or United States' port, or even in Mexico; if so, this answer can only be accepted by Earl Cowley ad referendum or sub protestatione. This point must be further considered, as and when requisite.

The port or ports of adjudication must obviously be "convenient," not merely geographically with relation to the blockaded ports, but with a view to the due administration of international law and justice by competent judges; and to the claimants having the means of competent legal assistance in conducting their cases before the Courts. I would (confidentially) suggest the principal town in the French West Indian Islands, whatever that may be.

Question 2.—What articles (especially those ancipitis usûs) (such as, e.g., lead, steel, sulphur) will the French Government treat as "contraband of war?" A list should be published as soon as possible.

Question 3.—How is the French Government disposed to view the peculiarly "hard case" of Her Majesty's subjects long domiciled in Mexico, and carrying on so large a trade therewith and therefrom? Surely (all things considered) it will be disposed not to apply rigorously to them the belligerent principle of the "hostile domicil" of a neutral giving him a "hostile character," with all its severe consequences of individual hardship and commercial ruin. (See for explanations and illustrations of this doctrine, "Kent's Commentaries," vol. i, page 82, edition 1851; page 74 of Post edition), "If a person has a settlement in a hostile country," &c.

N.B.—This may be kept open, and treated as being, to a certain extent, susceptible of subsequent arrangement, in view of the special circumstances.

Question 4.—What will the French Government do, require, or permit (so as to avoid collision and dispute), as to such (possible) contraband of war as passengers, letters, papers, and despatches for the service of the (Mexican) enemy, conveyed in the British packet to Tampico, especially if so conveyed optimâ fide, or in "honest ignorance?"

It must be borne in mind that there is high authority for contending that Post-office packets ought not to be molested for carrying even "enemy's despatches" in their ordinary course, and the master being ignorant of their contents. (See Note a, page 567, Wheaton's Elements, 6th edition; and see Hautefeuille, vol. ii, titre 8, s. 2, page 462, "Du Transport des Dépêches;" and see also Law Officers' Report in the case of the "Trent," 15th January, 1862, conclusion).

Suggestions to prevent differences with France relative to their blockade of Mexican ports.

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, June 11, 1862.

THE international consequences and questions which may arise in relation to the state of things existing or impending between France and Mexico are so important and peculiar, and of such serious consequence to British interests; and it is so desirable to avoid, if possible, all serious differences with France, that I venture (perhaps somewhat in advance of the strict line of my duty) to offer a few practical suggestions to your Lordship with reference thereto:—

1. Let my Report of the 11th of June instant (herewith*) be sent forthwith to the Admiralty, and the answer thereto when received from Paris, for instant (confidential) communication to the British Admiral in command in the Gulf of Mexico, and (possibly) to each Captain, R.N., on that station, and to Sir C. L. Wyke. Let each Captain be furnished with a copy of my Memorandum on Blockade to Admiralty, July 18, 1854 (printed); and also of the Declaration of Paris, April 16, 1856, and point out that this Declaration was agreed to since that Memorandum.

Let a British ship of war, the smaller her force the better (if her Captain has "brains" and discretion), be sent at once to Tampico, with orders to maintain a frank but friendly intercourse with the French Commanding Officer there; and to see that no wrongs or hardships are inflicted on British interests at the first "starting" of the war and blockade; and, in case of necessity, to warn and "protest," and report all facts with precision.

3. Let the ablest Advocate in Paris, familiar with international law (M. Hautefeuille, if possible), be retained, generally, as the adviser of Earl Cowley upon all questions of French Prize Law and practice.

4. Permit me (in confidence) to mention the name of Mr. G. M. Crawford, an English Barrister-at-law, No. 14, Rue de l'Ancienne Comédie, at Paris. This gentleman has been long and well known to me, and I have confidence in his honour, patriotism, and discretion. He is thoroughly familiar with the French language and law; knows most of the eminent French lawyers and politicians, especially of the "Opposition" or "Liberal" party; and may render great service by interpreting or communicating with them, even indirectly, ascertaining their views, &c., in case of need. I ought to add, that I have reason to believe that he writes French news regularly for the "Daily News;" I think also that he may not be unknown to Her Majesty's Legation in Paris.

Notice for "London Gazette" of French blockade of Mexican ports of Tampico and Alvarado.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th June instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me, in the absence of Her Majesty's Advocate-General, the inclosed despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (No. 793), forwarding a copy of a letter from M. Thouvenel, notifying the establishment of a blockade of the ports of Tampico and Alvarado, in Mexico, by the French naval forces; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and, if satisfied of the sufficiency of the notification, that I would prepare a notice thereof for insertion in the "London Gazette" of to-day.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me that the blockade of Tampico and Alvarado has been lawfully established by the officer in command of the French naval forces in the Gulf of Mexico, and that it has been duly recognized by the French Government at home; that it has been properly and sufficiently notified to Her Majesty's Government: I have therefore prepared, as directed, the notice thereof for insertion in the "London Gazette," which notice I have the honour to inclose.*

Government grant towards British Church at Nice. Payment of salary to Curate as well as Chaplain.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th ultimo, stating that a case had arisen at Nice which made it desirable to ascertain the true intent and meaning of the Act of the 6th Geo. IV, cap. 87, in so far as the same applies to the grant of assistance, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, towards the maintenance of British chapels abroad.

That the Act had hitherto been construed by the Foreign Office as limiting such assistance to a single church and to a single Chaplain at any one place; but in the case of Nice a special indulgence was conceded, by which during the winter months the employment of a Curate to be paid out of the Church funds was allowed. That it appeared from the Memorial of the Nice Church Committee of the 25th of April last, that the combined salaries of the Chaplain and Curate amount to 580*l*. a year, being 80*l*. in excess of the maximum sum allowed by the Act to be paid to a Chaplain in Europe, and it would be for the consideration of the Law Officers whether that sum in excess could legally be paid.

* See "London Gazette" of 17th June, 1863.

That the case, however, of the Nice Chapel presented itself under a more general aspect. And it would seem that the sum collected on the spot, even without any contribution from Her Majesty's Government, would suffice to defray the whole expenditure of a single church and a single Chaplain; but that with the aid of the contribution of 200*l*. a-year paid by Her Majesty's Government, the Church Committee provide not only for the mother-chapel and its Minister and his Curate, but also for a chapel-of-ease and its Curate. That the question appeared to be, whether if assistance is sought from Her Majesty's Government under the Act for the maintenance of a chapel at any given place, the whole of the subscriptions and contributions raised from private sources at such places are not primarily applicable to the expenses of such chapel; and if they are sufficient to defray such expenses, whether, according to the spirit of the Act, Her Majesty's Government can properly give any assistance which is not required for the maintenance of such chapel, but which enables the Church Committee to set on foot also another chapel.

That another point was, whether a chapel may continue to be considered as a chapel under the Act, even though there may be no contribution from the Government towards its maintenance, and though there may be a chapel-of-ease attached to it.

That the question of the propriety of granting any aid to a chapel, the congregation of which, as that at Nice, is composed generally of persons in easy circumstances, collected together with a view to health or amusement, was one rather of policy than of law; but it would be desirable to know whether there is anything in the terms of the Act which might be construed to indicate the class of persons for whose benefit Government assistance in the maintenance of a chapel is more especially sought to be provided.

That with this general indication of the information sought to be elicited you were by Earl Russell's directions to transmit to me the whole of the correspondence relating to the Nice Church, and to request that I would prepare a case, and submit it to the Law Officers of the Crown for their consideration and opinion.

In obedience to Earl Russell's directions I submitted a case to the Law Officers of the Crown for their opinion accordingly, and have the honour to transmit the same herewith, with their opinion thereon.

Case for the Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown respecting the British Church at Nice, and the Act of Parliament, 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87.

The Queen's Proctor received the following letter from the Foreign Office:—

"Foreign Office, May 7, 1862.

"Sir,

"A CASE has arisen at Nice which makes it desirable to ascertain the true intent and meaning of the Act of the 6th Geo. IV, cap. 87, in so far as the same applies to the grant of assistance on the part of Her Majesty's Government towards the maintenance of British chapels abroad.

(Signed) "E. HAMMOND."

The origin and history of the church at Nice, so far as they bear on its present position, are as follows:—

The British residents at Nice in 1820, desirous of procuring the services of a Minister of the Church of England, applied, through the Consul, to the Sardinian Government, for permission to build a place of worship. This permission was with some difficulty obtained, on the understanding that the building should have no outward appearance of a church.

Accordingly sums were subscribed for this purpose by individuals on the spot, and by other persons resident in England.

The amount raised was applied to the purchase of a plot of ground and the erection of a building thereon.

In deference to the parties in England who had contributed part of the funds, the chief management of the establishment, and the right of nominating a clergyman, were assigned by the then residents to a certain number of the before-mentioned persons in England, who were, conjointly with Her Majesty's Minister at Turin, to be trustees under a deed for administering the Church affairs at Nice.

The deed of trust, not having been regularly executed, only one of the parties, the Rev. Mr. Obins, acted, and he nominated the clergyman who went to Nice.

The title to the ground upon which the church was built was vested in the names of the parties who were to be joined in the trust.

These arrangements, however, occasioned constant disputes and misunderstandings among the British residents, many of whom became domiciled at Nice since the building of the church, but who, as subscribers to the current expenses, claimed a right to part management in Church affairs. The arrangement, nevertheless, remained in force until 1835.

In that year Her Majesty's Government were asked for the usual support under the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, under the following circumstances:—

The Sardinian Government, fearful lest an indiscriminate appointment of Protestant clergymen would lead to an attempt to interfere with the religion of the country, decided that no British Chaplain should be allowed to officiate unless he received his appointment from Her Majesty's Government.

Her Majesty's Government have accordingly appointed the Chaplains from time to time, in accordance with the provisions of the Act of Parliament on the recommendation of the Bishop of London, in whom the nomination of the chaplaincy has been vested for ever, at the request of the British residents at Nice, in order to put an end to the disputes and misunderstandings amongst them.

In the year 1836 Her Majesty's Government commenced an annual grant of 100*l.* in aid of the Church establishment, which continued till 1850, when an application was made to Lord Palmerston, then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, by Her Majesty's Consul at Nice, on behalf of the trustees of the church, for an increase of the grant of 100*l.*, on the ground that the remuneration awarded to the Chaplain was inadequate to his arduous exertions, and that they were unable to raise the amount of voluntary subscriptions sufficiently.

In 1852, therefore, Her Majesty's Government raised the annual grant to 200*l.*, which has continued until the present year.

In 1856 an application was made by Mr. Walbanke Childers, inquiring whether there would be any objection on the part of Her Majesty's Government to the Consular Chaplain at Nice employing, during the winter months, a Curate who should be paid out of the church fund, which was made up from the subscriptions of the residents and the annual contribution of Her Majesty's Government.

This application was submitted to Her Majesty's Advocate, who gave the following opinion thereon (August 6, 1856):—

"That under the circumstances of this case the remuneration to the reverend gentleman officiating as Curate appears to me to come fairly within the words, 'or for or towards defraying the expenses incident to the due celebration of Divine service in any such chapels' (6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, sec. 6), and it appears to me that it will not be illegal for your Lordship to consent to the payment of such remuneration out of the Church fund."

Lord Clarendon accordingly, on the 16th of August, 1856, notified to Mr. Childers his sanction to the payment of such remuneration out of the Church fund.

In 1858 an application was made to the Earl of Malmsbury that Her Majesty's Minister at Turin should be authorized to give his consent to the pulling down of the existing Protestant Chapel, with the view to another and more commodious one being erected on its site. This application was submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown, who gave the following opinion thereon (September 9, 1858):—

"That, having regard to the particular nature of the trust upon which Her Majesty's Minister at Turin holds the property in question, and to the present circumstances of the building upon it, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government may sanction the pulling down of the church without being satisfied that the co-trustees are consenting parties, provided there exists a reasonable security that the present building will be replaced by another equally suitable for the purpose originally intended.

"We think that, under all the circumstances of the case, a sufficient security for this would exist if a suitable plan for the new church were adopted by the Committee of English Residents, and a contract made, and a sum equal to three-fourths of the contract-price shown to be in hand, and available for the expesne of building.

"We think that if this be done, it will not be incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to require any further guarantee as to the money being actually in hand, or that it will be forthcoming when required.

"We may further observe that, in strictness, Her Majesty's Government have not assumed, and are not bound to incur, any responsibility in this matter; but we assume that inasmuch as it would appear that Her Majesty's Minister at Turin, for the time being, was appointed quasi ex-officio trustee of the property, the Government would desire to give Sir J. Hudson such advice as would be properly given to a trustee similarly circumstanced."

"H. McC. CAIRNS.

There being some difficulty in obtaining a contract for the new church, Her Majesty's Minister at Turin was authorized (with the approval of the Law Officers), to accept as sufficient security the estimate of the architect, instead of a signed contract as suggested.

It appears that during the long period (twenty-six years) Her Majesty's Government have continued pecuniary aid to the establishment, annual accounts have been regularly transmitted to Her Majesty's Foreign Secretary of State pursuant to the Act of Parliament, the last account showing a balance in hand of 395*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*; and the accounts themselves not containing any reference as to how the annual grant from the British Government was appropriated, the Foreign Office, on the 15th March last, applied to the British Consul at Nice upon the subject, and received the following reply thereto:—

"My Lord, "British Consulate, Nice, March 24, 1862.

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Murray's despatch No. 2 of the 15th instant, requesting information how the Government grant of 200*l.* a-year towards the support of the British Church Establishment at Nice is appropriated, and whether any part of it is applicable to the chapel-of-ease at Carabacel.

"In reply to your Lordship's inquiries I beg to state that the whole amount of the 200*l.* received from Her Majesty's Government has uniformly been paid to the chaplain, and has formed part of the salary of 500*l.* annually voted to him by the public meetings held on the 31st of December of each year.

"The accommodation of the church at Croin-de-Mabre having been found insufficient for the increasing numbers of the congregation, the Chaplain, the Rev. Charles Childers, borrowed money, purchased land in the quarter called Carabacel, and thereon built a chapel, of which he undertook the duties.

"This ground and chapel have been consigned to the management of the trustees of the British Church Establishment, who take the pew-rents, pay the incidental expenses, as well as the salary of an extra Curate, whose services have been found to be indispensable, and are completely under the control of the Committee appointed to carry into effect the resolutions of the public meetings; and moreover, the sum received for the sittings therein are brought into the general accounts of the establishment.

"The ground and chapel at Carabacel will become a constituted part of the British Church Establishment, as soon as the money actually expended upon it is raised and repaid; the Chaplain in the mean time rendering himself personally liable for the interest of the money borrowed, at 3½ per cent.—which interest, however, Mr. Childers receives in the shape of rent, to the same amount—the chapel being hired year by year under authority of votes of the qualified subscribers at the annual public meetings.

"As the Chaplain's salary cannot be increased beyond what it previously was, namely, 500*l.* a-year, and he receives as hire for the use of the Carabacel Chapel the bare interest of the money borrowed, for which he is personally responsible, and is bound to keep the chapel in proper repair, the Chaplain is far from deriving any emolument from this chapel, and, in fact, has incurred considerable expense, which has been defrayed by him.

"The reason why so large a balance generally remains in the Treasurer's hands on the 1st of January is, that the seats of both the church and the chapel are let by the season, which extends from October to May, a very large proportion of which is paid for in November and December.

"It follows that in December the Treasurer must be provided with a sufficient sum of money to meet nearly the whole of the expenses of the ensuing nine months, both of the church and chapel, including the salaries of the Chaplain and Curates.

"If the accounts could be made up from the 1st of October to the 30th of September, instead of from the 1st of January to the 31st of December of each year, the balance in hand would appear trifling, showing the necessity of Government aid in this very important establishment."

The above reply, tending to confirm the doubt which Lord Russell entertained of the legality of making any further grant under the Act, which his Lordship considered contemplates assistance being rendered by the Government to one Chaplain and one church (at Nice there being now three clergymen and two churches), and that, inasmuch as the Act specifies that not more than 500*l.* a-year shall be given for clerical assistance, his Lordship determined to withdraw the Government support from the Church Establishment.

Extract of a Despatch from the Foreign Office, dated the 17*th April*, 1862, withdrawing Government aid.

"Under these circumstances Lord Russell desires me to state that he must in future withdraw the Government support to the Church Establishment at Nice, which can no longer be placed under the Act above-mentioned,* and from all official connection with which you will immediately abstain.

"His Lordship, however, feels himself bound to make the grant previously promised for the year past, but must necessarily limit the grant to 198*l.*, inasmuch as you distinctly state that the amount of the grant will be paid to the Rev. Mr. Childers, who, having already received 302*l.*, cannot by law receive a total amount exceeding 500*l.*"

The above despatch having been communicated to the Trustees and Treasurer of the British Church at Nice, they addressed the following Memorial to Earl Russell:—

"To the Right Honourable the Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

"My Lord, "Nice, April 25, 1862.

"Mr. Consul La Croix has communicated to us the purport of your Lordship's despatch of the 17th instant, in reply to his of the 24th of March, in which you intimate your intention to withdraw from the Church Establishment at Nice the Government support and protection it has hitherto enjoyed from being placed under the 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87; as also you desire that he (the Consul) shall henceforth abstain from all official connection with the same.

"As the Trustees and Treasurer of the said Church elected by the body of qualified subscribers to be a Committee of Management of the Church Establishment under the above-named Act, and the Regulations of the Secretary of State based thereon, and as the only parties authorized to act in this matter, we beg respectfully to address your Lordship, in the name and on the behalf of the British community at Nice, and, we may add, in the high interests of religion.

"In doing so we would earnestly solicit your patient consideration of the facts which it is our duty to lay before you in detail, even at the risk of encroaching longer than we desire on your time.

"The Consular Chaplaincy of Nice has been, for more than a quarter of a century, under the protection and receiving the pecuniary aid of the British Government. In the year 1843 the Rev. Charles Childers was appointed Chaplain, on the nomination of the Bishop of London, by Lord Aberdeen, then Foreign Secretary, with an annual grant from Government of 100*l.*, which, in the year 1850 was raised to 200*l.*, towards the support of the Church Establishment.

"During the nineteen years of Mr. Childers' incumbency, and the twenty-six years in which the affairs of this Church have been administered under the Act above-mentioned, the accounts have been regularly forwarded to the Foreign Office to the entire satisfaction of your Lordship and your predecessors, all the requirements of the Act and Regulations have been undeviatingly fulfilled, and no word of censure or dissatisfaction has ever been addressed by any in authority to the local managers of the Church, nor to the Chaplain, whose blameless character and indefatigable labours commanded the respect and regard of his congregation.

* 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87.

1862

"The reason assigned for thus suddenly and unexpectedly depriving the Church establishment at Nice of the aid and support which it has so long enjoyed, appears to be a doubt in your Lordship's mind as to the legality of making any further grant under the Act above named.

"That Act we understand your Lordship regards as contemplating assistance being rendered by Government to only one Chaplain and one Church, and this only in cases where the whole amount paid for clerical duties does not exceed 500*l.*, while at Nice these conditions appear to you not to be fulfilled.

"We are not surprised that the mention in the accounts of a church and a chapel, and of 662*l.* paid to three clergymen, should have attracted your Lordship's notice, and we avail ourselves of this opportunity of submitting an explanation of the same; nor can we doubt that, when the real facts of the case are laid before you in all the simplicity of truth, you will perceive that nothing has been intentionally done in opposition to the Act of Parliament, and will be willing to meet the anxious desire of the British community here, by continuing to our one church and Chaplain the support and protection which they have so long enjoyed, and under which they have proved an incalculable blessing to thousands of British subjects visiting Nice.

"We frankly admit that we are ourselves to blame for having, however unintentionally, misled your Lordship, by inserting, in the accounts transmitted to you, items extraneous to the establishment more strictly under the cognizance and protection of Government. We did so from a desire to fulfil to the uttermost every requirement of the Act and Regulations, and to err on the side of too much, rather than too little, explicitness. But, whatever may have been done in the past year which may deemed undesirable, your Lordship has only to name it, to insure its non-recurrence.

"During the last few years the British population of Nice has more than doubled itself, and the church accommodation, which was sufficient for the congregation in 1836, would be proportionately inadequate to the wants of the present increased numbers.

"In 1856 it was resolved, with the approval of the Foreign Secretary, to build the present large church, as a substitute for the original small chapel, and this has been done at a heavy cost of 5,000*l.*, raised by indefatigable exertions, without any aid whatever from our own Government.

"Up to the date last named the amount appropriated for clerical assistance had never exceeded 500*l.* to the Chaplain, including 100*l.* (or, since 1850, 200*l.*) a-year granted by Government.

"The duties of the clergyman had, however, increased to such an extent that it was physically impossible for one person to perform them. At the same time, the larger influx of visitors had augmented the funds in the hands of the Treasurer, and an application was made to Lord Clarendon (then Foreign Secretary) requesting that he would sanction our predecessors, the managing Committee of that day, in paying the stipend of a Curate out of the funds provided by the congregation, should they be sufficient for that object, without further aid from Government.

"The permission solicited was granted, and conveyed in a letter from Lord Clarendon, bearing date the 16th August, 1856, from which time the amount annually paid to the Chaplain and Curate of the one church has been 380*l.* collected as pew-rents and 200*l.* granted by the British Government.

"Your Lordship will not fail to observe that in allotting as above the sum of 580*l.*, our predecessors acted with the express permission of the Foreign Secretary, given (as stated in his despatch) in accordance with the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown.

"Nevertheless, should you consider that the additional 80*l.* ought now to be withheld, and that the Chaplain ought to have no pecuniary assistance afforded him out of the funds provided by his largely increased labours, your instructions for the future shall be obeyed.

"It remains that we explain the difference between the 580*l.* and 662*l.* entered in last year's account as having been paid for clerical assistance.

"The remittance to Nice of the Government grant of 200*l.* costs 1 per cent. for commission, discount, &c.; consequently it reaches the Chaplain as only 198*l.* net, and the Managing Committee, therefore, make up to him the difference by paying him the 2*l.* from the general account.

"The remaining 80*l.* for clerical assistance which appears in the accounts for 1861, was paid to the officiating minister at the Chapel of Carabacel for fourteen months, from November 1860 to 31st December, 1861.

"This was done under the following circumstances, of which we trust the explanation will prove satisfactory to your Lordship.

"At the time when a vast increase in the British population of Nice necessitated the erection of a new and much larger church in the town, the growing population of the suburb of Carabacel equally demanded a place of worship for the English in that distant quarter, but while the public were pressed for subscriptions for the new church, the collection of funds for a smaller chapel at Carabacel was found to be impossible.

"At this juncture, a benevolent lady volunteered to lend 1,500*l.* for that purpose, provided some suitable person would make himself responsible for the payment of a moderate interest till the capital should be repaid.

"It was under these circumstances that the Rev. Charles Childers, the Chaplain, actuated by the most disinterested motives, and with an apparent certainty of entailing on himself annnual loss, volunteered to bear the burthen rather than suffer the spiritnal wants of a large portion of his flock to remain unsupplied.

"The chapel was accordingly built, and opened for public worship in November 1860.

"To meet the wishes of the community, Mr. Childers, with great liberality (for by so doing he precluded himself from the possibility of pecuniary profit), offered to the Managing Committee of the Consular Church to make over to them the administration of the chapel and the whole of the pew-rents, in consideration of their paying merely the interest of the capital with which the chapel was built, or 52*l.* 10*s.* a-year.

"No condition was even suggested by him as to any aid towards the salary of the second Curate required for the duties of the new chapel. He proposed and expected to pay that, as he had paid various incidental expenses to a large amount.

"Nor was it till the trustees, after paying the interest above-named, found that they still had in hand a balance from the pew-rents of the chapel, that they could persuade Mr. Childers to allow them to contribute 80*l.* towards the salary of the minister whom he had engaged expressly to officiate at Carabacel.

"As the Managing Committee, who had accepted the charge of the chapel, received all the pew-rents, they felt it would be unjust not to defray the expenses so far as their means allowed, and with a laudable desire that your Lordship should be fully informed of everything connected with their proceedings they entered on one side the receipts of the chapel in the general account, and on the other the disbursements for the same.

"And here we would beg leave to observe that we had reason to believe that our proceedings in regard to this chapel were not disapproved by your Lordship; because the Minutes of everything done under the orders of the general meetings of qualified subscribers, under whom we act, were regularly transmitted to the Foreign Office at the close of each year, including all the details above given, together with many others of a preliminary nature, as to the proposed building of the chapel in 1858. Yet we received no intimation from the Foreign Office, nor from Her Majesty's Consul at Nice, that any of our proceedings were open to objection.

"A word would have sufficed to effect an alteration in anything which might have appeared to your Lordship to be out of course.

"The pecuniary aid of Her Majesty's Government is in no small degree promotive of the efficiency of the clerical ministrations of this church; but its protection, and the operation of the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, would seem to be indispensable to the very existence of the Church Establishment itself in Nice, which is one of the most-frequented and important of all the winter resorts of our countrymen; and we cannot too strongly express our regret that the mistake of amalgamating the two accounts—a mistake emanating only from an excess of desire to do right—should have given rise to misapprehension, and have risked the continuance of that aid and protection.

"While touching on this subject we would advert to an observation which, as we understand from Mr. Consul La Croix, he made in his letter to your Lordship under date the 24th ultimo, to the effect that the chapel at Carabacel might hereafter be united to the Consular church as a chapel-of-ease.

"We beg to remark, that while there were parties who spoke of this union as a desideratum, it was well known to those better acquainted with the facts of the case that such a union could not take place without the permission of your Lordship, as well as the concurrence of the Chaplain and the qualified subscribers.

"Now that it is intimated to us that the Act of Parliament contemplates the connection of the Government with only one church in each port, such an annexation cannot, of course, for the future be regarded even as a possibility while your Lordship's protection is extended to this establishment.

"No aid on behalf of the chapel shall be sought; and as far as concerns the accounts of the Nice church with the British Government, the chapel at Carabacel shall be as though it did not exist.

"We beg to submit to your Lordship that Mr. Childers has served his country under the appointment of Her Majesty, not only without censure, but with exemplary zeal, for nineteen years; that during that period he has commanded the esteem and respect of successive series of visitors, from whom he has on various occasions received substantial testimonials of their high appreciation of his ministerial labours; that his domestic arrangements have been, for the long period of his residence at Nice, and are now, based on the expectation that the Government allowance attached to his appointment would be continued, as in all other similar cases, quamdiu se bene gesserit; that the expenses of house-rent and living at Nice have more than doubled since the date of his appointment; and that to displace him suddenly from the position of Consular Chaplain, and to withdraw the allowance which constituted two-fifths of his professional income, without the allegation of any fault or incapacity on his part, would be to cast, by implication, a slur on his character yet more painful than the severe pecuniary loss of 200*l*. a-year. Such a result, we are certain, can never be sanctioned under your Lordship's just administration.

"Nor will it escape your observation that the Consul and trustees, and general body of qualified subscribers, in whom has hitherto been vested the management of the Church Establishment at Nice, will be placed in a position of no ordinary difficulty, unless your Lordship see fit to restore to that establishment the protection and aid it has hitherto enjoyed; for on the strength of the 200*l*. a-year guaranteed by Government, and of the permanent character of Mr. Childers' appointment by Her Majesty, as Chaplain, we have actually contracted (as it were) with him to fulfil the duties of his office on a salary of 500*l*. a-year.

"After an exemplary service of nineteen years it seems to be hardly open to us to ask him to serve on a reduced stipend, and we have no authority to dismiss him; while, as regards the current year, of which more than a quarter has already elapsed, his legal claims on us cannot be ignored.

"The same remark applies to the Curate of the Consular church, sanctioned by Lord Clarendon's despatch, and to various other parties necessarily connected with a Church Establishment with whom contracts of minor importance have been made, and to whom we have incurred legal responsibilities.

"But the point which we desire above all others to press respectfully but most earnestly on your Lordship's consideration is this: that the withdrawal of the protection of Government and the operation of the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, will suspend the entire machinery by which the church and its affairs have been administered for twenty-six years, and will place the church and the whole English community at Nice in a condition of the greatest perplexity and embarrassment, such as we feel sure your Lordship has not contemplated and would never willingly allow.

"We are advised by high legal authority that the land purchased by the English in 1821, and on which they have lately, in reliance on your Lordship's continued aid and support, constructed a church at a cost of 5,000*l*., vests in a gentleman of ninety years of age, who has refused to act ever since Nice was placed under the Government, and in Her Britannic Majesty's Minister at Turin ex officio; that from the peculiar circumstances of the case, all of which, with the original deeds, we shall be happy to submit to your Lordship, no legal title to this valuable property can be made perfectly secure except through the instrumentality of Her Majesty's Minister at Turin, who will of course refuse to act except under the authority of your Lordship; that the fact of this property having been administered for twenty-six years by the qualified subscribers and trustees, constituted under the Consular Act and Regulations, which bodies have assumed and exercised the rights of the original deceased or repudiating trustees, is inconsistent with the introduction of any new managing or proprietary body, without the express action of Government, whether through the British Minister at Turin, or otherwise; that consequently the withdrawal of the establishment at Nice from the protection of the Act 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, leaves matters in such a condition that no right or authority exists, at this moment, in any one to sanction the expenditure of a shilling for the performance of Divine service, or for the repair or cleaning of the church, or any other object connected therewith, however indispensable, nor has any one legal authority to collect the pew-rents, or to order the breaking of the ground for the interment of a corpse, inasmuch as the church is left, by the withdrawal of the operation of the Act of Parliament, without legal owner, trustee, or managing body.

"From this statement your Lordship will see the apparently inextricable confusion into which the affairs of the Church establishment at Nice will be plunged, in case you should not be pleased to restore the status quo, as it existed before your despatch of the 17th instant.

"We are advised that it is impossible to exaggerate that confusion, the result of which might be to throw our costly new church, with the cemetery, endeared to many of our countrymen by the associations of forty years, into French Courts of law, and altogether to put an end to, or indefinitely suspend, the celebration at Nice of divine service according to the ritual of the Church of England.

"With this explanation we appeal with confidence to your Lordship's justice and to your well known consideration for the interests of Her Majesty's subjects, from whom the ægis of her protection and support is never withdrawn, after being once granted, without the most imperious necessity; and we earnestly solicit your re-consideration of the subject of your despatch of the 17th instant to the British Consul at Nice, and the restoration to the Consular Church and Chaplain of the privileges they have enjoyed ever since the year 1836.

A copy of the Act of 6 Geo. IV, cap. 87, is left herewith, and the opinion of the Law Officers is requested:

1. Whether the sum of 80*l*. in excess of the maximum sum allowed by the Act to be paid to a Chaplain in Europe can be legally paid.

2. Whether, if assistance is sought from Her Majesty's Government, under the Act, for the maintenance of a chapel at any given place, the whole of the subscriptions and contributions raised from private sources at such place are not primarily applicable to the expenses of such chapel, and if they are sufficient to defray such expenses, whether, according to the spirit of the Act, Her Majesty's Government can properly give any assistance which is not required for the maintenance of such chapel, but which enables the Church Committee to set on foot also another chapel.

3. Whether a chapel may continue to be considered as a chapel under this Act, even though there may be no contribution from the Government towards its maintenance, and although there may be a chapel-of-ease attached to it.

4. Whether there is anything in the terms of the Act which may be construed to indicate the class of persons for whose benefit Government assistance in the maintenance of a chapel is more especially sought to be provided.

Opinion.

1. WE understand that the Chaplain, Mr. Childers, only receives, in the whole, a salary of 500*l*. per annum, and that the sum here referred to (80*l*.) is paid not in augmentation of the stipend of Mr. Childers, but as the salary of an assistant Curate, hitherto provided out of the church fund by the Managing Committee, with the sanction of Her Majesty's Secretary of State, and treated

1862

(according to the opinion of the Queen's Advocate of 6th August, 1856), as part of the "expenses incident to the due celebration of Divine Service." We do not think that this is (as the question seems to assume) a payment to the Chaplain, within the meaning of the Act of Parliament, and it is not, in our opinion, illegal to make this payment, ultra the 500*l.* per annum to Mr. Childers.

2. This question, so far as it involves matter of law, and not of discretion, must be answered in the negative. Section 10 of the Act recites, that it is expedient to afford encouragement for the support of the churches and chapels "so erected as aforesaid," and both the chapels at Nice come within this description. There is nothing in the Act to disable Her Majesty's Government from contributing to the maintenance of a chapel, in a port or place in which there are more churches or chapels of the English or Scotch establishment than one, with separate funds for each church or chapel; nor do we see anything in the spirit of the Act to fetter the absolute discretion of the Secretary of State, under the circumstances here supposed.

3. We are of opinion, on consideration of the Act and of all the circumstances which it must be taken to have had in contemplation, that this question must be answered in the affirmative.

4. We find nothing, in the terms of the Act, to show that any particular class of persons is to be regarded with favour, or the contrary. Probably, in the exercise of a sound discretion, Her Majesty's Government (except where engagements have been entered into, or reasonable expectations have been raised) may consider persons who, without assistance, are not likely to be able to provide stated religious ministrations for themselves, to be those for whose encouragement provision was especially intended to be made by the Act. But, in cases in which the English residents or visitors may be wholly or principally of the more affluent classes, the assistance of the Government may, without impropriety, be given for a limited period, or on a reduced scale.

Right of President of United States to issue a Proclamation for the re-opening of the port of New Orleans.

My Lord, Temple, June 19, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th June instant, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 31st May ultimo, from Mr. James Haig, in which he alleged that the Proclamation recently issued by the President of the United States for the re-opening, under certain restrictions, of the port of New Orleans was inconsistent with the provisions of the Treaty of 1783, and contrary to international law; and requested that we would take the question thus raised by Mr. Haig into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this question into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the stipulations as to the navigation of the Mississippi contained in the Treaty of 1783 were, in our opinion, terminated by the subsequent war between the United States and Great Britain, after which those stipulations were not again renewed.

The Mississippi being a river, the whole course of which is within the territory of the United States, we cannot look upon these stipulations as forming part of the permanent territorial arrangements made between the two Powers upon their final separation. It is clear that Great Britain cannot have any territorial right or interest in the navigation of a river, on the banks of which no part of her own territory is situate.

As to preparation of Order in Council respecting British Consular jurisdiction in Persia.

My Lord, Temple, June 23, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Persia (No. 55 of the 29th April), suggesting whether it would not be advisable to extend to Her Majesty's Consuls in Persia the power granted to Consuls in Turkey in exercising jurisdiction over British subjects.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose copies of the Treaties between Persia and Great Britain, and between Persia and Russia; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty holds under those Treaties such jurisdiction as to admit of an Order in Council being passed under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, and, if so, whether a short Order, "authorizing the application of the Levant Order to Persia, as far as circumstances admit," would not be the best course of proceeding for the purpose of attaining the proposed object.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, under the Treaties referred to, Her Majesty does, in our opinion, possess such jurisdiction as to admit of an Order in Council being passed for Persia under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act. But, adverting to the structure and terms of the Levant Order, it does not appear to us that it would be a convenient course to attempt to apply that Order to Persia merely by a reference thereto in general terms, "as far as circumstances admit." We think that an Order in Council should be framed, with reference to the actual circumstances of the British Consular Establishment in Persia, and to the terms of the Treaty between Russia and Persia, which will constitute the basis of the jurisdiction to be exercised. So many of the provisions and Articles of the Levant Order as may be found applicable, having due regard to these conditions, may be adopted; but we think it would be likely to give occasion to difficulties and questions which had better be avoided, if the duty of adjusting the machinery of the Levant Order to the circumstances of the Consular Establishment in Persia, and of separating the applicable from the inapplicable parts of that Order, were left entirely to the Consuls themselves.

Terms of a Commercial Treaty to be arranged between Turkey and Austria.
As to whether Great Britain can claim from Turkey the same terms to be granted to Austria.

My Lord, Temple, June 23, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th May ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 227), reporting the terms upon which a Commercial Treaty is likely to be arranged between Turkey and Austria.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us a copy of the late Commercial Treaty between this country and Turkey, and to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would inform your Lordship whether, in our opinion, Her Majesty's Government can under this Treaty claim any terms but those which affect exports and imports by sea, and if so, whether under the most-favoured-nation clause they can claim from Turkey the same terms as those about to be granted to Austria.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th June instant, stating that with reference to his letter to us of the 26th of May, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit a further despatch which had been received from Sir Henry Bulwer, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 311, June 3, 1862), on the subject of the new Commercial Treaty between Austria and Turkey.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the construction of the late Commercial Treaty between this country and Turkey, we think that the subjects of Great Britain are entitled to the same rights, privileges, and immunities in respect of their commerce, whether by land or sea, which have been, or may be, granted by the Sublime Porte to the subjects of any other nation; and that the terms of the Treaty cannot be restricted to exports and imports by sea. And, if any terms are granted, or about to be granted, by Turkey to Austria, which are capable of being extended, on the principle of the "most favoured nation" clause, to the commerce of Great Britain, we think that, under that clause, such extension might properly be claimed.

It is desirable that we should see a full copy of the Austrian Treaty, when such copy can be obtained. In the mean time, we assume that its stipulations will be such only as are to be collected from the terms of Sir H. Bulwer's despatch of the 30th April last.

If this be so, then we think that, practically, no terms have been, or are about to be, granted by Turkey to Austria, which are capable of being extended to the commerce of Great Britain. Except as to the article of salt (with respect to which Great Britain has, by the XIVth Article of the Treaty of Kanlidja, consented to such a limitation of her rights as would preclude her from claiming the benefit of the proposed stipulation with Austria), these stipulations seem to apply only to direct imports by land from Austria into Turkey. Great Britain, having no land-frontier conterminous with any part of the Turkish dominions, cannot import any goods into Turkey by land, except indirectly, through other countries; and we think that the Ottoman Government would be entitled to consider all goods so introduced into their territory (whether by British or by any other merchants) in the light of importations from the conterminous territory (e.g., Austria, Russia, Greece, or Persia) out of which they immediately came, and not in the light of imports from Great Britain.

If Great Britain were ever to acquire any territory in respect of which she would have a land-frontier conterminous with Turkey, then we think that, on the principle of the most-favoured-nation clause, she would be entitled, during the subsistence of the proposed Treaty between Turkey and Austria, to import goods by land across the frontier so acquired into Turkey upon the same terms with those conceded by the Porte to Austria, with respect to goods imported into Turkey across the Austrian frontier.

Liability of British Government to make good defalcations of Consular officers who may have appropriated to their own use sums deposited in British Consulates in the Levant.

Temple, June 23, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr Hammond's letter of the 7th June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* relative to the liability of Her Majesty's Government to make good the defalcations of Consular officers who may have appropriated to their own use sums deposited in British Consulates in the Levant; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to rsport—

That in our opinion Her Majesty's Government is bound in honour and justice (all mere technical liability being, by the nature of the case, out of the question), to make good to depositors in the various Consulates in the Levant all moneys deposited, in the ordinary course of public and formal deposit, and which afterwards became the subject of private appropriation, or other defalcation, of Consular Officers. The various Consulates are the creatures of the British Government, sanctioned only by the Porte under Treaty; and under these circumstances it must be assumod that the depositor gives credit, not to the individual Consul, but to the Government whose Representative he is. In those cases (by far the greater number, it would seem) in which the deposit is a matter of legal compulsion or necessity, this is more particularly the case; the Government in such instances creating in the Consulate a Court of Justice, and acccpting there the deposit of suitors made in accordance with and in submission to the regulations of the Court. It appears to us, therefore, that, upon this point, Sir Edmund Hornby has taken a correct view in his despatch to your Lordship of the 29th April, 1862.

Having regard to the terms of Mr. Hammond's letter to us, we refrain from expressing any opinion as to the making of any allowance to Mr. Lane, or as to the adoption of measures, in the event of such allowance, for its appropriation in making good that officer's defalcations.

It may probably be thought worthy of consideration, whether in future and with reference to the public responsibility which we have above pointed out, measures ought not to be taken for speedy transmission of deposits to the Supreme Court; and also whether the security of third persons as bondsmen and the like, should not be required on the appointment of Vice-Consuls in the position lately occupied by Mr. Lane. These, however, are questions of practical policy, not of law, and as to which, therefore we would not seek to do more than throw out a suggestion.

Case of British vessels "Alliance" and "Gondar," captured at Beaufort and sent as prizes of war to New York.

Temple, June 25, 1862.

My Lord,

E are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a petition from Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Gerard, of Liverpool, praying for the interference of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of their vessels the "Alliance" and "Gondar," which were captured at Beaufort, in North Carolina, when that port fell into the hands of the United States' troops, and have been taken to New York as prize of war.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose despatches from Lord Lyons and other papers, among which was the protest of the master of the "Alliance," and to state that the case of these vessels, so far as they related to the refusal of the United States' blockading squadron to allow them to leave the port of Beaufort, was reported on by Her Majesty's Advocate-General in his Report of the 20th of November last,* to which he referred us; and acting upon that opinion, Lord Lyons was informed at the time that Her Majesty's Government could not properly take any further step in the matter.

* From Sir H. Bulwer, No. 718, October 24, 1861; ditto, December 21, 1861; ditto, January 6, 1862; from Mr. Lane, January 20, 1862; to Sir H. Bulwer, January 22, 1862; from Sir H. Bulwer, February 7, 1862; ditto, No. 115, March 16, 1862; to Sir E. Hornby, No. 13, April 5, 1862; from Mr. Lane, April 30, 1862; from Sir E. Hornby, No. 57, April 29, 1862.

But having regard, however, to the late seizure of the "Alliance" and "Gondar," and to their being carried into New York as prize of war, he was to request that we would take the case of these vessels into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government could properly interfere with the United States' Government to the effect suggested by Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Gerard, or in any minor degree.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken these papers into our consideration, and the conclusion at which we have arrived is, that although there does not appear to us to be any ground on which the seizure of the ships "Alliance" and "Gondar," or either of them, in the port of Beaufort can be justified, the circumstances are not such as to make it advisable for Her Majesty's Government to interfere, pending the investigation of those cases before the Prize Courts of the United States, and before the decision of such Prize Courts therein. When the legality of a capture depends on disputed questions of fact, and when these questions are regularly brought for adjudication before a Prize Court, it is not consistent with the principles of international law for the Government of a neutral country to which the captured ship belongs, either to decline that mode of investigation, or afterwards to make the case the subject of international remonstrance, unless the action of the Prize Courts should result in some manifest wrong. There have, also, been some circumstances of a suspicious character in the conduct of the "Alliance" before she entered the port of Beaufort, which were noticed in the former Report of the Queen's Advocate, and which constitute additional reasons for leaving the case of that vessel to be dealt with according to the ordinary course of maritime law, although those circumstances do not induce us to believe that any valid legal ground really existed for her capture.

The evidence afforded by Mr. Walker's letters to Consul Bunch of the 20th and 21st September, 1861, and by Collector Bell's letter of the 21st September, and Commander Hewett's letter of the 5th October, and by the inclosures referred to in those letters, appear to us to be very strong to show that there was no blockade of the port of Beaufort before the 6th or 7th of September, 1861. If so, it is clear that the ships in question, which entered that port on the 23rd and 28th of August, were not, in so entering, guilty of any breach of blockade, and there seems to be no ground whatever for imputing to them any subsequent attempt to go out in breach of the blockade, which was actually established on the 6th or 7th of September, and afterwards maintained. Upon this point, however, there appears to be some controversy as to the matter of fact. Captain Prentiss, of the blockading squadron, stated to Mr. Walker, on the 20th of September, that "the blockade commenced some time in June;" and Mr. Seward, not admitting that it began only on the 6th or 7th of September, appears to impute to these ships knowledge of a previously existing blockade, and an intention to run it, which might raise a question (depending upon the extent, nature, and causes of the intermission), whether they could or could not justify themselves by reason of an accidental and temporary intermission of such blockade at the time of their entrance. Our own conviction, derived from the papers before us, is, that no real blockade did exist before the 6th or 7th of September, but it is impossible to deny that this question is a proper one for the determination, in the first instance, of the Prize Courts of the United States.

We observe that Captain Prentiss also stated to Mr. Walker on the 21st of September, that he had special instructions to effect the capture of the "Alliance," "in consequence of her being engaged in the transport of guns and munitions of war from Europe to the Confederate States." If this accusation could be proved, with reference to the voyage on which the "Alliance" was engaged when she entered Beaufort, it would be a sufficient justification for the subsequent capture of that ship, and would authorize her condemnation, whether she was guilty of any breach of blockade, or not. But it seems clear from the evidence

(and, particularly, from the certificate of the Controller of Customs at St. John's, dated 13th August, 1861), that there is no foundation for this charge. We also notice that it appears to have been commonly reported in New York, that this ship was really owned at Charleston, or elsewhere in the Confederate States (see Consul Archibald's letter of the 10th of September, 1861, and Admiral Milne's letter of the 11th October). For this rumour, also, there does not seem to be any foundation. These accusations and suspicions, which appear to affect the "Alliance" only (while they may probably explain the true motives for the seizure), are also proper subjects for investigation by the Prize Courts.

Upon the whole, our advice is, that these cases should be very carefully watched; but that Her Majesty's Government should not take any other action about them till the decision of the Prize Courts is known.

Claim of Messrs. Armstrong and Gerard for losses sustained by the "Alliance" being warned off the port of Charleston in May 1861.

My Lord,
Temple, June 25, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th June instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 17th instant, respecting the case of the British vessels "Alliance" and "Gondar," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers as marked in the margin,* relative to a separate claim preferred by Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Gerard on account of the "Alliance" having been warned off the port of Charleston in May 1861, at a time when no efficient blockade of that port was in operation; and to state that the Petition setting forth the facts of this case had been transmitted, together with its inclosures, in original, to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, and could not therefore be laid before us, but we should learn from his Report of the 12th of April† the view of the case taken by Her Majesty's Advocate-General; and as the United States' Government denied its liability to compensate Messrs. Armstrong and Gerard, he was to request that we would take the inclosed papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears, from the protest of the master of the "Alliance" (inclosed in Lord Lyons' No. 356 of 1862), that, on the 27th May, 1861, the "Alliance," when about five miles off Charleston lighthouse, was "brought-to by the Federal cruizer 'Union,' and boarded by one of her officers, and informed that the port of Charleston was blockaded, and she was warned off."

Under these circumstances, we think that the question whether any claim can be established on behalf of the owners of the "Alliance" for the loss of her voyage to Charleston, depends entirely upon the existence or non-existence of an effective blockade of Charleston on the 27th May, 1861. And although we do not agree with Mr. Welles (see his letter to Mr. Seward of the 27th May, 1862) that the presence and action of the "Union," as above described, is alone sufficient evidence of the existence of an effective blockade of Charleston at that time, it seems to us to be primâ facie evidence, which justifies the United States' Government in assuming, in the first instance at all events, and until the contrary is shown, that there was such a blockade.

Upon the principle involved in this case we have to observe that, although a general notice that a whole coast is blockaded, is invalid and insufficient as to every part of that coast (whether actually blockaded or not) if there be not an effective blockade of the whole coast, it does not therefore follow that a particular notice given at the same time of a blockade established de facto at the port itself where the notice is given, will be thereby vitiated. We are not aware of any authority which can be referred to in support of such a proposition; and even if that proposition could be maintained, the utmost effect of it would be that if the same ship were afterwards met with by the blockading force while attempting to enter the same port, she ought to be treated as having received no previous notice of the blockade, and therefore as not liable to capture. The blockading force, although not entitled to make prize of her, would clearly have a right to prevent her from entering the port; and if so, we think it impossible to contend that a claim for compensation would arise against the Government of the blockading Power if she were prevented from entering, not by any subsequent interference of the blockading force, but by the mere effect of the invalid notice itself.

This case differs from that of the "Monmouth," which, when warned off Charleston, had an alternative destination to Savannah.

Request of Messrs. Tanqueray and Hanbury for facilities to obtain examination of witnesses at Madrid in the case of "Ross v. Green"

My Lord,
Temple, June 26, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers containing a request, dated the 6th June instant, which had been made by Messrs. Tanqueray and Hanbury, Solicitors, for facilities to obtain through the instrumentality of Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid the execution of an order of the Court of Queen's Bench for the examination of certain witnesses at Madrid in the case of "Ross v. Green," now pending before that Court.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that before giving any instructions in the matter to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with our opinion whether it would be right and proper to comply with their request.

In obedience to your Lordship's request we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, your Lordship may with propriety comply with the request contained in the letter of Messrs. Tanqueray and Hanbury of the 6th instant, in such diplomatic form as under the circumstances may be fitting. In the absence of Treaty obligation between Great Britain and Spain, it rests entirely with the President and other members of the Supreme Court of Justice at Madrid, whether they will take upon themselves the examination of the witnesses proposed to be examined, or will decline to do so. Upon this ground we presume it is that the Spanish authorities require that a "request" should be addressed to the Minister of State at Madrid.

Interference of United States' cruizers with British merchant-vessels in Gulf of Mexico.
Case of the "Circassian," "Henry Travers," "Lion," and "Florida."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should see from the statements contained in this despatch, that it is alleged that the boarding parties from the United States' ships of war have on some occasions refused to give the names of the vessels to which they belonged; and Admiral Sir Alexander Milne had, therefore, suggested that the name of the vessel of war by which the right of search is exercised, should on all such occasions be noted in the log-book of the ship boarded; and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, with more especial reference to this suggestion of Sir Alexander Milne, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th of June instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 3rd instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 352, May 23, 1862), containing further information respecting the search of British vessels by the cruizers of the United States in the Gulf of Mexico, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the papers previously submitted for our opinion.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to add that your Lordship understood that the owners of the "Circassian," the vessel whose capture is referred to in the despatch inclosed, intended to address Her Majesty's Government on the subject, and that when their communication had been received your Lordship would call our attention more specifically to this case.

Mr. Hammond being further pleased to state, by way of postscript, that since writing the above, the letter inclosed had been received from the owner of the "Circassian," in regard to the case of which vessel he was therefore now enabled to ask our opinion.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Mr. Pearson, together with a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 362), relative to the case of the vessel "Circassian," and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the papers on the same subject submitted to us in his letter of the 6th instant, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch (No. 385) and its inclosures, respecting the case of the "Circassian," and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those referred to us on the 6th and 11th instant.

We are further honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th June instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 14th ultimo respecting the interference of United States' cruizers with British vessels in the Gulf of Mexico, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 384, June 2, 1862), inclosing, with other documents, the sentences of condemnation pronounced by the Prize Court at Key West against the three vessels, "Henry Travers," "Lion," and "Florida," and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That before adverting to the facts of the various cases as to which our opinion is sought, we deem it right to observe, in general, that with reference to British vessels which become the subject either of capture or condemnation, or both, by the ships or Prize Courts of the United States, the presumption should always be in favour of the legality and justice of the belligerent proceedings. This appears to us to flow from the facts that the United States possess, as regards neutrals, the ordinary belligerent rights at sea; that the maritime war is carried on by regular cruizers under the national and acknowledged flag; and that Prize Courts are, so far as we know, regularly constituted, and properly presided over. Under these circumstances, it manifestly belongs to such Prize Courts to determine on the questions of legality of capture and of condemnation; and it is only in cases of manifest wrong and injury, showing an abuse of the belligerent powers and rights, that the Government of a neutral State can properly be called upon to interfere with the Government of the United States, in favour of their own subjects, whose ships or cargoes have been the subject of capture or condemnation.

With reference to the "Circassian," we observe that in his letter to your Lordship of the 11th June, Mr. Pearson, the owner of the "Circassian," apparently on further information, gives up the allegation contained in his earlier communication of the 6th, that his vessel, when captured, was in "neutral waters," and now describes her as having been "about seven miles from the shore" of the Island of Havana, at the time of the capture. With regard, therefore, to the place of capture no ground of international complaint can arise; three miles being the well-understood extent to which the jurisdiction of any country extends from its shores out to sea. In other respects Mr. Pearson corrects the statements of his former letter as to the whereabouts of the "Circassian" when captured, and adopts the description which is to be found in the log—a description which may be accepted as probably accurate. Havana would also appear to have been the immediate destination of the ship, and the voyage would, of course, have been perfectly innocent, if such or any other neutral port had been the bonâ fide final destination. If, however, faith is to be given to the document which has been delivered to Mr. Consul Edwards (see Inclosures 2, 3, and 6 in Lord Lyons' No. 385) as being a true copy of the charter-party, under which the "Circassian" was actually sailing, it is plain that her intent was to run the blockade; in other words, she was destined for a blockaded port. Reasonable evidence of such being the case would justify her capture, and legal proof, before a Prize Court, her condemnation. For, by the laws of war, a belligerent, having notified and established an effective blockade, is not bound to delay capture until a neutral vessel is on the spot, and actually attempting to break the blockade at any particular point of the blockaded coast; but, on any part of the high seas, may capture and carry in a neutral vessel, which is, in fact and intention, on her way to the blockaded port, and to violate the blockade, if need be. A vessel sailing under such circumstances can have no claim on the good offices or interference of Her Majesty's Government, even should the capture have been made and a condemnation ensue without the real facts coming to light. For it can only be on the ground of substantial merit that the subjects of neutral States can claim the protection of their own Government against the consequences of belligerent capture or adjudication. We may further remark that Mr. Pearson's statement in his letter to your Lordship of the 6th June, as to the draught of the "Circassian" and the capacity of the harbours in possession of the Confederates is hardly reconcilable with the true destination of the ship, as shown by the charter-party. For the present, therefore, and unless the matter of the charter-party be satisfactorily cleared up, we think that the owner of the "Circassian" ought to be left to the ordinary course of the Prize Court, and certainly ought not to receive any assistance at the hands of Her Majesty's Government. The legal proceedings and the result may, however, be watched.

We entirely concur with Lord Lyons' opinion (see page 5 of No. 352) in the matter of the "parole" (see Inclosure 8 in No. 352) improperly exacted from the two British subjects (Messrs. Burrows and Coleman) captured on board the "Circassian." We now find that the American Government takes the same view, and that the "parole" is to be cancelled.

With reference to your Lordship's question as to Admiral Milne's suggestion that the name of the vessel of war, by which the right of search is exercised should, on all such occasions, be noted in the log-book of the ship boarded, we have to observe that, although it is obviously the duty of the officer of a vessel of war, searching or visiting a neutral vessel in time of war, not to conceal or refuse the name of the ship to which he belongs if asked for it, yet we are not aware that there is any General Order or Regulation in force in Her Majesty's navy directing Her Majesty's naval officers to enter in the log of every merchant-vessel which they may visit or search the name of Her Majesty's ship to which such officers may belong, nor does Admiral Milne state that such is the regular practice or usage of the Royal navy when Her Majesty's Government is a belligerent. or usage of the Royal navy when Her Majesty's Government is a Under these circumstances we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government is a belligerent. Under these circumstances we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to apply to that of the United States to issue any General Order to this effect. The visit, or search, of vessels suspected of slave-trading, whether it takes place under Treaty or otherwise, is subject to different considerations, not being done by virtue of any belligerent right. The particular mode of visiting and searching such vessels is generally the subject of special national agreement (see, for instance, the confidential instructions agreed on by Great Britain and France on this subject), or is provided for by Slave Trade Suppression Treaties and the instructions appended thereto, or issued in conformity therewith. The attention of the United States' Government has, however, properly been called to the particular case of the "Amazon," wherein the boarding officer when asked by the master for the name of his ship refused to give it, with a view to prevent the repetition of such an irregularity.

We are further of opinion that, assuming the facts stated by Acting Volunteer Courthory, in his letter to the United States' Secretary of the Navy of the 4th March (Inclosure 3 in Lord Lyons' No. 297) to be correct, the capture of the "Lion" by the United States' cruizer "Kingfisher" was perfectly justifiable under the circumstances. To the subsequent condemnation of that vessel we will hereafter advert.

No further information is as yet forthcoming as to the "Southport," a vessel boarded but allowed to pursue her voyage, and reported on in our Report of 14th May, 1862.

In the cases of the "Dart" and of the "Amazon" (vessels boarded but allowed to pursue their voyages), Mr. Seward has promised Lord Lyons that a complete investigation shall be made without delay.

As regards the cases of the "Florida" and "Henry Travers:"—

In the former case we reported, on the 14th May, that no case for interference had then appeared, and no further information has been received until the account of the condemnation in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 384 and its inclosures. In the latter ("Henry Travers"), adverting to Consul Crawford's despatch to Lord Lyons of May 2nd (the only inclosure in Lord Lyons' No. 306), the capture did not, at the outset, seem to have been entirely without justification, or to afford any sufficient ground for interference by Her Majesty's Government.

As regards these two last-named vessels, the "Florida" and "Henry Travers," and a third, the "Lion," it now appears that proceedings have reached a further stage, and each has been condemned by a regularly constituted Prize Court of the belligerent by whose ships the captures were effected. We have read and considered Lord Lyons' despatch No. 384 and its inclosures, including copies of the sentences of condemnation of the respective vessels, and we fail to discover any sufficient grounds for the interference of Her Majesty's Government as regards any of the sentences in question. The "Florida" was condemned, with her cargo, as being enemy's property, and also on the ground that the vessel was on the way to violate the blockade with actual knowledge of its existence. The facts were for the Court to find; there was evidence on which to found a conclusion; and it is impossible to say that the conclusion arrived at is wholly without or contrary to reason. The law laid down in this case, with reference to the effect of the President's Proclamation as to "warning," &c., was also a matter for the Court, and the decision is not unreasonable or absurd. The "Henry Travers" was condemned as enemy's property, and appears to have been claimed by the captain for a person resident in the enemy's country. In the case of the "Lion" the double ground of enemy's property and intention to break the blockade was taken by the Prize Court as warranting the condemnation. The receipt for the purchase-money would not necessarily have affected the Judgment, as a question of its bona fides might have been raised. Whether an opportunity of producing this instrument as "further proof" was unjustly refused we have not sufficient information to enable us to judge. If it was, the refusal may be brought before the Court of Appeal, and unless it be so, could not in our opinion afford any sufficient ground for a remonstrance with the United States' Government, much less for any claim for compensation or damages.

Capture of the "Albert" for alleged intention to break the blockade of the Southern Coast.

My Lord,

Temple, June 30, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch and its inclosure which your Lordship had received from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 61, June 4), reporting the circumstances under which the British schooner "Albert" had been captured by a United States' cruizer for an alleged intention to break the blockade of the Southern Coast: and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch and its inclosures which your Lordship had received from Her Majesty's Consul at New York, reporting the circumstances under which the British schooner "Maria" had been captured by an United States' cruizer for an alleged intention to break the blockade of the Southern Coast; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the master's protest, in the case of the "Albert," not being inclosed with the papers submitted to us, we are unable to form any opinion as to the probable cause of the capture in that case; and although, if the facts are merely such as may be collected from Mr. Edward's letter of the 21st May, the case would appear to be one in which there was no legal ground for capture, and in which the vessel ought to be restored, we hardly feel ourselves in a position to advise Her Majesty's Government upon the subject without further information as to the history and ownership of the vessel, the place of and other circumstances connected with her capture, and the reasons for such capture assigned by the captors.

With respect, also, to the "Maria," no sufficient ground for the capture at present appears. But there are some circumstances on the face of the master's protest which raise a case for inquiry, and which may, probably, make it unadvisable for Her Majesty's Government to interpose any objection to the investigation of this case in the ordinary way by the Prize Courts of the United States. The "Maria" appears to have changed her register in Cuba not longer ago than March last, and no account is given of her previous ownership or history. If she was previously owned in the Confederate States (and the contrary does not appear), there may be primâ facie ground for suspicion that her British register was then obtained merely to protect her from capture, without any real and bonâ fide change of ownership, and this will be matter for inquiry in the Prize Court. It also appears that she was captured when sailing, intentionally, towards the blockading squadron off Charleston; and although, according to the master's statement, this was done bonâ fide, in consequence of stress of weather and want of water, it cannot be denied that this also is a proper subject for judicial inquiry.

The detention in prison of a portion of the crew of this vessel, who were not wanted for nor subjected to any preliminary examination, was, in our opinion, oppressive and unjustifiable. But on this subject we beg to refer to our Report to your Lordship, in answer to Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th June last.

Steamer reported to be fitting out at Liverpool as a Southern privateer.

Temple, June 30, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the United States' Minister at this Court, dated the 23rd instant, calling attention to a steamer reported to be fitting out at Liverpool as a Southern privateer, and inclosing a copy of a letter from the United States' Consul at that port, reporting the result of his investigations into the matter, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to make upon this question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if the representation made to Her Majesty's Government by Mr. Adams is in accordance with the facts, the building and equipment of the steamer in question is a manifest violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and steps ought to be taken to put that Act in force, and to prevent the vessel from going to sea.

The Report of the United States' Consul at Liverpool, inclosed by Mr. Adams, besides suggesting other grounds of reasonable suspicion, contains a direct assertion that the foreman of Messrs. Laird, the builders, has stated that this vessel is intended as a privateer, for the service of the Government of the Southern States. And if the character of the vessel and of her equipment be such as the same report describes them to be, it seems evident that she must be intended for some warlike purpose.

Under these circumstances we think that proper steps ought to be taken, under the direction of Her Majesty's Government, by the authorities of the Customs at Liverpool, to ascertain the truth; and that if sufficient evidence can be obtained to justify proceedings under the Foreign Enlistment Act, such proceedings should be taken as early as possible. In the meantime Mr. Adams ought, we think, to be informed that Her Majesty's Government are proceeding to investigate the case, but that the course which they may eventually take must necessarily depend upon the nature and sufficiency of any evidence of a breach of the law which they may be enabled to obtain, and that it will be very desirable that any evidence in the possession of the United States' Consul at Liverpool should be at once communicated to the officers of Her Majesty's Customs at that port.

Inequality of Russian duties on goods imported by land and sea respectively.

Doctors' Commons, July 3, 1862.*

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, therewith, a despatch which had been received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh in reply to an instruction which was addressed to his Excellency in August last,† calling his attention to the bad effects on British trade with Russia produced by the inequality of the rates levied on goods imported into that Empire by sea and by land respectively.

Question as to nature of instructions for placing British trade, as regards imports by sea, on a more satisfactory footing.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that he was at the same time to transmit to us the other papers relating to this matter,‡ together with a copy of the Treaty of January 1859§ between this country and Russia; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the nature of any instructions which should be addressed to Lord Napier with the view of placing British trade with Russia on a more satisfactory footing as regards the duties on goods carried by sea.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have considered these papers, and, although it may be very desirable, in the interest of the trade of this country with Russia, to induce (if it be possible) a change in the relative rates of duty imposed by Russia on goods imported into that country by sea and by land respectively, we are of opinion that there is no ground for contending that the imposition of higher duties on goods imported by sea, than on goods imported by land, is contrary, either to the letter or to the spirit of the Treaty between Great Britain and Russia. No differential rate of duty is imposed by Russia either on British imports or on articles of British manufacture, by whomsoever imported; and there is no stipulation in the Treaty which can be reasonably contended to have the effect, directly or indirectly, of obliging the Russian Government to put on the same footing imports by sea and imports by land.

The question a matter for negotiation and not remonstrance, as infringement of Treaty.

We should, therefore, recommend that, in any instructions which may be addressed to Lord Napier on this subject, the matter should be treated as one for negotiation or representation only, with a view to induce the Russian Government either to enter into new engagements, or, in its own interest, to adopt a policy tending to put the maritime commerce of that country on as favourable a footing, with respect to duties, as the overland trade, and not as one for remonstrance on the ground of any actual or virtual infringement of the engagements contained in the existing Treaty between Great Britain and Russia.

your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from the Acting British Consul at New York (Nos. 63, 67, and 71), relating to the treatment of the crews of British vessels captured for alleged cases of breach of blockade, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the papers transmitted to us in his letter of the 24th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the circumstances disclosed in these despatches appear to us to be of a sufficiently grave and important character to make it proper for Her Majesty's Government to address a serious remonstrance to the Government of the United States, with reference to the treatment to which the officers and crews of British vessels, captured for alleged breach of blockade, have been, and are habitually, subjected.

To detain such persons for the purpose of giving evidence, and even to subject them to preliminary examinations before Prize Commissioners, without giving them the opportunity of previous communication with their own Consuls, is not inconsistent with the usages of international law. But it appears from those despatches that British officers and seamen have been, under these circumstances, confined (in some cases without any necessity, for they were never even examined, and in other cases for longer periods than could be justified on any plea of necessity) in military prisons and common jails, and treated, while there, as if they were criminals or prisoners of war. For treatment such as that which the officers of the "Mersey" were compelled to endure in Fort Lafayette, the usages of civilized nations, and the rules of international law, afford no justification or excuse. The Government of a belligerent Power has no right to treat such persons, being the subjects of a neutral State, either as offenders against its own laws or as prisoners of war: the appropriate penalty of a breach of blockade, when proved, is confiscation of the ship, and in some cases of the cargo; but the subjects of neutral States engaged in navigating a neutral vessel cannot lawfully be punished, or exposed to personal ill-treatment or indignity on this account.

The despatches also contain evidence of a system of robbery and plunder of the private effects of officers and of common seamen belonging to the captured vessels, which cannot be too strongly reprobated; and we think it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government, in every case of this kind which is brought to their knowledge, to require and insist upon prompt and adequate reparation. It is inconceivable that the Government of the United States should lend their sanction to such disgraceful practices, or decline to make amends to the unfortunate persons who have suffered by them.

We have further to observe that, in the case of certain coloured seamen of the "Mersey," an attempt appears to have been made to get them out of the way, so as to prevent their evidence from being forthcoming in favour of the owners. This, we think, ought to be brought to the notice of the United States' Government. And we cannot help observing that, in this and in some of the other cases which have been brought under our notice, the capture of British ships, which seem to have been engaged in the innocent prosecution of lawful voyages, has been effected with such an apparent disregard of law and justice as to make it necessary to examine, with more than ordinary jealousy and vigilance, the proceedings, whether preliminary or in the Prize Courts themselves, with which these captures have been or may be followed up.

Interference of Turkish Government with a judgment given by the Mixed Court of the Tidjaret in the case of "Jovanoff and Missirie v. Ahmet Bey."

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received July 3.)

Temple, July 3, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir Edmund Hornby, Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 48, May 27, 1862), together with its several inclosures, relative to the interference of the Turkish Government with a judgment given by the Mixed Court of the Tidjaret in the case of "Jovanoff and Missirie v. Ahmet Bey," and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps which should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as we understand this case, a British subject, M. Jovanoff, with a co-plaintiff, sued an Ottoman subject, Ahmet Bey, in the Court of the Tidjaret, a Turkish Court in which the proceeding was competent, according to the Capitulations, in the presence of the Dragoman Casolani. The plaintiffs, in order to establish a payment of 4,000*l.* to the defendant (being the sum which was, under the circumstances, sought to be recovered back) adduced, and, after various discreditable shifts on the defendant's part, established in evidence, a written receipt under his own hand, acknowledging the payment of the money. The defendant still denying that he had ever actually received the amount, the oaths of the plaintiffs to the fact of payment were taken; and various other proofs were brought forward: and at length (see Sir E. Hornby's despatch of the 18th January, 1861, page 11), "the Court decided in favour of the British subjects, upon their taking a decisory or rather suppletive oath in the Greek Church of the Fanar;" in other words, judgment was given for the plaintiffs, on the sole condition that they should take an oath of the kind and in the place mentioned in the Judgment. This course the plaintiffs appear to have been quite willing to adopt; but, after one ineffectual attendance for the purpose, they were informed that they need not attend again, "as a different course had been determined on." From that time to the present the Judgment so pronounced remains unexecuted; and the Turkish Government appears to us undoubtedly to have adopted the responsibility of this state of things. They seek to re-open the matter, on the ground that the Court, "contrary to existing regulations, decided the case in the absence of documentary evidence by administering the oath to the plaintiffs." Now, certainly the "receipt," fully established as it was, must be considered as "documentary evidence;" and, according to Sir E. Hornby's account (despatch of 27th May, 1862), oral testimony is to this moment received in the Court in question. The reasons pointed out by Sir E. Hornby against submitting this suit to the decision of the newly formed Court of Appeal (wholly Turkish, it is to be observed, in its constitution), appear to us to be satisfactory; and, on the whole, we are disposed to agree with him that the case is one which calls on Her Majesty's Government to interfere with the view of the Judgment of the Court being allowed to have its effect, either with or without the oath, which the plaintiffs have always been willing to take; and also of providing compensation for the losses which the unjustifiable delay has occasioned to the plaintiffs. The ground now taken, that the Tidjaret is a "concession" (if by this is meant that British subjects have no rights with respect to this Court under the Capitulations), lends an importance to this case, on public grounds, which might not otherwise have belonged to it, and adds force to the call for interference.

Claim of Mr. T. M. Hilpern, a Jew, under British protection at Jerusalem, against M. G. Gelat, a Spanish subject.

My Lord, Temple, July 3, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Jerusalem (No. 51 of the 8th November, 1861), relative to the claim brought forward by Mr. Thomas Murad Hilpern, a Jew, under the protection of Her Majesty's Consulate at Jerusalem, for a debt of 156*l.* due to him by M. Gabriel Gelat, a Spanish subject.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a Memorandum which had been drawn up in your Lordship's Department dated the 2nd June ultimo, relative to the protection which Her Majesty's Consuls in Palestine are permitted to extend to foreign Jews in that country, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the degree of protection and assistance which Her Majesty's Government will be justified in extending to Mr. Hilpern in prosecuting his case before a Spanish Court of Law.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose further correspondence* on the subject of the nationality and birth of Mr. Hilpern.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that under no circumstances can Mr. Hilpern be entitled to look for, or the British Consul to exercise on his behalf, more than good offices with the Spanish or any other Consulate. He is not a British subject; and consequently he is not in a position to claim from the British Consul more than such favour and indulgence as he may be authorized by his own Government to grant. Other Powers and their Consuls at the same time, and for the same reason, are under no obligation to pay regard to representations or remonstrances coming from the British Consul on behalf of a person whom they are at liberty to regard as a mere stranger to British nationality. Such is the tenour of the instructions which Colonel Rose was directed to transmit to the Consular Officers under his jurisdiction in May 1847, and, under such circumstances, interference cannot in reason be carried further.

Any assistance which Her Majesty's Government may be disposed to extend to Mr. Hilpern in prosecuting his case before a Spanish Court of Law must, it follows, be of the same character, confined to good offices; such as obtaining legal assistance, endeavouring in a friendly manner to obtain for him a fair hearing, and the like.

Equipment of American ship "Nightingale" for Slave Trade at Liverpool, and subsequent capture on African Coast with 900 slaves on board.

My Lord, Temple, July 3, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers, as marked in the margin,† relating to the case of the American ship "Nightingale," which arrived in Liverpool in the month of October, 1860, from New York, with a cargo of grain, bread, shooks, &c.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that it would appear that, after discharging her cargo and crew, certain portions of the cargo which were required for the voyage on which the "Nightingale" was about to be engaged were re-shipped, coppers and other equipments necessary for a vessel about to be employed in the Slave Trade were taken on board, a fresh crew was engaged, and the vessel proceeded to the African coast, where she was captured by an American cruizer with upwards of 900 slaves on board.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to state that it would be seen from the letter and its inclosures from Mr. Adams, the United States' Minister at this Court, who brought the case of the "Nightingale" to the notice of Her Majesty's Government, that the slave-traders—who, by the vigorous measures recently adopted by the United States' authorities, have been prevented from fitting out their vessels at American ports—are now directing their attention to the port of Liverpool as a place of equipment. It had become, therefore, highly important to ascertain whether the laws of this country reach cases that may occur of attempts on the part of foreign ship-masters to equip their vessels for the Slave Trade in British ports.

And accordingly that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the papers relating to the case of the "Nightingale" into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether it would be practicable and advisable to take any, and if so what, steps against the parties in Liverpool who were connected as brokers, shippers, owners, or in any other capacity with this vessel; and further to request our opinion whether,—first, in the event of a foreign vessel in a British port being suspected of equipping for the Slave Trade, what evidence would be necessary to prove it to be the fact that she was so equipping; and second, if evidence is forthcoming, in what manner could a prosecution be instituted.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion the case specially referred to as having occurred at Liverpool is not one calling for the adoption of any proceedings against parties there under the Slave Trade Act, 5 Geo. IV, cap. 113. The facts stated do no more at the utmost than raise a suspicion that they must have known of and permitted what seems in the result to have been the true object of the equipment; and having regard to the actual destination of the vessel (the African Coast), and the character of the cargo as described in the Report of the Commissioners of Customs of the 28th November, 1861, we do not think that any proceedings against the parties so concerned could be taken with a reasonable prospect of success, and we could not recommend their adoption.

In reply to your Lordship's general questions, we answer that the equipment of a foreign vessel in British waters for the Slave Trade is an offence against British municipal law, and if proved would entail on foreigner and Englishman alike the penalties imposed by the Slave Trade Act above referred to. As regards the evidence requisite to support such a charge, all we can is, that it ought to be such credible testimony as would leave no reasonable doubt that the fitting out and equipment actually in progress or completed really were intended for the Slave Trade. As the evidence can hardly ever be other than circumstantial, it is not possible except in these general terms to describe its nature. We may add that the Act being highly penal in order to secure a conviction, the evidence would in all probability be required to be clear and, strong.

The forfeiture of ship and goods being the specific penalty attached by the Act to fitting out and equipment for the Slave Trade (section 4), the prosecution (or rather action) with the view to such forfeiture may be carried on "in any Court of Record in Great Britain" (section 51). Proceedings not in rem against persons implicated would be by ordinary indictment for misdemeanour in disobeying the Act of Parliament, to be preferred either at the Assizes for the County of the offence, or in the County of Middlesex (section 50). The proceeding to forfeit the ship is, in this particular case, of course out of the question.

Interference in favour of English creditors of Mr. Mould.

My Lord. Temple, July 3, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 23rd June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from Mr. Mackenzie, requesting the interference of Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid with the Spanish authorities on behalf of the English creditors of a Mr. Mould, who, it was stated, was about to realize a considerable sum of money in Spain. The previous correspondence in this case was also sent therewith, and a request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether any, and if so what, steps Her Majesty's Government would be justified in taking in this matter.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to add that Mr. Mould's case had already been submitted to the Law Officers, who reported on it on the 3rd of November, 1859.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as a general rule, it is not desirable that questions of property arising abroad between private persons, and involving no question between Government and Government, should become the subject of intervention by Her Majesty's Ambassadors or Diplomatic Agents in foreign countries. But we conceive it to be consistent with this general rule that, in all cases in which the laws or usages of foreign countries require, in order to the official or judicial recognition of authentic acts of the English Courts of Justice, that such acts should be presented through a British Embassy or Ministry, the good offices of Her Majesty's Ambassadors or Ministers may be accorded for that purpose.

Having regard, therefore, to the statement contained in Mr. Mackenzie's letter, that the Supreme Court in Madrid has refused to acknowledge any Judgment of an English Court not presented through Her Majesty's Embassy, we think that, in the event of Mr. Mould being made bankrupt in this country (and on proper evidence of that fact being laid before Her Majesty's Government), Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid may properly be instructed so far to assist the assignees under such bankruptcy as to present, with his official authentication, an office copy of the adjudication, under the seal of the Court of Bankruptcy; with a request that the Spanish Government would recognize the assignees, as having, by virtue of such adjudication, all such authority as, according to the laws of Spain, can be possessed or exercised in that country by assignees duly appointed in England under the English Bankruptcy law. Her Majesty's Minister may also with propriety state, that the effect of such adjudication in the Courts of this country is to vest in the assignees all the moveable property and credits of the bankrupt, wheresoever situate, for distribution among all his creditors, and to entitle them to sue for such property, instead of the bankrupt, in their own names.

Capture of the "Bermuda" and "Ella Warley." Complaint of Messrs. Adderley and Co. respecting the alternative given to their schooner "Time" to discharge her cargo or give bonds for it.

My Lord, Temple, July 4, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 11th June ultimo, inclosing copies of despatches from the Governor of the Bahamas, in which he requests instructions with reference to the circumstances attendant upon the capture of the steamers "Bermuda" and "Ella Warley" by United States' cruizers,* and also to the alternative given by the United States' authorities to the agents of the schooner "Time" of either discharging the cargo or giving bonds for it; and to request that we would take these matters into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answers which should be returned to the Governor of the Bahamas with reference thereto.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 18th ultimo he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches, and their inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (Nos. 365 and 405) respecting the complaint of Messrs. Adderley and Co. with regard to the restrictions imposed by the United States' Government in the case of the cargo on board their vessel "Time," and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration together with those already before us.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he inclosed, for our information, a despatch, and its inclosures, from Lord Lyons (No. 403), showing Messers. Adderley and Co.'s general connection with vessels running the blockade.

We are further honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 58 of the 3rd June) reporting the capture of the British steamer "Ella Warley," which case had been referred to us in his letter of the 18th June ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as regards the capture of the "Ella Warley," mentioned in Governor Bayley's despatch of the 13th May, and more fully in the letter thereto annexed of Messrs. Adderley of the 12th May, and again brought forward in Acting Consul Edward's despatch of the 3rd June, no sufficient information is laid before us to enable us to form an opinion as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the capture. The place of capture, described by Messrs. Adderley as "100 miles north of Abaco," of itself decides nothing, except, probably, a fact in favour of the captor, namely, the capture on the high seas, and not in neutral waters. So the alleged ownership by a British subject, and the nature and destination of the cargo, are mere general ex parte statements, fit and proper for the consideration of the Prize Court, upon sworn testimony and full investigation. In this, as in other like cases, attention may properly be paid, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, to the proceedings which we presume will be taken in the Prize Court.

The statement in Acting Consul Edwards' despatch relating to the plunder by the American prize-crew of such members of the crew of the "Ella Warley" as are British subjects, if well founded, appears to us to call for the grave remonstrance of Her Majesty's Government, and a prompt demand for redress. Upon this part of the case of the "Ella Warley," as well as on the detention in Fort Lafayette, we beg to refer to our Report of the 3rd July instant, on the subject of the treatment of the crews of captured British vessels by the American authorities, as well as by the prize-crews of the capturing ships. To that Report we have nothing to add on these points.

The only statement with reference to the capture of the "Bermuda," is that a vessel, supposed to be the "Bermuda," was taken in tow by an American steam-ship on the 27th April, in view of the light-keeper at Abaco, from which circumstance Commander Mc Killop infers that the vessel so taken was, probably, captured "within five miles of the land;" but, assuming the inference to be correct in fact, such a capture would not be objectionable as occurring within British waters, which extend to the distance of three miles only from the shore. We have, with reference to other despatches and papers submitted to us, advised more than once on the case of the "Bermuda," which vessel has been carried in for adjudication before the Prize Court; and, with reference to the captures of that vessel and the "Ella Warley," we are unable to suggest any particular instructions or directions as proper to be given to the Governor of the Bahamas.

The question raised in the case of the "Time" is one of importance, and, as it appears to us, requiring prompt attention on the part of Her Majesty's Government. The principal matter of fact to be ascertained is, whether the restriction to which Messrs. Adderley have been subjected is one that is universally imposed on shippers under the like circumstances, or was exceptional in the particular case of those gentlemen. If the latter, and if it is not sanctioned by the letter of any general law in force at New York, the requiring of the bond was unwarrantable, and formal representations should be made on the part of Her Majesty's Government to that of the United States, and full explanations required. Should it be found, however, that the letter of law so in force sanctioned the act of the Customs authorities, or that such act was done in obedience to the directions of the Executive, applicable alike to all exporters of coal, and for the purpose of preventing military supplies from reaching the Confederates (and it is to be observed that coal is an article ancipitis usûs, which may or may not be destined to warlike purposes), then we think that no such ground of complaint exists as renders it the duty of Her Majesty's Government to interfere. We would add, that the intercepted letter of which a copy has been handed by Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons, and which would seem to implicate Messrs. Adderley in transactions with Confederates by means of their ships and cargoes, ought not, in our opinion, to be allowed to alter the course to be adopted towards those gentlemen by Her Majesty's Government.

Request of Mr. Haigh to obtain a stay of the proceedings before the Prize Court in the case of the "Bermuda."

My Lord,

Temple, July 4, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 23rd and 24th of May last,* upon the case of the "Bermuda," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence with Mr. Haigh,† who claims to be the owner of that vessel, and to request that we would take this correspondence into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government ought to comply with his requests, namely:—

1st. To interfere with the Government of the United States to obtain, for the reason stated by Mr. Haigh, a stay of the proceedings before the Prize Court. And,

2ndly. To procure a copy of the entry about the seizure of the "Bermuda" which may have been made by the keeper of the Abaco lighthouse.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in our opinion Her Majesty's Government cannot with propriety accede to Mr. Haigh's request for an application to the Government of the United States, with a view of obtaining a stay of proceedings against his vessel, the "Bermuda," in the American Prize Court. If time be really required for the purpose of obtaining material evidence, and in order that all the facts may be truly before the Court, it is competent to the Court (and a part of its general duty) of itself to allow the requisite time; and it is quite beside the functions of a neutral Government to seek to control, or interfere with, the procedure of the properly constituted Prize Court of a belligerent. As we have had occasion to point out in other Reports, faith must be given to such Courts for proceeding according to rules of international law and justice; and the trust so reposed should be continued, unless, unfortunately, facts coming to the knowledge of the Government should lead to the conclusion that the Prize Courts set law and justice at defiance, and become a mere mask for the perpetration of wrong—a condition of things hardly to be looked for in any civilized State.

As regards Mr. Haigh's second request, we see no objection to Her Majesty's Government, if so disposed, exerting themselves to obtain for Mr. Haigh a copy of the entry (if any such shall be found to have been made) by the light-keeper at Abaco relative to the seizure of the "Bermuda." The admissibility and value of such a copy, and whether its contents would entitle Mr. Haigh to the opportunity of "further proof," will all be matter for the decision of the Prize Court.

band of war or other specified articles, as well as to vessels believed to be bound to Confederate ports, or laden with merchandize likely to come into possession of the insurgents.

Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 389, June 2), inclosing copies, taken from a newspaper, of instructions given by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to refuse clearances to vessels laden with contraband of war or other specified articles, as well as to vessels which are believed to be in fact bound to Confederate ports, or which are laden with merchandize of whatever description, in cases in which there appears to be imminent danger of the cargoes coming into the possession of the insurgents; and to request that we would take these instructions into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether there are any grounds upon which Her Majesty's Government would be borne out in directing Lord Lyons to remonstrate against them.

Lord Lyons' despatch No. 343, inclosing the President's Proclamation to which reference is made by the Secretary of the Treasury, was annexed for reference.

Restrictions of American authorities to trade between New York and the Bahamas.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (Nos. 364 and 404) respecting the restrictions interposed by the American authorities in the way of trade between New York and the Bahamas, and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, together with the papers referred to us in his letter of the 17th June ultimo, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That, so far as relates to the instructions given by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to refuse clearances to vessels laden with contraband of war, or other specified articles, as well as to vessels which are believed to be bound to Confederate ports, we think that there is no sufficient ground for any remonstrance. It is undoubtedly competent for a belligerent Power to protect herself, within her own ports and territory, by precautions of this nature; and so long as they are adopted equally and indifferently in all cases, without reference to the nationality or origin of any particular vessels or goods, they do not appear to us to afford any just ground of complaint.

But we are unable to understand how the refusal of clearances to vessels laden with ordinary merchandize can be justified, upon the mere assumption or surmise of some "imminent danger of the cargoes coming into the possession of the insurgents;" unless indeed there be reasonable ground for alleging and believing that the true destination of the vessels, or of their cargoes, is to Confederate ports. Under so vague and indefinite a pretext as this, any kind and amount of arbitrary restriction on British trade might be introduced and practised; and we think that Her Majesty's Government would be well warranted in remonstrating against such restrictions, as inconsistent with the Treaties now in force between the two countries.

With reference to the measures which appear by Lord Lyons' despatches of the 26th May and the 5th June last, and the inclosures therein, to have been taken by the Government of the United States, as to the trade with the Bahama Islands, we think that a distinction ought to be made between shipments of coal and other articles ancipitis usûs, the export of which may have been prohibited as contraband by general orders of the United States' Government to any places within certain geographical limits, and shipments of provisions, and other articles of innocent use, not prohibited or made contraband by any such general order, to the Bahamas, or any other part of the British dominions. The prohibition of the former class of shipments is public and general; it falls equally upon the shipping and commerce of all nations, and being justified in principle by the exigencies of a belligerent State in time of war, the most which any foreign Government can do on such a subject, is to offer reasons in the way of friendly representation, why it should be relaxed or confined within narrower geographical limits. The ultimate judgment as to the sufficiency of such reasons must rest with the belligerent State; and if they should not be deemed sufficient, the maintenance of the prohibition, even to an extent which may seem unnecessary for the objects of legitimate defence, cannot justly be made the subject of remonstrance, as inconsistent with the obligations of Commercial Treaties.

But we take a different view of the facts, as stated in Consul Edwards' letter of the 30th May last, with respect to the interference with ordinary exports of dry goods, plain and printed cotton fabrics, &c., shoes, medical drugs, flour and provisions, &c., to the Bahamas by the Custom-house authorities at New York. In the absence of any evidence that the destination of these articles was for the Confederate States, and on the supposition that the facts were consistent with their being truly and bonâ fide, as well as ostensibly, destined for the Bahamas, we think that such interference is contrary both to the letter and to the spirit of the existing engagements between Great Britain and the United States, and that it may very properly be made the subject of remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

The Commercial Treaty of 1815 between Great Britain and the United States did not originally extend to the trade between the United States and the Bahamas. But in the year 1830 its stipulations were by the mutual acts of both Governments extended to that trade; and by the Proclamation of President Jackson, dated the 5th October, 1830, pursuant to the Act of Congress of the 29th May, 1830, it was expressly declared to be lawful for British vessels from the Bahamas to import into the United States, and to export therefrom, any articles which might be imported or exported in vessels of the United States. This engagement is still in force; and any prohibition of or interference with exports of ordinary commodities, not contraband of war, from New York to the Bahamas in British vessels, is plainly inconsistent therewith.

Right of sons of British subjects born in Spain to exemption from military service in Spain.

My Lord, Temple, July 7, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th June last, stating that with reference to the Queen's Advocate's Report of the 11th of December last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed despatch from Sir John Crampton (No. 197) respecting the rights of the sons of British subjects, born in Spain, to exemption from military service in that country, and to request that we would take that despatch into our consideration, in connection with the papers noted in margin,† and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Sir John Crampton regarding the cases of the persons alluded to in Inclosures Nos. 6 and 7 in his despatch No. 197.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the views expressed in the Report of the Queen's Advocate, dated the 11th December, 1861, in accordance with which instructions have already (as we understand) been addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid; and upon the general question of the status of the children and grandchildren born in Spain of natural-born British subjects, we do not think it necessary to add anything to what is there stated

The particular cases of Lieutenant Arguimban and his son Mr. Joseph Arguimban, and any other cases which may fall under the same category, must (we conceive) be determined with reference to the domicil of the parents at the time of the birth of the children within the territories of the Crown of Spain. If, at the time of the birth of Lieutenant Arguimban, his father was not only a natural-born British subject, but legally domiciled in the British dominions, we are of opinion that Lieutenant Arguimban himself, although born in Spain, was, at the time of his birth, a British subject, owing permanent allegiance to the British Crown and entitled to British protection. If, on the contrary, his father was then domiciled in the dominions of the Spanish Crown, he became, upon his birth, a Spanish subject, and he could not be entitled to claim British protection against any obligations resulting from his Spanish allegiance, although, by an English statute, he may have been also entitled to the privileges of a natural-born British subject in Great Britain. In like manner, the status of Mr. Joseph Arguimban will be Spanish if, at the time of his birth, his father was a Spanish subject domiciled in Spain, or owing permanent allegiance to the Spanish Crown; but English if his father was then a British subject, with a British and not Spanish allegiance and domicil.

The circumstance of Lieutenant Arguimban and one of his sons being officers in the Royal Navy tends, primâ facie, to show that the domicil of Lieutenant Arguimban, if originally English, did not afterwards cease to be so; but, even on this point, it would not be conclusive if the residence of that gentleman has been, during a long period of time, in the dominions of the Crown of Spain. And we do not think that any length of service in the army or navy of Great Britain would be material for the purpose of the present question, if the allegiance and domicil of the person engaged in such service were originally Spanish.

We think it proper to add, that even in the case of persons owing permanent allegiance to the British Crown, who may be domiciled and resident in Spain, the claim to exemption from the military service of Spain cannot justly be extended to any services required for the legitimate purposes of internal defence only, and which do not involve any acts at variance with the duties of British allegiance.

We should recommend that instructions in the sense of these remarks be addressed to Sir J. Crampton.

Liability of cotton purchased by foreigners in Confederate State being destroyed to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy.

My Lord, Temple, July 12, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith two despatches from Her Majesty's Consuls at Charleston and Savannah,* inclosing copies of a letter addressed by the Secretary of State for the so-called Confederate States to a mercantile firm, relative to the question as to whether cotton purchased by foreigners would be exempt from the law enjoining the destruction of cotton when it is about to fall into the hands of the enemy; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That foreigners being the proprietors of cotton in the Southern States will have no ground of complaint against the de facto Government of those States, in the event of their property (cotton) being destroyed by the Southern Commanders, with the sanction of their own rulers, and for the purpose (really) of preventing its falling into the hands of the opposing forces. This is one of the liabilities to the consequences of war raging in any State within the limits of which the property of foreigners may happen at the time to be. At the same time, should the Confederate States hereafter attain to the position of a recognized and settled Kingdom or Confederation, the losses thus occasioned to foreigners might form a fair and reasonable ground of appeal to the equitable consideration of the authorities, with the view of obtaining compensation; and it may, therefore, be not unimportant to preserve the best and most authentic evidence of the true ownership of property which may be likely to be thus dealt with.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 402), reporting the circumstance under which it had become known that the United States' Government had despatched a vessel to the coast of Virginia to purchase cotton-seed; and to request that we would take this proceeding into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to its bearing upon the validity of the blockade enforced by the United States' Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the facts mentioned in the despatch of Mr. Consul Bernal to Lord Lyons of June 3, 1862, do not, as supposed by him, materially affect the questions of the validity of the blockade of the Southern ports, or of the legality of captures made on the ground of the violation thereof. It cannot, as it appears to us, be considered that the permission, or even procuring of the schooner in question (the "Reform"), to pass through the blockade, in order to obtain cotton-seed, amounted to a raising of the blockade. A succession and great number of such instances might raise and warrant the presumption that a bonâ fide blockade no longer existed, as such a blockade must undoubtedly be, if not universal, at least general and indiscriminate. But rare and solitary instances of indulgence or relaxation, whether for the sake of third persons or in the interest of the belligerent Government itself, cannot have this effect according to the rules of international law.

As to publishing in "Gazette" notification of French blockade of Tampico and Alvarado, there being no intention of establishing a blockade.

My Lord, Temple, July 14, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th July instant, stating that with reference to the letter from the Admiralty Advocate of the 17th ultimo,* inclosing for insertion in the "London Gazette" a notification of the blockade of the ports of Tampico and Alvarado by the French, which was to take effect from the 1st of May last, and the announcement of which had been published in the "Moniteur" and officially communicated to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for our information, a letter from the Admiralty inclosing a copy of a despatch from Commodore Dunlop dated the 30th of May, stating that the senior French naval officer had informed him that it was not his intention to establish a blockade of the ports in question.

Mr. Layard also stated that he was to add that Her Majesty's Government had received no intimation from the French Government of an intention not to carry out the blockade.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That inasmuch as it clearly appears from Commodore Dunlop's letter that the intention to establish a blockade of the ports in question has not been carried into effect, and (at the date of that letter) was not likely to be so, we think the proposed notification ought not to be inserted in the "Gazette." It will, however, be advisable to communicate with the French Government, in order to prevent the possibility of any misunderstanding on the subject.

Claim of Mr. M. Moss for compensation for arrest and ill-treatment by Japanese police.

My Lord, Temple, July 19, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 16th July instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 23rd of May,† he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,‡ a Memorandum by Sir Rutherford Alcock§ on the claim of Mr. Moss to be compensated by the Japanese Government, on the ground of ill-treatment sustained at the hands of the Japanese authorities; and to request that we would again take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government ought to take therein.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have further considered this matter with reference to Sir Rutherford Alcock's Memorandum of the 26th June last; and, having regard to the facts that, at the time when Mr. Moss's imprisonment took place, the demand made by Sir R. Alcock upon the Japanese Government was limited to the punishment of the chief offenders in the transaction, and that such demand was finally acceded to by the Japanese Government, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government cannot be advised to make, at this distance of time, any new or further demand upon the Japanese Government for pecuniary compensation to Mr. Moss.

We have the less difficulty in arriving at this conclusion, because it appears, from the reasons assigned by Sir R. Alcock for the course which he pursued (and which reasons, having regard to the peculiar circumstances in which he was placed, appeared to us sufficient to justify that course), that the ambiguous and indeterminate language of the Treaty might have furnished the Japanese Government with plausible grounds for maintaining that their own jurisdiction was not excluded in that particular case; and we should think it extremely unadvisable to raise, without necessity, and under circumstances of disadvantage, any question of this kind. The treatment of Mr. Moss, although very barbarous, was probably such as a semi-barbarous people cannot be expected to view in the same light as that in which it is properly regarded by ourselves; and the injury having been one of a personal rather than a pecuniary nature (for this question is not to be mixed up with that of the loss afterwards sustained by Mr. Moss, by reason of his subsequent deportation from Japan), we think it impossible to say that, having originally been treated as a case for the punishment of the offending parties, and not for pecuniary reparation, it ought now to be revived for the latter purpose.

License to enable Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn to accept naval and military service under Chinese Government, to fit out and equip vessels for warlike purposes in China, and to enlist British subjects to serve in naval and military service.

My Lord, Temple, July 21, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th July instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Lay, applying for the Queen's license to enable him and Captain Osborn, R.N.:—

1. To accept naval and military service under the Chinese Government.
2. To fit out and equip vessels for warlike purposes in China; and
3. To enlist British subjects to serve in naval and military operations there.

And to add that on reference to the Act 59 Geo. III, cap. 69, it would be seen that the leave and license of the Crown to do these things might be signified either by Royal Sign-Manual, or by Order in Council, or by Proclamation, and it had appeared to your Lordship that the best course of proceeding in this case would be by the Royal Sign-Manual, but on inquiry at the Home Office it had been ascertained that there was no precedent for a license under the Royal Sign-Manual of the general character applied for by Mr. Lay.

That it appeared that a license to enter the service of a foreign Government was generally issued in the annexed Form marked A, while a license to equip and fit out vessels of war was generally drawn up in the form marked B; and on reference to the proceedings adopted at the time of the formation of the British Auxiliary Legion of Spain, it appeared that the permission to enlist British subjects, which had been applied for by the Spanish Minister at this Court, was signified by an Order in Council.

Mr. Layard added, that he was to request that we would take into our consideration the propriety of issuing a license, under the Royal Sign-Manual, to enable Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn to accept naval and military service under the Chinese Government, to fit out and equip vessels for warlike purposes in China, and to enlist British subjects to serve in naval and military operations there, and if we should be of opinion that there were no objections thereto, that we would at our earliest convenience furnish your Lordship with a draft of a License for the Queen's signature, embracing those several objects; and he was further to request that if we should be of opinion that there were objections to proceeding by Royal Sign-Manual in this case, we would advise your Lordship as to the best course to be pursued, it being understood that Her Majesty's Government were anxious to assist Mr. Lay, and to further his views so far as they could properly do so.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, there can be no objection to issuing a license, under the Royal Sign-Manual, to Mr. Lay, and a similar license to Captain Osborn, authorizing each of those gentlemen, separately, to accept naval and military service under the Chinese Government, and to fit out and equip vessels for warlike purposes in China. Such a license being to individuals, and not concerning the public, we see no occasion for the publicity of a Proclamation, or even an Order in Council.

As regards a license to Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn to "enlist British subjects to serve in naval and military operations" in China, the question is different; it is no longer confined to the consideration of acts to be done by the persons applying for the license, but embraces the conduct of those also who may be "enlisted" by the one or by the other. We understand that the proposed enlistment is an enlistment of British subjects in Great Britain, as well as in other parts of Her Majesty's dominions; and if it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government that such a general enlistment should be sanctioned, it appears to us that proper publicity should be given to the matter by an Order in Council, which we observe was the course adopted in 1835, when the "Foreign Enlistment Act" was suspended in favour of the Government of the Queen of Spain. It should also, in our opinion, be considered whether, if every British subject is to be at liberty to enlist himself, the license to procure and accept that enlistment (a power, it would seem, at present intended to be given to Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn only) ought not to be conferred generally, so that any one may enlist and any one be enlisted. If such a general permission be intended, moreover, we should doubt the propriety of singling out any gentlemen in particular for special license under the Sign-Manual.

In connection with this subject we would observe, that the first part of the second section of the "Foreign Enlistment Act" makes it a misdemeanour for any natural-born subject of Her Majesty to enter into any foreign military service without the leave and license of Her Majesty under the Sign-Manual, or signified by Order in Council or Proclamation, "for that purpose first had and obtained;" and that the latter part of the same section makes it absolutely a misdemeanour for any person within Her Majesty's dominions to engage or enlist others to enter into "any such service or employment as aforesaid;" the effect of which (as we understand it) is to make it necessary that Her Majesty's license, Order in Council, or Proclamation should be in such a form as to authorize, not the enlistment of other persons by those to whom permission is given, but the acceptance of the foreign service by the persons themselves who may be enlisted. It is not contemplated by the Act that permission should be given for the act of enlistment by the agents who may be employed for that purpose by a foreign Power; any such act is rendered absolutely unlawful, unless the persons who are enlisted have themselves Her Majesty's permission to enter such foreign service.

Under these circumstances we have not at present felt ourselves in a position satisfactorily to proceed to frame the draft of a license for the Queen's signature embracing the above several objects; and we await your Lordship's further directions in the matter.

Claim for reimbursement of sum expended in the purchase of two natives of British India as slaves, and liberated at the instance of the British Minister at Tehran.

My Lord, Temple, July 22, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th July instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, stating that two natives of British India, who had been sold as slaves, had been liberated in consequence of steps taken by him, and that the person who had purchased them had put forward a claim, through the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs, to be reimbursed by the British Mission the sum which he had so expended; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, together with the Treaty between this country and Persia for the suppression of the Slave Trade, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That so far as relates to any argument against the demand of the Persian Government, founded on the two Firmans of the 12th June, 1848, and the Convention of Ispahan of August 1851, the Persian Minister for Foreign Affairs is perfectly correct in his assertion that the engagements embodied in those documents do not touch the present question. The sole purpose and effect of those engagements is, to prohibit "the importation and exportation of negroes into the Persian dominions by sea alone, but not by land." It is, indeed, expressly declared by the first of the two Firmans, that the importation and exportation of negroes by land "is by no means forbidden."

But the present case, as it appears to us, does not depend at all upon those Treaty stipulations, but rests upon a much higher principle. As we understand the facts, this is not a case of the importation of slaves, whether by sea or by land, into the Persian dominions; it is a case of British subjects, who were free men, entitled to be protected as such by Her Majesty's Government, at and after the time when they entered the Persian dominions; being ordinary retainers or hired servants, and not slaves, of the person or persons in attendance on whom they were travelling. Their employer having died in Persia, his fellow-traveller (or some person with whom he had become associated there) afterwards assumed a right to sell these persons, in Persia, as slaves; and a Toorkish slave-merchant bought and paid for them. We do not think that Her Majesty's Government can admit that such a transaction was capable, even for an instant, of depriving these British subjects of their right to freedom, or of creating any right or title whatever in the Persian subject who bought them, to be paid any ransom or redemption money as the price of their deliverance. If the seller had no right of property in these persons, as against themselves and against Her Majesty, their lawful Sovereign and protector, neither could the pretended purchaser acquire any such right by the payment of money to the seller; and, unless he acquired some right of property in them, he cannot have any claim on Her Majesty's Government for repayment of money so paid by him at his own risk and in his own wrong. He must be left to recover it back as best he can from the individual who undertook to sell and deliver that to which he had no title; and we think that Her Majesty's Government cannot but approve and adhere to the peremptory refusal, by Mr. Alison, of the demand of the Persian Minister.

NEW GRANADA.

Rights and immunities of British subjects resident in New Granada.

My Lord, Temple, July 22, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in New Granada (Separate and Confidential, 18th March, 1861), requesting instructions on certain points connected with the rights and immunities of British subjects resident in New Granada, and at the same time to inclose a despatch from Mr. Griffith (No. 38) explaining the regulations laid down by the Government of the United States as regards citizens of the United States domiciled in New Granada; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Griffith on the points to which he had called attention.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think Her Majesty's Government may with propriety express their approval of the general views expressed by Mr. Grffiith in his despatches of the 18th March and 15th May last, which appear to us to be sound in principle, though of course requiring the exercise of an impartial discretion in their application to practice. It is certainly not desirable or proper in any way that advantage should be taken, for the political purposes of any of the contending parties in New Granada, of the claims of British settlers in that country who may interest themselves in the local politics, to British protection; and Mr. Griffith will, in our opinion, act in strict accordance with his duty if he continues (as he seems hitherto to have done) to refuse the sanction of his authority and influence, as Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in New Granada, to any pretensions of such settlers to privileges and immunities which the native inhabitants of the country do not possess, and which are not in any way secured to such settlers by Treaty.

It is, we apprehend, perfectly clear that British subjects who may have become domiciled in New Granada must submit to the general operation of the laws and institutions of that country in the same manner as if they were natural-born citizens thereof, and that their right to British protection (though not forfeited, unless they have also taken steps to become naturalized, and to renounce their British allegiance in favour of the Government of New Granada) does not exempt them from the duty of rendering obedience to those laws and institutions while resident there, or from liability, in common with all the other inhabitants of that country, to the ordinary penalties of disobedience thereto, according to the course of the local law. They cannot (to use the words of Mr. Griffith) "place themselves in open opposition to the Government" (if, by open opposition, unlawful resistance to the lawful authority of the Government is intended), and at the same time lay claim to the assistance of Her Majesty's Legation "to extricate them from the difficulties they may thus wilfully incur."

In answer to the concluding inquiry of Mr. Griffith's despatch of the 18th March, whether it his duty "to afford the same protection to natives of Great Britain domiciled in New Granada as to those who repair to that country for a special purpose transient in its nature," and with reference to the regulations said to have been laid down by the Government of the United States as regards citizens of the United States domiciled in New Granada, we think it necessary to add that, unless British subjects domiciled in New Granada have (as above noticed) also renounced their British allegiance, we do not see anything in the mere fact of their being domiciled there to disentitle them to British protection, or to make it necessary or proper that they should be regarded, for the purpose of this question, in a less favourable point of view than those who may be there for some special purpose transient in its nature. Those who may be there for a special purpose, however transient in its nature, are under an obligation to respect the laws and to obey the constituted authorities of the country in all points not otherwise provided for by express Treaty stipulations; and the duty of those who may be permanently domiciled there is exactly the same. If, indeed, those permanently domiciled in the country have acquired lands and real property (other than houses and warehouses hired and occupied for the purposes of commerce), they must submit, in respect of such real property (which is not in any respect privileged by the Treaty of 1825), to all the burdens, including military exactions and requisitions, which the real property of the country generally has to bear: the exemption stipulated for by the IXth Article of the Treaty applying only to personal exactions, or exactions to be levied from personal property. But this is a liability arising, not from any distinction between domicil and transitory residence, but from the universal principle, which subjects land, in every country, to the lex loci rei sitæ.

We think that instructions in the sense of the above remarks may properly be addressed to Mr. Griffith.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Tabreez (No. 10, April 25, 1862), in which a question is raised whether Article IX of the Treaty of Peace between Great Britain and Persia* binds Great Britain to follow the course prescribed by Article II of the Russo-Persian Treaty of 1828,† in regard to the registry of contracts, bills of exchange, deeds, and other documents, and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion on that point.

---

* Treaty of Peace between Great Britain and Persia, March 4, 1857.

† Extract of Commercial Treaty of Turcomanchia between Russia and Persia, February 10, 1828.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, Article IX of the Treaty of Peace between Great Britain and Persia does not bind Great Britain to follow the course prescribed by Article II of the Russo-Persian Treaty of 1848, in regard to the registry of contracts, bills of exchange, deeds, and other documents. By the Article in question, the "treatment" of British and Persian subjects respectively, and their trade, are to be placed "on the footing of the treatment and commerce of the most favoured nation." But Article II of the Russo-Persian Treaty does not, in our opinion, provide what can be properly described as a favourable treatment either of subjects or commerce. The "favour" referred to must, we think, be necessary and universal, in order to come within the most favoured nation clause, and thereby to be applicable to Treaties containing such clause, in the absence of special stipulation. But the arrangements for registration of documents may or may not be a favour or benefit, or may be so to one nation and not to another. This is shown in the present case; as we collect that, to British merchants trading in Persia, the stipulation, if extended to them, would be felt as a burthen and not a relief. Such matters, we think, should be left to particular arrangement between the various parties to Treaties, and ought not to be insisted on under the general clause, as against those by whom they would be felt as a burthen, and not a relief.

GENERAL.

As to obtaining an injunction from the Court of Chancery to prevent Lady Jackson from selling or publishing diplomatic correspondence between Great Britain and Prussia from 1772 to 1806.

Temple, July 22, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st July instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a letter which your Lordship had received from Lady Jackson, widow of the late Sir George Jackson, who was employed for many years in the Diplomatic service of the Crown, and who was granted a superannuation allowance, and died in May 1861; and to add that we would perceive that Lady Jackson offered to sell to Her Majesty's Government a series of despatches between the Courts of London and Berlin from 1772 to 1806, and that your Lordship had no means of knowing what the precise nature of those papers were; but as Sir G. Jackson was brother of Mr. F. F. Jackson, who for many years filled the post of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of Berlin, it was not improbable that, on the outbreak of the war with Prussia in 1802, Mr. Jackson might have removed a portion, if not the whole, of the archives of that period from Berlin, and retained them in his custody, and that at his death they fell into the possession of Sir G. Jackson.

That the original despatches, however, which were addressed by the various British Ministers who resided at Berlin between 1772 and 1806 to the Secretaries of State, as well as copies of the official instructions to those officers during the same period, were preserved in your office, and there was no intention, therefore, on the part of Her Majesty's Government to accept Lady Jackson's offer to purchase the papers in her possession; but as Lady Jackson stated in her letter that she could only part with them for a pecuniary consideration, she might possibly, on receiving what she might consider an unsatisfactory reply to her proposal, offer them for sale to some private individual, or attempt to publish them; and as the publication of so recent a correspondence might be injurious to the public interests, he was to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the propriety of obtaining an injunction from the Court of Chancery to prevent Lady Jackson from selling or publishing the papers in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it would be impossible, without knowing the particulars of which the documents in Lady Jackson's possession consist, to say that they would not be such as she would be entitled to retain, by virtue of some (qualified or absolute) right of property therein, which may have belonged to the person or persons under whom she claims. The publication, in recent times, of despatches and official correspondence of the Duke of Wellington, Lord Cornwallis, Lord Londonderry, and many other persons who have been employed in the public service of the State, is evidence of (what we believe to be) the ordinary practice of persons in such situations, to retain the originals or copies of many of the letters and papers which they write or receive in the course of their public employments, as their private property; and such a practice, although not, perhaps, always free from question, may in many cases, and to a great extent, be justified, by the analogy of the law relating to private letters, and by the right which every person so employed must have to retain in his own possession or power such documents as may be necessary at any future time to explain and justify his own conduct in case it should be impeached. In the present case it can hardly (we think) be presumed, after the lapse of a period of nearly sixty years, that the papers in question are such as can now be reclaimed as the property of the Crown; and it will, therefore, be prudent to consider the case upon the supposition that Lady Jackson has a right to retain them.

So viewing the case, we think that it follows, both from the principles of law applicable to the publication of private correspondence, and from the still clearer principles applicable, as between principal and agent, or master and servant (especially where the rights of the Crown and affairs of State are concerned), to correspondence which has passed in the course of, and with reference to, an employment of trust and confidence, that the Court of Chancery would interfere, by injunction, at the suit of the Crown, to prevent any unauthorized publication of papers of this nature; and, if an unauthorized publication would be prevented, it is not easy to distinguish from such publication any unauthorized communication whatever of the contents of these papers to any persons, unless under special circumstances. We are disposed, therefore, to think that, on proof of an intention or threat, by Lady Jackson, to publish or to part with and divulge the contents of these papers, without the permission of Her Majesty, an injunction might be obtained.

The mere fact that Lady Jackson has offered to sell these papers to Her Majesty's Government does not appear to us to be, in itself, such evidence of an intention or threat to publish or part with them as would make it safe or discreet to file an information without further proof of such intention. It would, we think, be more advisable, when declining the offer of sale, to intimate that Her Majesty's Government do not recognize the right of Lady Jackson to divulge or dispose of such papers without Her Majesty's permission, and that permission will not be given, if asked, for their sale or publication; but that, on the contrary, if it were understood that Lady Jackson had any purpose of that kind, it would be deemed necessary for Her Majesty's Government to take legal measures to prevent it. Such an intimation would, probably, answer the intended purpose; and, at all events, no sale by auction, or publication, could well take place without previous public advertisement, which would, doubtless, come to the knowledge of Her Majesty's Government in sufficient time to enable an information to be filed.

My Lord, Temple, July 28, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th July instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a Memorial, with its inclosures, from Messrs. John Martin and Son, relative to the destruction, by United States' cruizers, of their vessel the "York," which had been driven ashore on the coast of North Carolina; and to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that, under the circumstances appearing by the papers referred to in Mr. Layard's letter, Messrs. Martin have a just claim upon the United States' Government for compensation for the loss of such part of the property destroyed by the United States' cruizers as might otherwise have been saved; and that we think proper representations, with a view to obtain for them such compensation, ought to be made to the United States' Government.

Vessels being fitted out at Liverpool and Birkenhead for the service of the Confederate States.

My Lord,

Temple, July 29, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 23rd July instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 30th ultimo* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers, which had been received by the Board of Treasury from the Commissioners of Customs, containing further information respecting the vessel alleged to be fitting out at Liverpool for the service of the so-called Confederate States: and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion thereupon.

The former papers on this subject were inclosed for reference, if required.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 23rd July instant, stating that with reference to his letter of that date, sending to us papers respecting the vessel stated to be preparing for sea at Birkenhead for the service of the Government of the so-styled Confederate States of North America, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the Commissioners of Customs, inclosing additional papers respecting this vessel, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion as to the steps which ought to be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

We are further honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th July instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Board of Treasury, dated July 26, which your Lordship had received that morning, containing further information respecting the vessel stated to be fitting out at Liverpool for the service of the so-styled Confederate States; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the other papers on the same subject which were then before us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the evidence of the witnesses who have made depositions (we allude particularly to William Passmore, Edward Roberts, Robert John Taylor, and Henry Redden), coupled with the character and structure of the vessel, makes it reasonably clear that such vessel is intended for warlike use against citizens of the United States, and in the interest of the (so-called) Confederate States. It is not and cannot be denied that the vessel is constructed and adapted as a vessel of war, being pierced for guns, the sockets for the bolts for which Passmore states are already laid down; and having a magazine, and shot and canister-racks on the deck, and a certain number of canisters being actually on board. It is also stated in the Report of the Commissioners of Customs of July 1, that Messrs. Laird, the builders, do not deny that the vessel has been built for some "foreign Government," although they maintain, apparently, a strict reserve as to her actual destination, and as to the "foreign Government" in particular for whose service she is intended. We do not overlook the facts that neither guns nor ammunition have as yet been shipped; that the cargo (though of the nature of naval stores in connection with war-steamers) may yet be classed as a mercantile cargo; and that the crew do not appear to have been, in terms and form at least, recruited or enrolled as a military crew. It is to be expected that great stress will be laid upon these circumstances by the owners and others who may oppose the condemnation of the vessel, if seized by the officers of the Customs: and an argument may be raised as to the proper construction of the words which occur in the 7th section of the "Foreign Enlistment Act," "equip, furnish, fit out, or arm," which words, it may be suggested, point only to the rendering a vessel, whatever may be the character of its structure, presently fit to engage in hostilities. We think, however, that such a narrow construction ought not to be adopted, and if allowed would fritter away the Act, and give impunity to open and flagrant violations of its provisions. We therefore recommend that, without loss of time, the vessel be seized by the proper authorities; after which an opportunity will be afforded to those interested, previous to condemnation, to alter the facts, if it may be, and to show an innocent destination of the ship. In the absence of any such countervailing case, it appears to us that the vessel, cargo, and stores may be properly condemned.

Claim of owners of American ship "Daring," for detention of a shipment of saltpetre at Calcutta.

Temple, August 1, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 16th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note from the United States' Minister at this Court, dated the 11th June ultimo, inclosing papers in support of a claim made by the owners of an American vessel the "Daring," on account of the detention of a shipment of saltpetre at Calcutta in the month of December last.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he inclosed a letter from the India Office, dated the 11th July ultimo, in explanation of the circumstances under which the claim has been put forward, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the case into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the owners of the American vessel, the "Daring," have no just claim on Her Majesty's Government for compensation, on the grounds set forth in their protest, and referred to in the despatch of the American Minister of the 11th June last. We collect from Mr. Merivale's note of the 11th July, that the statement of the owners is so far correct that the saltpetre in question had been "shipped prior to that date," that is, prior to the 27th December, 1861, the date of the first Ordinance, and that, consequently, from that date up to the 3rd January, 1862, the date of the second Ordinance, no prohibition of export from Calcutta applied to the saltpetre on board the "Daring." But we are clearly of opinion that it was competent to the Executive in India to issue the further or second Ordinance bearing the latter date, and such Ordinance was in force until the 28th February, when it was formally withdrawn. The complaint made is, that the "Daring," with her cargo, was detained in the port of Calcutta by the Government from the 3rd January until the 28th February under the second Ordinance. The facts do not appear to be in dispute; and the question is one purely of international law; and the ground upon which, as it appears to us, the Government were justified in publishing and enforcing the Ordinance under which the detention took place, is the general right of every Government to resort, on the occurrence of a reasonable apprehension of hostilities, to all means of protection and self-defence not in themselves at variance with ordinary principles of justice, and impartially used; and we do not think the Ordinance in question open to any objection in principle or fairness.

Claim of James Castell and Eldrid Banen for losses sustained in consequence of their capture on board the "Laura," seized on suspicion of Slave Trade.

Temple, August 1, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of the Leeward Islands forwarding petitions from James Castell and Eldrid Banen, applying for compensation for their detention and the losses which they have sustained in consequence of their capture on board a vessel called the "Laura," which was seized by the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Cadmus," on suspicion of being engaged in the Slave Trade.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that a Report from the Attorney-General at St. John's accompanies the Governor's despatch upon the case, and that he was directed by your Lordship also to inclose Reports from Her Majesty's Consul-General in Cuba, and from the Commander of the "Cadmus," showing the circumstances under which the "Laura" was captured; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the claim put forward by the petitioners.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in our opinion neither of the petitioners, Castell and Banen, has any fair ground for claiming from Her Majesty's Government compensation for the inconvenience and suffering to which they have been subjected, under the circumstances stated in the papers now submitted to us. Such inconvenience and suffering flowed from an ordinary and bonâ fide application of the criminal law, in connection with the Slave Trade, to a ship under the British flag, and on board which the petitioners were found at the time of capture; and we do not discover in the case any special circumstances to remove the petitioners, or either of them, from the category of persons against whom, on reasonable suspicion and in the usual manner, the criminal law is put in motion, and on whose part, as a general rule, claims for reimbursement and compensation are, and must be, disallowed by every Government.

† Lord Lyons, Nos. 343, 364, 389, and 404

‡ Mr. Stuart, No. 11, June 21; No. 32, July 1; No 33, July 1.

1862

Mr. Layard was also pleased to annex the draft of an instruction, founded upon our above-mentioned Report, which would be sent to Mr. Stuart that evening (No. 26, July 18).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we regard the subject of these despatches, and their inclosures, as one of the utmost importance; and it appears to us to be impossible for Her Majesty's Government, however desirous they may be to make due allowance for the difficulties of the position in which the Government of the United States is placed, to acquiesce in such a system of interference with the legitimate trade, both of this country with her own Colonies by way of the United States, and of the British West Indies with the United States, as that described in these papers. It is, in our view, a grave violation, both of the existing Commercial Treaties between the two countries, and of the best established principles of international law, as has been very clearly and ably shown by Mr. Carlisle, in his confidential opinion, dated the 29th June last, inclosed in Mr. Stuart's No. 33. We are, indeed, so well satisfied with the treatment which this subject has received at Mr. Carlisle's hands, that we think it sufficient to refer to his arguments generally, without repeating them. On one point, indeed, his remarks seem to us to require qualification, viz., as to the interference with the cargo of the Royal mail-steamer "British Queen," which, however unjustifiable, cannot, we think, be brought into the same category with the case of the "Trent," the acts in question having taken place within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. On the other hand, we think it proper to point out that the system of interference complained of cannot be justified, even by the terms of the Act of Congress (assuming it to have passed and become law), of which a copy was inclosed in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 326, which authorized the refusal of clearances to foreign vessels, only when the Secretary of the Treasury should "have satisfactory reason to believe," that the goods, &c., or some part thereof, were "intended for ports or places in possession or under control of insurgents against the United States;" and which authorized bonds to be taken, only to secure the delivery of the cargo at the destination for which it is cleared or permitted; and that no part should be "used in affording aid or comfort to any person or parties in insurrection against the authority of the United States."

If this latter condition is to be understood (as in reasonable construction it must) of any use, preceding delivery at the specified destination, it does not seem to be objectionable; but, if meant to make the master and owner of the ship responsible for any subsequent use of the articles constituting the cargo, after they have passed beyond their power or control, it is one to which no independent nation could for a moment submit.

With respect to the apprehension of "imminent danger that goods, &c., may fall into the possession or under the control of the insurgents" (upon which we observed in our former Report), the Act of Congress contains no provisions whatever, applicable to any exports by sea from the United States; the third section, which relates to that subject, being strictly confined to "importations into any port of the United States," and to "transportation upon any railroad, turnpike or other road or means of transportotion within the United States;" so that with respect to this point what has been done is not only contrary to Treaty and to international law, but is also without excuse even from the letter of the special and extraordinary enactments passed by Congress itself.

The question, however, is not what may be, at any given moment, the local law of the United States (as to which the Government of the United States may possibly be justified in declining to enter into discussion with Her Majesty's Government), but what are the international obligations of the United States towards this country; and on this point we have nothing to add to our former Report, and to the unanswerable remarks of Mr. Carlisle.

Complaint of Mr. R. G. Bushby of capture of his vessel "Lilla" by United States' cruizer.

My Lord, Temple, August 2, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 31st July ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying Memorial and its inclosures from Mr. R. G. Bushby, dated the 28th July ultimo, stating the circumstances under which his vessel, the "Lilla," was captured by the United States' cruizer "Quaker City;" and to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the papers in this case do not enable us to arrive at any satisfactory opinion as to the legality or illegality of the capture. It appears from the declaration of the master (Captain Applebee), that the destination of the ship was alleged by the captors to be "the coast of the United States," meaning, as we presume, some part of the Southern coast then under blockade. In the absence of any statement of the evidence (if any) relied upon by the captors, in support of this allegation, we can only at present observe that the account of the destination of the ship and cargo, contained both in the master's declaration and in the memorial of the owner (Mr. Bushby), is unsatisfactory and imperfect. The account which the master gives of the orders under which he was sailing, is only that the ship was "bound for Nassau;" and he relies on the fact that he was not, when taken, in the track which would lead him to the coast of the United States. But the real question may probably turn out to be, not whether the ship was then on her way to Nassau, but whether she had any ulterior or contingent destination, involving a breach of the blockade, with which an intermediate destination to Nassau, or an intention to call there for orders, would be in no way inconsistent. In like manner, Mr. Bushby states, that the ship was "bound for Nassau, and there consigned to Messrs. Adderley and Co.," and that she had on board a cargo (consisting of articles of which saltpetre was one, and all of which were such as might be well adapted for the belligerent purposes of the Confederate States; even drugs being useful for troops and military hospitals), "shipped by several different parties for Nassau, and consigned to order."

The house of Adderley and Co. has been (if we mistake not) known to be concerned on former occasions in the trade carried on, viâ Nassau, between the blockaded ports of the Confederate States and Europe. Although, therefore, no facts as yet appear sufficient to justify the capture, the facts which do appear are not in themselves sufficient to prove that it may not be justifiable, if made beyond the limits of British waters.

Upon the question whether it was made within or beyond the limits of British waters, we think much more weight is due to the captain's own statement, in his protest made immediately after his arrival at Boston, that the ship was boarded "when within four miles" of the Abaco lighthouse, than to the subsequent statement made at Liverpool by the passenger Lebby, that the lighthouse was then "distant two miles and three-quarters, as ascertained by observation, &c." If the latter statement were accurate, the capture would certainly be illegal, as made within British waters; but if the distance exceeded three miles, it was beyond the territorial jurisdiction of this country. It is not, we think, credible that, if an exact observation had been just before made by the captain himself, as Lebby pretends, it would not have been so stated in the protest. The captain was well aware of the importance of proving, if possible, that he was then within British waters; for he expressly insists in his protest that he was illegally seized "in waters which," he says, "I presume to be British, viz., within four miles of the Bahama Islands."

Under the circumstances of this case, it may be proper that some representation should, in the first instance, be made to the United States' Government, in order to ascertain the grounds on which (if at all) the capture is sought to be justified; but in the event of that Government determining to bring the case before a Prize Court for adjudication, we think that the proper course will be to watch that proceeding, and to await its result, before deciding whether any further steps ought to be taken in the matter.

Licenses granted exclusively to American merchants to trade with the port of Norfolk, that port being still under blockade as regards foreign vessels.

My Lord, Temple, August 11, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st July ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 48), showing the manner in which trade was then being carried on at the port of Norfolk by means of licenses granted to American merchants, to their exclusive advantage, that port being still under blockade as regards foreign vessels; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, a blockading Power is not altogether prohibited, by maritime law, from granting licenses to particular vessels to enter or depart from the blockaded port: and if such licenses are granted on special occasions and under exceptional circumstances, and without any partiality to particular flags, foreign nations not participating in them have no fair ground of complaint on account of the licenses. But if the facts be as stated in the despatch of Vice-Consul Myers of the 3rd July, and its inclosures, it would seem to be a necessary conclusion that the conditions of restriction which we have pointed out are violated and disregarded; and if the facts be that the blockade, being in form maintained, and being enforced against foreigners, it is habitually or systematically relaxed in favour of citizens of the United States, and their ships carrying general cargoes on private venture, we think that the blockade has ceased to be legally effective, and that captures of foreign vessels for attempting to break through such blockade would be illegal, and ought to be so declared by the Prize Courts to whose adjudication they may be referred.

The principles of law applicable to this subject, and the authorities bearing upon it, were ably and elaborately reviewed by the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council, in the recent case of "The Franciska" (Northcote v. Douglas, 10th Moore's Privy Council Reports, p. 37); and the decision in that case is of the highest authority, as having established the nullity of a blockade declared by this country, and having decided against the validity of a capture for breach of such blockade in the Supreme Court of the captors themselves. We also think that, independent of capture and adjudication, British merchants and ship-owners who may be deterred, by the apparent fact of blockade, from attempting to trade with the port of Norfolk, have good grounds of complaint, which claims may be properly urged by Her Majesty's Government on their behalf. We think that a sufficient case is established on the statements of the Vice-Consul to make it right for Her Majesty's Government to represent such facts to the Government of the United States; and to require, in the first instance, a full explanation of the grounds, if any, on which that Government may seek to justify, according to international law, the course which it appears to have adopted.

Oath of allegiance to United States exacted by General Butler from the subjects of foreign States.

My Lord, Temple, August 11, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th July ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers relative to a correspondence which has taken place at New Orleans between the British Acting Consul at that place and General Butler,* respecting the oath of allegiance to the United States exacted by the latter officer from the subjects of foreign States; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we conclude from Mr. Stuart's despatch to your Lordship of the 25th June (Inclosure 2 in No. 20), and also from the despatch of the same date by Mr. Stuart to Acting Consul Coppell (Inclosure 8 in No. 20), that General Butler's General Order No. 41, dated the 10th June, 1862, has been "cancelled in so far as it affected foreigners; and that foreigners who had already taken the oath" were "dispensed from its obligations." Under these circumstances it appears to us that, at all events in the absence of direct and immediate pecuniary loss resulting to individuals from the consequences of their refusal to take either of the two oaths, so long as the Order in question was treated as in force (and no such injury is stated to have occurred), Her Majesty's Government are not called upon to make any demand for compensation or redress on the Government of the United States.

As regards the Order itself, in so far as it required the oaths therein specified to be taken by the subjects of neutral Sovereigns, who had not of their own will become naturalized and taken upon themselves the obligations of American citizens, we think that it was not only harsh and unreasonable, but in violation of common principles of justice, and of the ordinary and recognized rules by which civilized States, engaged in war, guide their conduct towards such foreigners, the subjects of friendly and neutral Governments, as may happen, during the existence of the state of war, to be abiding within their territories. The first oath, or oath of "allegiance," is imposed on persons "foreign born," who shall have been resident in the United States for the space of five years, and who "shall not have claimed and received a protection of their Government duly signed and registered by the proper officer, more than sixty days previous to the publication of this Order." It does not appear that any law or regulation promulgated at New Orleans had previously made it the duty of foreigners to claim and receive "a protection of their Government;" and it follows that, to a greater or less (and, as we gather, in fact to a very considerable) extent, this part of the Order was retrospective in its operation; and, being retrospective, was the more unjust, because, without taking the oath, foreigners not within the exception of "protected" were unable to obtain a "passport," or consequently, however much they might desire it, to leave the country.

The second oath appears to us to be, if possible, still more objectionable. In terms, it applies to "all foreigners" claiming any of the ordinary legal rights of residence (with the single exception of "protection from personal violence"); and it exacts an undertaking which is to be binding so long as the Government of the particular foreigner shall remain at peace with the United States, and without reference to the place or country in which, at any subsequent period during the continuance of the war, such foreigner may happen to be. But no Government can properly assume to itself the right of attempting to control, by the exaction of oaths or otherwise, the conduct of foreigners, at any time during which they shall not be residing within the limits of that State. If the State of which such foreigner is a subject thinks fit to enact or command neutrality during the continuance of the war, and everywhere, it has the power to do so; but it is to the laws of his own country only, or of such other neutral State under whose protection he may be living at the time, that a foreigner can be made responsible for breaches of neutrality committed by him beyond the confines of the belligerent State. This second requirement is also open to the objection of being practically retrospective, seeing that persons could not leave the country without "protection or favour from the Government;" and yet the oath must be taken previous to such "protection or favour" being extended.

* Mr. Stuart, No. 20; Inclosures 2 and 3 in Mr. Stuart's No. 34

We would further point out that the withdrawal of the State protection, which was to ensue upon the refusal by those upon whom the obligation was imposed to take either oath, left unabrogated the protection of life and limb only, and involved the abnegation of every form of the rights of property; such property being left exposed even to robbery and spoliation, without means of redress to the injured party. In short, every civil right, with the exception pointed out, was withdrawn, as the penalty of non-submission to the requirements of the Order.

We think the exaction of oaths of allegiance and of non-assistance to the enemy, without, at least, a full previous opportunity of leaving the country being afforded to foreigners, is altogether unjust, and contrary to the usages of civilized warfare; and, upon the whole, it appears to us that if the Order had not been withdrawn by order of General Butler's superiors, very grave and serious grounds of remonstrance with the United States' Government would have existed on the part of Her Majesty's Government; and furthermore that it would have been the duty of the Government to claim compensation for such loss or damage, in money's worth, as should have appeared to have been entailed, owing to the execution of the Order, on any British subjects residing at New Orleans.

Law of Great Britain respecting the exportation of contraband of war.

My Lord, Temple, August 11, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note which had been addressed to your Lordship by the Danish Minister at this Court, asking for certain information as to the state of the law in this country with regard to the exportation of contraband of war; and to request that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to M. de Bille's communication.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. That the circumstances of a contract having been entered into before the breaking out of war would not, in our opinion, make any difference in the case. That the English laws do not prohibit, under punishment, British subjects from exporting articles contraband of war to either belligerent in a war in which this country is neutral; nor is the effect of the customary Neutrality Proclamation to make the exportation of such articles punishable by English law. The proclamations do, indeed, give notice of the illegality of such exportation by the law of nations, and of the penalty of seizure and confiscation to which, by the law of nations, the exporters may be liable; but this is a penalty which can only be enforced by one of the belligerent Powers, in the exercise of those rights which are conceded to belligerents against the subjects of a neutral Power guilty of any violation of neutrality by international law.

2. That the British Government would not, under ordinary circumstances, deem itself bound to interfere of its own accord, to prevent the exportation of articles contraband of war to one of the belligerents, or even to do so on such interference being expressly asked by the other belligerent. But this answer must be understood under the reservation that Her Majesty's Government could never enter into any previous engagement which would preclude Her Majesty from exercising her legal powers of prohibiting such exportation by Order in Council, if any special circumstances should arise which might appear to render it proper or necessary for the interests of this country to do so.

We have further to observe, that in the event of war breaking out, any act prohibited by the Foreign Enlistment Act (59 Geo. III, cap. 69) would be illegal, and would be punishable by the law of this country, even though it might be done in fulfilment of some contract entered into before the breaking out of war; and that it might probably be the duty of Her Majesty's Government, either of its own accord or on the requisition of either belligerent, to exercise the powers given to them by that statute, in order to prevent and to punish any such act. And we must add, that we think it hardly probable that a contract with a foreign Government for building in this country an armour-plated ship could be completed, after the breaking out of war between that Government and another foreign State, without some acts amounting to an "equipping, furnishing, fitting-out, or arming," within the meaning of the 7th section of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and therefore punishable by the laws of this country.

Seizure of the "Oreto" at the Bahamas on suspicion of having on board stores for Confederate States.

My Lord, Temple, August 12, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter dated the 31st July ultimo, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, respecting the seizure of the vessel "Oreto" at the Bahamas, on the suspicion of having on board stores intended for the use of the Confederate States.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he inclosed a letter addressed to the Colonial Office, from which we should see that this vessel is to be detained until further instructions are sent to the Governor of the Bahamas, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the form of prosecution to be adopted in this case;—whether proceedings should be instituted under the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, or for a violation of the law of nations, and with any other observations which we might have to offer on the matter.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to state that he also inclosed for our information a previous correspondence respecting this vessel when she was being fitted out at Liverpool.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us to be proper, in the first instance, to correct a misapprehension which is to be found in Mr. Layard's letter, and also in that of Sir F. Rogers of the 31st July. The seizure is therein described as "the seizure of the vessel 'Oreto' at the Bahamas, on the suspicion of having on board stores intended for the use of the Confederate States," whereas the seizure in reality took place, and can only be justified, on the ground of a violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, by those in charge of the "Oreto," by reason of her having been "equipped, furnished, fitted out, or armed" for the purpose of being employed in the conduct of hostilities against the Government of the United States. A merchant-vessel, under the British flag, lying at the Bahamas, and having for her cargo "stores intended for the use of the Confederate States," even though such stores were military or naval stores, would not be guilty of a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act, or of any other provision in the municipal law of this country, though by the laws of war she would be liable to capture on the high seas by cruizers of the United States, as carrying contraband, or sailing with an express intent to violate an existing effective blockade.

As regards the manner in which this vessel ought now to be dealt with, we concur in the views expressed by Governor Bayley, that the question of condemnation ought to be submitted to the local Court of Vice-Admiralty. The Act (section 7) directs that the prosecution of the vessel to condemnation is to be "in such Courts" in which "ships or vessels may be prosecuted and condemned for any breach of the laws made for the protection of the revenues of customs and excise, or of the laws of trade and navigation." We think that the facts warranted the seizure; but we must add that it is very important that, on the trial, evidence should be adduced of what occurred at Liverpool as regards the building and fitting out, and the alleged ownership and destination of the "Oreto;" and also that, if possible, the circumstances under which she took on board the shot, shells, and ammunition which she is said to have discharged into some other vessel when off Nassau, should be ascertained and proved. This, coupled with the subsequent career of the vessel, strengthens the conclusion that she was destined and "equipped," in her structure and otherwise, for taking part in the war against the United States.

As to licenses being issued to Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn to enlist 600 British subjects for military and naval service in China.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 12, 1862.

I AM honoured by your Lordship's commands signified in a letter from Mr. Layard of the 11th of August instant, in which Mr. Layard stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with a copy of the printed papers relative to the proposed employment of Mr. Lay, Captain Osborn, and others, in the service of the Chinese Government, a letter from Mr. Lay, requesting that a provision may be inserted in the licenses issued to him and Captain Osborn, authorizing them to enlist 600 British subjects for military and naval service in China.

Mr. Layard added that Her Majesty's Government were anxious that this authority should be given to Mr. Lay, and that I should take the matter into my consideration, and that I should favour your Lordship with my opinion as to how this could be done without an Order in Council.

Mr. Layard further stated that your Lordship feared it might be necessary to issue a license to every individual enlisted by Mr. Lay, and that this, though cumbrous, might be practicable.

In obedience to your Lordship's command I have taken these papers into my consideration, and I have the honour to report—

That having regard to the language of the Foreign Enlistment Act (59 Geo. III, cap. 69) I cannot safely advise your Lordship that in the absence of an Order in Council or Proclamation, a general provision contained in a license issued under the Roysl Sign-Manual to Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn to enlist British subjects to serve in military operations under the Emperor of China would necessarily exempt the persons so enlisted from the penalties of the aforesaid Statute; it follows, therefore, that, in my opinion, your Lordship's apprehension is well founded, and that it will be requisite to issue a separate license to each individual British subject enlisted by Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn.

Claim of Mr. Moss against Her Majesty's Government for damages and false imprisonment in Japan.

My Lord, Temple, August 18, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 23rd July ultimo, stating that in our Report of the 20th March last* upon the case of Mr. Moss, we expressed an opinion that so long as any further legal proceedings were pending, and in the absence of any application from Mr. Moss, made since the verdict, Her Majesty's Government were neither called upon nor were in a position to interfere; and he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,† an application from Mr. Moss, dated the 31st of March last,* stating the grounds on which he claims to be compensated by Her Majesty's Government, and two despatches and their inclosures from Mr. Alcock,† from which, among other things, it appeared that the Court at Hong Kong had decided not to grant the appeal which had been applied for by the Attorney-General on behalf of Mr. Alcock, and that the legal proceedings were consequently at an end; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion specifically upon Mr. Moss's claim, and generally as to whether it is necessary that Her Majesty's Government should take any further steps in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to entertain Mr. Moss's claim for compensation to any extent, or to take any further steps in this matter.

If the analogy of the English law is to be regarded, it is not the practice (and it would be a practice attended with very inconvenient consequences) for the Government to indemnify persons who may have suffered from unfounded accusations, or from erroneous proceedings or sentences, in the ordinary course of the administration of the criminal law: and even against Justices of the Peace, who may have miscarried (not acting maliciously) by exceeding their jurisdiction, the legal remedies are in this country circumscribed by statute, and placed under many safeguards. If in some cases the extent of injury inflicted by an illegal sentence in remote parts of the world may be greater than it generally is at home, so, on the other hand, the inconvenience and mischief of placing the regularity of all the proceedings of Consular Officers under a public guarantee would be proportionably greater; and we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to create, in the present case, any precedent in favour of such a course.

The case of Mr. Moss is not, in our judgment, one calling for any departure at all from the general rule, whatever that rule ought to be. His own conduct (amounting, upon the most lenient view which can be formed of it, to very culpable indiscretion, in circumstances which imperatively required an opposite behaviour) was the original cause of all that he has suffered. That conduct was judged by Her Majesty's Consular Judges on the spot, who heard all the evidence, and were acquainted with the local circumstances (and who certainly acted bonâ fide, and were free from the bias to which their assessors might be subject), to be not merely indiscreet, but criminal, and to deserve a degree of punishment which, if confined within the limits of their legal authority, would have involved consequences not less prejudicial to his pecuniary interests than those which he has actually sustained. If the proceedings against him have failed, and if the sentence has fallen to the ground, this has not been owing to any original want of jurisdiction in the Court which tried him, nor to any reversal of the judgment of that Court upon the merits of the case; but solely because the addition of fine to imprisonment vitiated the sentence. He has availed himself of his legal remedy against Sir Rutherford Alcock, in the ordinary course of law at Hong Kong, and has recovered such damages as the Court there had jurisdiction to give. It is true these damages were limited to the cause of action, which arose in Hong Kong; but, if he has still any further cause of action, not covered by that judgment, the Courts of this country are open to him. Into the question whether his allegations of damage are, or are not, exaggerated, we do not think it necessary now to enter: but the difficulty, if not impossibility, of arriving at any satisfactory estimate of the amount of such damage (for the opinion expressed by the Hong Kong jury on that point ought not, as it seems to us, to have been asked, and is entitled to little or no weight), is an additional reason why the case should be left to the ordinary course of law.

Seizure by General Butler of sugar belonging to British, French, and Greek subjects.

Temple, August 18, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 19th July ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch, and its inclosures, which your Lordship had received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 28, June 27, 1862), containing a correspondence between General Butler and the Consuls of Great Britain, France, and Greece, relative to the seizure of a large quantity of sugar belonging to subjects of those nations; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the character of the transaction referred to in that correspondence.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to add by way of postscript, that he inclosed further despatches which had just been received from Mr. Stuart on this subject (Nos. 37 and 41, of July 1 and 3).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That it is stated, in Mr. Stuart's despatches to your Lordship of the 1st July, that Mr. Seward had addressed an instruction to Mr. Johnson at New Orleans, to investigate and cause full justice to be done in the case of the sugar belonging to British, French, and Greek subjects at that port, being the sugar referred to in Mr. Layard's letter, and which had formed the subject of the correspondence therein also mentioned. Until the result of Mr. Johnson's interference shall be known, it will, of course, be impossible to advise Her Majesty's Government as to the course of conduct which it may be necessary for them to adopt on the occasion.

We collect from the papers before us, that, on the capture of New Orleans by General Butler, that officer issued a Proclamation dated the 1st of May last, to the effect that the property of foreigners, generally, would be respected. The seizure, therefore, of these sugars is not attempted to be justified on the ground of any arbitrary power of a conquering army to make prize or booty of all property found in the conquered city, nor even on the ground that all foreigners residing and carrying on business at New Orleans, while that city was held by the party in insurrection against the Government of the United States, were liable, by the Municipal laws of the United States, to be treated as adherents of rebellion, and to have their property confiscated for that reason, whenever the authority of the United States' Government might be re-established in the place We are relieved from the necessity of considering the questions which would have arisen if the acts of General Butler had been defended on these grounds.

The ground taken up by General Butler appears to be, that this property, as distinguished from the property of foreigners in New Orleans, generally, is liable to seizure, because it was (as he alleges) bought and paid for with notes issued from the Confederate Treasury at New Orleans; and which notes were (as he also alleges) bought by Mr. Covas (the purchaser of the sugar) with what he designates as "sterling exchange," by which term we understand him to mean good foreign bills of exchange, payable in England or elsewhere, in sterling money. It would seem, from Mr. Coppell's letter to Lord Lyons of the 20th June last, that in a personal interview between Mr. Covas and General Butler, the same charge was made in a somewhat different form; viz., that Mr. Covas had been "engaged in importing gold, and selling it at 100 per cent. premium, with which proceeds he had purchased these sugars;" and that Mr. Covas denied that allegation, and on another occasion exhibited his books, which showed that the sugars had been purchased in the ordinary course and manner of business. Having regard, however, to the fact that the dealings of Mr. Covas (whatever they were) clearly took place while New Orleans was in the sole and exclusive possession of the Confederate authorities, and de facto under their Government, and long before the conquest of that city by General Butler, we are unable to perceive the importance, in principle, of the distinction suggested between "the ordinary course of business" and the course of business alleged by General Butler to have been followed. To purchase the paper-money issued by the de facto Government of a belligerent Power within whose territory (i. e., the territory within which that Power exercises, exclusively of all others, the functions of a de facto Government) foreign merchants happen to be residing, is (as it appears to us) an ordinary commercial transaction; at all events when the paper so purchased is used for ordinary commercial purposes,—and it is not pretended that any other use was made of it in this case. General Butler (so far as it is possible to extract argument from his declamatory letter of the 12th June, 1862), appears to imagine that because the port of New Orleans was blockaded at the time, the sale of foreign bills of exchange in that city was a constructive breach of blockade. To expose such extravagance by reference to any known principles of the law of nations (of which General Butler appears to be absolutely ignorant) would be a waste of words. His only other argument (if it is not the same in a different form) is equally extraordinary, viz., that the purchase of Confederate Treasury notes at New Orleans (being the ordinary paper-currency of the country at that time) by foreign merchants residing there was a "breach of neutrality," exposing the goods purchased with such notes to seizure and confiscation upon the subsequent conquest of the city by the United States' troops; because the foreign bills of exchange given by the foreign merchants in exchange for these notes might be sent by the Confederate authorities to Europe, and might there be employed by them or their Agents for the purpose of buying arms and munitions of war. It is evident that upon such reasoning as this, all commercial dealings whatever by foreigners at New Orleans, during the continuance of the civil war and the blockade, and prior to the capture of that city by the United States' troops, might have been equally liable to be treated as criminal and contraband.

We are of opinion that the seizure and detention of these sugars was wholly unjustifiable; and that it was an act of mere arbitrary confiscation rendered more unjust, instead of being palliated, by the pretence of respecting the property of foreigners generally, and by the principles on which it has been attempted to distinguish these sugars from the general mass of such foreign property.

Restrictions by United States' authorities on trade between United States' ports and ports in British West Indies.

Temple, August 18, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further papers* respecting the restrictions imposed by the United States' authorities on trade between United States' ports and ports in the British West Indies, and to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, together with those on the same subject which were inclosed in his letter of the 19th ultimo, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 9th August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit, for our consideration, a further despatch (No. 76 of July 30) and its inclosures respecting the restrictions imposed by the United States' Government on trade between United States' ports and ports in the British West Indies.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken these further papers into our consideration; and we are confirmed by them in the views already expressed by us in our former Reports on the same subject, to which we beg leave to refer.

The conduct of the Custom-house authorities at New York amounts to nothing less than an arbitrary stoppage, without even the excuse of previous notice, of the whole ordinary trade, which it has been hitherto usual to carry on between this country and the Bahamas by that route. Whatever irritation may exist on the part of the United States in consequence of the trade carried on between the Bahamas and the Confederate States, it must not be forgotten that this (so far as it is carried on elsewhere than in blockaded ports, and in articles not contraband of war) is, by the rules of international law, as perfectly lawful and legitimate as any ordinary trade between England and the United States; and it is impossible to look upon the proceedings of the New York Custom-house, if they should continue to receive the deliberate sanction of the United States' Government, as having any other character than that of hostility towards a Colony of Great Britain, and therefore towards Great Britain herself.

As to interference of British Government to prevent ships being built and a loan contracted in Great Britain for the Government of Peru, with a view of making war on Equator.

My Lord, Temple, August 20, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a translation of a letter from the Equatorian Minister at this Court, representing that the Government of Peru are causing ships to be built and a loan to be contracted in this country with a view of making war on the Republic of Ecuador, and requesting that Her Majesty's Government would interfere to put a stop to such measures as being hostile to the interests of Ecuador; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether this case is one in which Her Majesty's Government would be justified in interfering, and if so in what manner.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to add that the Peruvian Government have recently declined the proffered mediation of Her Majesty's Government, which was accepted by the Republic of Ecuador.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That in our opinion Her Majesty's Government would not be justified in interfering in any manner in this case. The international obligation to which the Minister of Ecuador refers in his despatch, and which he appears to think ought to regulate the conduct of England at the present moment in its relations with the States of Peru and Ecuador, is that of neutrality; but neutrality, both according to the law of nations and the municipal law of this country, means the neutrality of one State, as between two or more other States who are at war between themselves; and has no bearing upon a state of peace, however probable a future war may be, or however much, or however reasonably, war may be apprehended. As regards the building of ships in England for the Government of Peru, the Foreign Enlistment Act is the only portion of the English law that could be appealed to even in argument; and its provisions throughout contemplate, and are only adapted to, an existing state of war. Loans to foreign States with which Her Majesty is at peace are not only nowhere expressly prohibited in our law, but the Courts have not even refused to enforce contracts connected with foreign loans raised in England, except when such loans have been to persons waging war with States friendly to Great Britain.

Condemnation of the "Empress" for intention to break the blockade of New Orleans.

My Lord, Temple, August 22, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* respecting the case of the British barque "Empress," which had been condemned by the United States' District Court at New York for an alleged intention to break the blockade of New Orleans; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there does not appear to have been any such miscarriage of justice in this case as to make it advisable or proper for Her Majesty's Government to interfere on behalf of the owners of the "Empress," notwithstanding the decision of the Prize Court. On the contrary, we are disposed to think that the decision of Judge Betts proceeded upon a correct view of the principles of public law applicable to the case, and that the facts, as proved before the Court, warranted the conclusion. If, however, any error in judgment has been committed, it will be open to the owners to have this error rectified in the Superior Court, to which (as we understand) they propose to carry the case by way of appeal.

We observe that the principal question appears to have turned upon the terms of the President's Proclamation, by which the intention of blockading the Southern ports was originally notified. It was insisted on the part of the owners that the Proclamation amounted to an express license to all vessels to approach and enter any of the ports after the commencement of the blockade without peril of confiscation, until they should have been warned off, upon the spot, by the commander of one of the blockading vessels. We cannot agree with this view of the meaning and effect of the Proclamation; we think, with Judge Betts, that the intimation that such warning would be given was intended to operate only as a notice of the manner in which the existence of the blockade would be communicated upon its first establishment to vessels on the spot which might otherwise have been ignorant, or entitled to plead ignorance thereof, so as to affect them with notice; and that it was not intended, and did not operate, as a license or invitation to neutral vessels sailing for blockaded ports after the establishment of a blockade, pursuant to the Proclamation, had become generally known, to approach the mouths of such ports for the purpose of inquiring of the blockading squadron whether the blockade of which they had previous notice was still maintained, so as to give them the alternative of slipping in if they could avoid the blockading squadron, or of escaping capture by pleading their right to be once warned off if they could not do so.

Claim of Mr. John Carter on account of the manner of his dismissal as engineer in the Spanish service.

Temple, August 22, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th July ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* relative to a claim preferred against the Spanish Government by an Englishman named John Cater, on account of the manner in which he was dismissed from his employment as engineer in the Spanish service, to which Her Majesty's Government have hitherto given their unofficial support.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that we should learn from Sir J. Crampton's despatch No. 271 of the 27th June last the grounds on which the Spanish Government have refused to entertain Cater's claim; and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether or not Her Majesty's Government would be justified in affording any further support to this claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. John Cater, by his contract with the Spanish Government, bound himself to serve the Queen of Spain as second engineer, "either afloat or on shore, in Spain or her Colonies, as his services might be required;" and "to submit," whilst in the service, "to its established rules and regulations." In a subsequent part of the contract notice is taken of "the Spanish articles of war;" and an engineer serving on board a ship of war of any nation must have been aware that he would necessarily be subject to the rules of naval discipline established by the maritime law of that nation. The contract also (though the engagement is as second engineer) contemplates the possibility of Cater himself filling the situation of first engineer, at least temporarily; and it also contemplates the contingency of the presence on board of another engineer of the same class; in which case the precedence of the two, inter se, is to be regulated by the officer in command.

In November 1856 Mr. Cater was tried by a court-martial in the Philippines for alleged acts of insubordination in refusing to light the fires of the ship on board which he was serving when ordered by the commanding officer to do so, and otherwise disobeying orders, the effect of which was to require him to act, for the time being, as first engineer; and being found guilty, he was sentenced to imprisonment, dismissed the service, and forbidden to reside in the Philippines.

We observe that Cater protested against the competency of the Tribunal, because he was an engineer belonging to a special and civil branch of the service, and engaged on conditions embodied in a special contract. But we apprehend it to be clear that the contract did not exempt him from being amenable to discipline in the ordinary way; on the contrary, we think it gave him sufficient notice that he would be held amenable thereto, and, if he was in fact guilty of insubordination and disobedience, we think it was perfectly competent for a Spanish naval court-martial to try him and sentence him to punishment for those offences, proceeding always according to the rules of the Spanish law. The jurisdiction, therefore, of the Court being clear, we do not see how Her Majesty's Government could consistently with international law require the Spanish Government to refuse to it that credit for a right decision upon the matter under inquiry which is usually accorded to all Courts acting within their jurisdiction. At the same time the case does seem to us to be one of considerable hardship: for Cater, who seems to have been ignorant of, or very imperfectly acquainted with, the Spanish language, denies the charge of intentional disobedience to orders, and states circumstances from which it appears really probable that there may have been misunderstanding, rather than insubordination, especially as he would have been justified by his contract in insisting that he had not been engaged to discharge (unless under circumstances of temporary necessity) the duties of first engineer. On the other hand, we do not think that this would be any justification for leaving fires unlighted, when ordered to light them, under the pretext that it was the business of the first engineer to do so, or in replying to such an order that he would communicate it to the first engineer when he came on board (there being, in point of fact, no person then on board or known to be coming on board in sufficient time to execute the order in the character of first engineer). We cannot, therefore, say that Her Majesty's Government can successfully press upon the Spanish Government any claim for compensation to Mr. Cater on the ground of his dismissal from their service, or of the punishment inflicted upon him by the sentence of the court-martial. But this does not seem to us to dispose of the whole case. It remains to be considered whether he has received the full amount of payment to which he was entitled under the express terms of his contract with the Spanish Government. We think that he has not, and that Her Majesty's Government may properly continue to urge, in his behalf, the more punctual fulfilment of that article of the contract which stipulates that "if he should fail to comply with the conditions of his offer (one of which was the performance of the duties as engineer, and another obedience to the established regulations of the service), or by intemperance nullify any agreement entered into, then Her Catholic Majesty's Government should have the power of immediately discharging him, without any notice whatever, on payment of an amount sufficient to defray the expenses of his travelling home," (i.e. to England,) "and his wages to that day." We are of opinion that Her Catholic Majesty's Government, when they accepted the tender of service made in those terms, contracted an obligation to pay Cater his wages down to the time of his dismissal, and his travelling expenses to England in the event (which happened) of his being discharged at a distance from his home for any fault or non-performance of duty on his own part. The court-martial, though fully competent to administer naval discipline, was not competent to alter the terms of the contract between an individual and the Government by whom he was employed, nor to absolve the Spanish Government, wholly or in part, from the pecuniary obligations which they had undertaken by that contract. So far, therefore, as the sentence of the court-martial purported to restrict Mr. Cater's claim on the Spanish Government to the payment only of his expenses to the first English Colony, it seems to us to have been ultra vires; and we think it ought not to stand in the way of his claim, which appears to us a just one, to be paid at least the full amount of his wages down to the date of his discharge, and his reasonable travelling expenses from Hong Kong to England.

VENEZUELA.

Claim for detention of the "Alfred" at Puerto Cabello in consequence of informality in ship's manifest.

My Lord, Temple, August 22, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 9th August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence respecting a claim which had arisen out of the detention of the British vessel "Alfred" by the authorities at Puerto Cabello,* in consequence of some informality in her ship's manifest, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our advice upon the point submitted by Mr. Orme, and with our opinion whether this was a case in which Her Majesty's Government could interfere.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the detention of the "Alfred" at Puerto Cabello appears to have arisen from the refusal of the master to pay a fine of 500 dollars, exacted from him by the Custom-house authorities there, in conformity with their interpretation of the 2nd and 3rd Articles of the Rules for Importations, contained in a Law of the Republic of Venezuela, passed on the 12th of July, 1860. The master disputed his legal liability to this fine before the Venezuelan tribunals, but the result of that litigation has been that his liability has been established by the Court of Valencia, upon appeal; and no further appeal having been taken by the master from that decision, it has now become final.

It must be assumed, therefore, that the Custom-house authorities were justified in what they did by the local law; and it is much to be regretted that by taking his stand upon a point of law, on which he has failed, the master should have brought upon his owners a detention of the ship and cargo, which would not have taken place if he had promptly paid the fine and complied with the other requirements of the local law, but which was the consequence, in the ordinary course of that law, of his refusal to do so.

It is still more to be regretted that, owing to the refusal of the consignees of the cargo destined for Maracaibo to waive any further claim against the Venezuelan Government, the offer of 5,000 dollars compensation which was (in the first instance) made by that Government conditionally upon its being accepted in full of all claims upon them, should have been declined. We are not without apprehension that, after the litigation which has taken place, it may be difficult now to obtain an equally favourable offer from that Government.

We are, nevertheless, of opinion that the present case is one justifying, and indeed calling for, representation and remonstrance. It is admitted, on the part of the Venezuelan Custom-house authorities that the conduct of the master of the "Alfred" was perfectly bonâ fide, and that the breach of regulation for which the fine was exacted was merely formal. The case in substance is this:—A British ship arriving in a port of Venezuela in April 1861 has been fined 500 dollars for coming into Venezuelan waters without having had her manifest made out at Liverpool in a form prescribed by a law of Venezuela, passed only eight months before, and the existence of which does not appear to have been known at Liverpool when she left that port; the manifests which she actually produced being regularly certified (as that law required) by the Venezuelan Consul at Liverpool, to whom the owners and shippers would naturally and reasonably look for information and guidance with respect to matters of form required by the laws of the Republic, which (while they might excusably be ignorant of them) he must be presumed to know. Without laying down any general doctrine as to the responsibility of Governments for the acts and representations of their Consuls in foreign ports, we think that the exaction of a penalty from a foreign vessel for such a cause, and under such circumstances, is inconsistent with the principles on which commercial intercourse between civilized and friendly nations ordinarily is, and always ought to be, carried on; and we infer, from the offer of compensation to which we have already adverted, that this must have been the view of the case which was taken at the time by the Venezuelan Government themselves.

As it does not appear that the terms of the Law of the 12th July, 1860, were known to the owners or master of the "Alfred" when the manifests were made out, it is, perhaps, unnecessary to make much remark upon them. In the translation of that law, with which we are furnished, the word "manifest" is used in the singular number; but it is not expressly stated that every such manifest must be contained in a single document. We should have thought (applying ordinary principles of judicial interpretation to this law), that the requirements of the second Article would have been substantially complied with by the production at Puerto Cabello of the two manifests, which were, in fact, certified by the Venezuelan Consul at Liverpool; provided the particulars contained in those two documents were such as, if contained in a single document, would have been sufficient. It does not very clearly appear whether this was or was not the case; but it seems that the manifest of the goods shipped for Maracaibo was not, in fact, originally produced with the other manifest, at the time when the Custom-house officers at Puerto Cabello made the ordinary demand for documents; although the master has been exonerated by these officers from all imputation of mala fides or intentional concealment.

Draft of Order in Council suspending, as regards Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn and all officers and men engaged by them for service in China, the operations of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 59 Geo. III, cap. 69.

Doctors' Commons, August 26, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th August instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 12th August instant,* he was directed to state to me that, with the view of giving more complete effect to the wishes of Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn, Her Majesty's Government have it in contemplation to issue an Order in Council, suspending, as regards Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn, and all officers and men engaged by them for service in China, the operation of the Act 59 Geo. III, cap. 69, commonly known as the Foreign Enlistment Act; and to request that I would prepare and transmit to your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, the draft of such an Order, and also to suggest to me the expediency of the Order being so worded that Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn may be at full liberty—

First. To accept for themselves naval and military service under the Chinese Government.

Secondly. To fit out and equip vessels for warlike purposes in China; and,

Thirdly. To enlist British subjects to serve in naval and military operations there.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose copies of the Orders in Council passed in 1835 and 1837, suspending the Foreign Enlistment Act in favour of officers and men of the late British Auxiliary Legion. The confidential printed papers respecting Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn were also annexed.

I have the honour to report—

That I have prepared, in obedience to your Lordship's directions, the Order in Council above referred to, and that the same is hereunto annexed.

This Order in Council has been drawn, to a certain extent, upon the precedent of the Order June 9, 1835; but it has occurred to me that there are three points to which, in the consideration of the present Order in Council, your Lordship's attention should be especially directed, viz.:—

1. In the former communication to me from the Foreign Office, it appeared that Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn asked for license to enlist only 600 British subjects; but as no such limitation is suggested in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th instant, I have not confined the license to be granted by the Order in Council to any specific number of persons.

2. I have concluded from the statements contained in both communications from the Foreign Office that it was not the intention of Her Majesty's Government to grant, as in 1835, an unqualified license to all British subjects to enlist themselves in the service of a foreign State, but to grant a qualified license to enlist themselves in such service only under the command of Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn.

It seemed to me that such a qualification, however little needed in the case of the Queen of Spain, might for obvious reasons be very necessary in the case of the Emperor of China; but if I have mistaken in this particular the intention of Her Majesty's Government, I would beg that the Order in Council might be sent back to me for alteration in this respect.

3. Nothing being said as to any limitation of time with respect to the operation of the Order in Council, I have added the limitation of two years (renewable by a subsequent Order) from the precedent of 1835.

Claim of owners of American ship "Daring" for detention of a shipment of saltpetre at Calcutta.

My Lord, Temple, August 29, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter and its inclosure, from Mr. Adams, containing further particulars respecting the detention of the United States' ship "Daring" at Calcutta, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether there is anything in these papers to cause us to alter or modify the opinion on this subject expressed in our Report of the 1st instant.*

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that the previous papers were also annexed for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Mr. Adams of the 4th of August and its inclosure do not in any way alter the narrative of material facts on which we advised in our Report of the 1st instant, and we see no cause to alter or modify that opinion.

Regulations and restrictions in conditions of service, after enlistment, of British subjects into military and naval service of China.

Sir, Privy Council Office, Whitehall, August 29, 1862.

I AM directed by the Lord President to transmit to you, for the information of Earl Russell, the inclosed letter which I have just received from the Attorney-General and the Queen's Advocate, in which those Law Officers suggest the expediency of some regulations and restrictions being laid down by the Government in reference to the conditions of service, after enlistment, of British subjects who should enter the military and naval service of the Emperor of China under the sanction of the Order which is to be submitted to Her Majesty's approval at the Council to be held to-morrow.

The Attorney-General and Queen's Advocate to Mr. Helps.

Sir, Doctors' Commons, August 29, 1862.

WE are honoured with your letter of the 28th August instant, stating that you were directed by the Lord President of the Council to transmit to us for our perusal and correction the accompanying Draft of an Order in Council under the Foreign Enlistment Act, granting permission to Mr. H. N. Lay and Captain Osborn to enter the naval and military service of, and to fit out and equip vessels and engage officers and men for, the Emperor of China, and also authorizing British subjects, under certain conditions, to enter the military and naval service of the Emperor.

In obedience to the directions of the Lord President we have perused and considered this Draft Order in Council, and have the honour to report—

That we have settled the Draft Order in Council, and have appended our initials thereto. It did not seem to us practicable to include in the Order any provisions regulating or restricting the conditions of service after enlistment. At the same time, regard being had to the very peculiar nature of the service, we would venture to suggest that it might be expedient that some regulations and restrictions should form the subject of communications or of an understanding in this respect between the Government and Mr. Lay and Captain Osborn. As an illustration of our meaning, we would point out the expediency of care being taken to guard against such of Her Majesty's subjects as may enlist being placed under the immediate command of Chinese officers, or being mixed up with the general forces of the Emperor.

The necessity for this suggestion appears to us to arise from a consideration of the barbarous manner in which hostilities have been, and in all probability will be, carried on to a greater or less extent by the forces of the Emperor of China.

Not necessary to send a Custom-house officer from Liverpool to Nassau to give evidence in the case of the "Oreto."

Doctors' Commons, September 3, 1862.

THE Queen's Advocate presents his compliments to Mr. Layard, and with reference to his note of this morning begs to state that the Queen's Advocate has conferred with the Attorney-General, and they have together perused the inclosures marked 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, contained in the letter from the Treasury of the 26th August last, and are of opinion that it will not be necessary to send a Custom-house officer from Liverpool to Nassau to give evidence in the case of the "Oreto."

At the same time they are desirous of pointing out to the attention of Mr. Layard that the evidence of the Custom-house officer negatives only the arming of the "Oreto," and the putting warlike stores on board of her, and is silent as to any other circumstances of suspicion, such as any peculiarities in the equipment of the vessel, her being pierced for guns, or the like, and as to any statement of the Captain or others as to her real destination.

Request of Mr. Haigh to obtain a stay of the proceedings before the Prize Court in the case of the "Bermuda."

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th August ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 4th July last, and to our previous Reports upon the case of the "Bermuda,"* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, a letter from Mr. Haigh, dated the 5th August ultimo, inclosing certified copies of affidavits relative to the capture of that vessel; and to request that we would take Mr. Haigh's letter and the affidavits which he inclosed into our consideration, and report to your Lordship whether the statements therein made would induce us to alter or modify the view which we have hitherto taken of this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we find nothing in Mr. Haigh's letter of the 5th August, and in the certified copies of affidavits inclosed therein, relative to the capture of the "Bermuda," to induce us to alter or modify the view we have hitherto taken of this case. Two matters only appear to us to call for special remark in Mr. Haigh's letter, with reference to each of which he is in error. He seems to suppose that the extent of territorial waters from the shore has been extended beyond three miles owing to the increased range of cannon in recent times; but we think that, whatever the theory may have been on which the three-miles distance was adopted, and whatever change in this respect it may be thought expedient to introduce by express Convention between Maritime States, the old rule is still in force. Again, he misrepresents the law as regards the capture of a neutral vessel by one of two belligerents in territorial waters, and not on the high seas. A capture so made is illegal; and the illegality, if established before the Prize Court, is an admissible and just ground for resisting a sentence of condemnation on the part of the persons claiming the ship, and independent of the Government whose territory has been violated. The confusion is between such a case as that now suggested and the case of the capture of an enemy's ship by a cruizer of the other belligerent. In that case, the act of the violation of neutral territory is the only matter that can be complained of; and this complaint comes, from obvious reasons, from the State whose territorial and supreme rights have been outraged by such violation. Moreover, we find nothing to lead to the inference that the point of capture within territorial waters was not raised and entertained on behalf of the owners before the Prize Court. We still think this a case in which no ground of interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government has been established.

Extradition from St. Lucia of persons accused of crimes coming under the Extradition Treaty of 13th February, 1843.

Case of the fraudulent bankrupt Léandre Sauvignon.

Temple, September 3, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th August ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us correspondence, as marked in the margin,* which had taken place between your Lordship's Department, the Colonial Office, and the French Ambassador at this Court, on the subject of the extradition demanded by the Governor of Martinique from the Administrator of St. Lucia, of certain persons accused of crimes coming under the Extradition Treaty of the 13th February, 1843, between this country and France.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that we should perceive that in one of the three cases in question, that of Léandre Sauvignon, charged with fraudulent bankruptcy, the accused was actually arrested under a warrant issued by the British Colonial authorities, but that the question having arisen whether such arrest was authorized by any local law of St. Lucia, the Attorney-General expressed his doubts that any such authority existed, and the prisoner was accordingly liberated. And that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the law laid down by the Attorney-General of St. Lucia in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That assuming, as we must do, on the authority of the Attorney-General of St. Lucia, that fraudulent bankruptcy is not an offence by the lex loci, we are of opinion that the Governor of the Colony had no legal power, and was not called upon under the Treaty of Extradition between Great Britain and France, of the 13th February, 1843, to deliver up the person against whom the charge alleged was that of fraudulent bankruptcy. By the terms of the Treaty, and of the Act giving it force (6 & 7 Vict., c. 75), the offence is to be "so established as that the laws of the country where the fugitive or person so accused should be found would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime had been there committed." This clause undoubtedly provides for the nature and amount of the evidence to be adduced; but in our opinion it goes farther, and in effect requires that the offence for which extradition may be demanded shall be an offence under the laws of each of the two countries.

Convention of Claims and Additional Article of 28th April, 1862. Consistency of above Convention with Tripartite Convention of 31st October, 1861, between France, Great Britain, and Spain.

Temple, September 5, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th of June ultimo, addressed to Sir John Harding, then Her Majesty's Advocate-General, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to him a printed copy of a Convention concluded by Sir Charles Wyke with the Mexican Government on the 28th of April last, for the settlement of British claims upon the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the Queen's Advocate would find at page 26 of the accompanying confidential papers Sir Charles Wyke's report of the circumstances attending the signature of the Convention, and the objects sought to be attained by it. He would also find at pages 56, 116, 126, Part I, and pages 11, 39, 47, Part II, of the papers presented to Parliament respecting Mexico, copies of which were also inclosed, what had passed at Washington respecting Mr. Corwin's negotiations with the Mexican Government. He would also find in the accompanying volumes at the passages marked, the Decrees referred to in the Xth Article of Sir Charles Wyke's Convention.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that the Queen's Advocate would take these several documents into his consideration, and report to your Lordship whether the terms of the Convention of the 28th of April last are inconsistent with those of the Tripartite Convention of the 31st of October last, of which a copy was also inclosed; and if so, whether to the extent of rendering it inexpedient that Her Majesty should ratify it, or whether there is any other reason why, in his opinion, it should not be so ratified.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that two memoranda relating to the subject were likewise inclosed for his information.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th June ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 7th June, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a despatch from Sir Charles Wyke (No. 67, May 11), inclosing a copy of an Additional Article to the Treaty of the 28th of April last which he had concluded with the Mexican Government, and to request that we would take this Additional Article into our consideration, together with the Convention itself then before us, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not see how the conclusion of a separate Convention between this country and Mexico, upon terms of special advantage to this country, can be reconciled with the terms of the Tripartite Convention of the 31st October, 1861, if the latter is to be regarded as still continuing in force, notwithstanding the disagreement of the Commissioners, and the discontinuance of joint operations in Mexico on the 9th of April last. We do not think that "any acquisition of territory," within the meaning of the IInd Article of the Tripartite Convention' is involved in the terms of the Convention of the 28th of April last; but the security contracted to be given for the payment of British claims by the IVth Article of the latter Convention does seem to us to be a "special advantage," which it was not competent for either of the Contracting Parties, during the subsistence of the engagements contained in the Tripartite Convention, to seek to obtain by any separate negotiation with Mexico.

The question, then, arises whether the conduct pursued in Mexico by the French Commissioners can safely be regarded as having so far released Great Britain from the engagements of the Tripartite Convention as to make it competent for Her Majesty's Representatives in Mexico, after the discontinuance of the joint operations, to adopt a "completely separate and independent line of action," and to stipulate for a separate settlement of the claims of this country on Mexico, involving special advantages to this country, without any notification to the French Government that the Tripartite Convention was considered to be at end? This view was taken and acted upon at the time, both by the English and by the Spanish Commissioners, and it does not seem to have been met by any objection or remonstrance on the part of the French Commissioners (see their joint letter, dated Cordova, 15th April, 1862, to Sir G. Wyke and Commodore Dunlop, at page 6 of the confidential papers). Nevertheless, we think that it was erroneous, and it certainly appears (from the Foreign Office despatches Nos. 109 and 117 of Part II of the Correspondence laid before Parliament) to have been at variance with the views and intentions then entertained by Her Majesty's Government.

For these reasons we are not without serious apprehension that the ratification of this Convention by Her Majesty might lead to misunderstanding between this country and France,—unless it should result from communications between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the Emperor that the events which have occurred in Mexico are regarded by France as having virtually dissolved the engagements contracted by the Tripartite Convention, and, consequently, that the ratification of the Convention of the 28th April would not now be regarded by that country as involving any breach of those engagements.

With respect to the Additional Article inclosed in Sir Charles Wyke's despatch No. 67 of the 11th May last, we have to observe that it makes the material guarantee which it professes to concede to the British Government dependent upon the existence of a state of civil war in those ports and places in which it may be put in force, so that the means which it authorizes the British Government to adopt for the purpose of securing the fulfilment of the international obligations of Mexico towards this country in those ports and places would involve practically a forcible intervention by Great Britain in favour of the de facto Government for the time being in Mexico, for the purpose of putting down the resistance to that Government of the local authorities of seaports taking part with their political adversaries, and whose resistance that Government might not be able by its own strength to overcome. Without saying that such an arrangement would be open to insuperable objections under all possible circumstances, we cannot disguise from ourselves that it is open to very serious objections, under the actual circumstances of Mexico, more especially when due regard is had to the origin and nature of those differences between France and Great Britain and Spain which led to the suspension of joint operations under the Tripartite Convention.

Subject to these considerations, which we humbly submit to your Lordships' judgment, and to the fact that the pecuniary assistance from the United States to Mexico, in expectation of which the Convention of the 28th April was concluded will, not be forthcoming, we are not aware of any further reason why this Convention should not be ratified.

We have, &c.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of the Bahamas, dated the 18th August ultimo, stating the circumstances under which the British vessel "Herald" was chased and fired upon by the United States' ship "Andirondack," off Nassau.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he inclosed a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington on the subject (No. 127), and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 20th of August, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 142), respecting the case of the "Herald."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Mr. Seward to the Secretary of the Navy appears to us quite satisfactory upon this subject. That it is not clear that any intentional violation of international law has been committed by the Captain of the "Andirondack;" that if the alleged violation had been committed, the despatch of Mr. Seward contains all the apology that can reasonably be required.

Claim of Messrs. Dorrington and Forwood for restoration of the "Adela," and for damages for detention of their vessel.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th August ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a Memorial from Messrs. Dorrington and Forwood, requesting that a demand may be made upon the United States' Government for the restoration to them of the British steamer "Adela," lately captured by the United States' cruizer "Quaker City" while on a voyage from Liverpool to Nassau; and that Messrs. Dorrington and Forwood also apply for damages on account of the detention of their vessel; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 19th August ultimo, transmitting the accompanying letter containing further particulars respecting the case of the "Adela."

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th August ultimo, transmitting further papers containing further information respecting the "Adela," and stating that it appears to your Lordship that the alleged capture of this vessel in British waters is a matter for evidence. That the United States' Government do not pretend to any jurisdiction in British waters, and, if satisfied on this point, will of course give up the vessel. But supposing the "Adela" to have been beyond a marine league from the land, a question arises as to the right of seizing the vessel without search.

That your Lordship considers it probable that a list of vessels supposed to be engaged in conveying contraband of war to the so-styled Confederate States may have been furnished from London or Liverpool to the United States' Government; and such a list, your Lordship concludes, would furnish good ground for search, but not for capture without search: for a vessel may have been erroneously inserted in such list, or her destination may have been altered, and she may have been at the time of her capture employed in legitimate trade between one British port and another. That there is also another point on which your Lordship would be glad of our opinion, namely, the instructions to be given to Vice-Admiral Sir Alexander Milne and Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington. That it seems to your Lordship that British cruizers ought not, if they can prevent it, to allow any British merchant-vessel to be captured in British waters, but that if captured beyond British waters the question of her carrying contraband of war to the Confederates ought to be left, in the first instance, to the Prize Courts of the United States. That if condemned in the District Court, appeal ought to be made by the owners of the vessel to the higher Court, and so on to the highest.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's further letters of the 21st and 27th August ultimo, transmitting further papers respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, assuming the accuracy of the statement of the master of the steamship "Adela," there can be no doubt that she was illegally captured upon two grounds, viz., first, by reason of her being at the time of capture within British territorial waters; secondly, by reason of her being seized while in the prosecution of a lawful trade. But the "Adela" being now before the Prize Court, both these questions must be dealt with as questions of evidence by that tribunal.

We must presume that on the statements of the master being proved, the "Adela" will be dismissed with full costs against the captor; on the other hand, if the weight of evidence on the spot should be such as reasonably to satisfy the Court that the alleged destination of the ship was not the real destination, and that the real destination was a blockaded port, an opposite result may be anticipated.

With respect to the orders said to have been given to the United States' naval officers by their Government, we understand from Mr. Seward's note to the Secretary of the Navy that at all events they are no longer to be in force. As regards the orders themselves, we are of opinion that if sanctioned and continued they would have called for prompt and firm remonstrance on the part of the British Government; and even as matters now stand, we think it may be proper that the view taken of these orders by Her Majesty's Government should be distinctly expressed.

Seizure of vessels without preliminary search upon the high seas.

To order the systematic seizure of all vessels, though apparently and primâ facie carrying on a lawful trade, without any preliminary search upon the high seas, and without the discovery, during this search, of some strong evidence of suspicion against the vessel, is to subject the mercantile marine of neutral vessels to a system of oppression and annoyance which no neutral Government can be expected to tolerate. It is a state of things but little removed from treating neutrals as belligerents; practically, indeed, fixing upon them the penalties of the latter, without the incidental advantages of the former condition. The unjust seizure, under urgent circumstances, of a neutral vessel may be considered as one of the inevitable burdens which a state of war imposes upon a neutral, and may be partially compensated by the condemnation of the captor in costs, or costs and damages; but the indiscriminate and general seizure of vessels without previous search is to convert a necessary and tolerable exception into an unnecessary and intolerable rule. With respect to the course which Her Majesty's navy should pursue in these very anxious and trying circumstances in which they are placed, it would seem to us that while Her Majesty remains a neutral in the present war, the case must be of a highly exceptionable character which would justify their interference with the capture of British vessels upon the high seas, by cruizers lawfully commissioned by the United States' Government: but within British waters the case is very different, and it is clearly the duty of Her Majesty's ships to prevent by force the commission of any act of violence by a foreign vessel within the territorial waters or dominion of Her Majesty. As regards the distance from the shore to which the jurisdiction of the adjacent territory extends, we are of opinion that whatever the theory may have been on which the distance of a marine league was adopted, and notwithstanding the greatly-increased range of artillery at the present day, the old rule is still in force, and must be adhered to.

We venture, however, to suggest that it is well worthy the consideration of Her Majesty's Government whether some agreement, more or less formal, might not be entered into as soon as possible between the Maritime States, especially Great Britain, France, and the United States, to the effect that the territorial waters of each State should extend to the distance at which newly-invented ordnance can throw shot, whatever that distance may be determined to be. It seems to us that it would be expedient to establish, during the continuance of the present war, a Consul or Vice-Consul at Key West for the protection of British shipping.

Administration of property of a British subject named Clark or Clarkson, supposed to have been a convict.

Doctors' Commons, September 8, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile, reporting the steps taken by him as regards the administration of the property of a British subject named Clark or Clarkson, supposed to have been a convict; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Thomson in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's directions I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Thomson appears to have acted very properly in the steps which he has already taken.

If the said William Clarkson was in reality identical with Juan Clark, the unreprieved convict, he was clearly under an incapacity to dispose of property by testament or will.

Mr. Thomson should apply to the Tribunal at Santiago, which has cognizance of the case, for leave to intervene on behalf of Her Majesty, as the sole person entitled to the effects of the deceased; and I presume that time to establish the interest of the Crown would be granted to him as a matter of course. This interest must be established by evidence which identifies the convict Clarkson with the deceased Clark. Mr. Thomson must take care that the identifying evidence is such as in substance and in form is admissible according to the lex fori or the law at Santiago.

It does not appear upon what kind of evidence Mr. Thomson has clearly founded his opinion of this identity. It is very probable, however, that there may be sufficient evidence procurable at Santiago or in the vicinity to make out a primâ facie case at least on behalf of the Crown. I would further suggest that if the deceased person was a convict he was incapable of acquiring a foreign domicil, and that the question as to the succession to his personal effects ought, according to the usages of comity, to be remitted to the forum originis, that is, to England, in which case the Queen's Proctor would take charge of the interests of the Crown, and advice, upon the usual principles as to the disposition of the property, would be tendered to Her Majesty.

Refusal of United States' Consul at Liverpool to legalize certain documents required by Messrs. Dorrington and Forwood in the defence of their vessel the "Adela."

Temple, September 9, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us in Mr. Layard's letter of the 16th ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the previous day's date, inclosing a memorial from Messrs. Dorrington and Forwood respecting the seizure of their vessel, the "Adela," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Leech, Harrison, and Forwood, dated the 15th August ultimo, inclosing copies of their correspondence with the United States' Consul at Liverpool, relative to the refusal of the latter to legalize certain documents required by them in the defence of their vessel, and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter and the papers submitted to us into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us, from the papers submitted to us, that a British steamer, the "Adela," has been captured by a ship of the United States' navy, and brought into the Prize Court for adjudication.

It is clear, and will not be disputed, that a neutral vessel is entitled in this Court of the Law of Nations to every legitimate means of defence.

It is upon the presumption that all such means are conceded to the owners of the captured vessel, that other States are bound to respect the decisions of this Tribunal.

To appoint an agent for the purpose of conducting the defence, and prove by proper evidence the ownership of the captured vessel, are the primary steps which it is incumbent upon the owners to take.

Any municipal regulation which obstructed or prevented the taking of these steps would be in violation of international law.

It appears that in the Prize Court, as in the Municipal Courts of the United States, this appointment of an agent, and this proof of ownership, are required, when the owner is resident in a foreign State, to be attested by a Notary Public resident in that State, and that the fact of the person who so attests, being a Notary Public, must be authenticated by the certificate of the Consul of the United States resident in the same country.

It is clear that the duty of the Consul in this matter is confined to ascertaining and certifying the fact that the attesting person is what he pretends to be, a Notary Public.

In the case of the "Adela," the Consul of the United States at Liverpool refuses to authenticate in the usual way the fact, which he does not gainsay, that Mr. Bateson is a Notary Public. He founds his refusal on the ground of his private knowledge (or rather information) of the guilt of the owners, which (so far as relates to this ship) is the fact at issue, and awaiting judicial determination in the cause: and he makes two suggestions, one, that the owner should cross the Atlantic, and appear personally in the Prize Court; another, that he (the Consul) should attest the papers requisite for the defence, and send them, not to the agent for the accused, but direct to the accusing party, namely, the Government of Washington.

We are of opinion that this conduct of the American Consul is not warranted by international usage or law; that its manifest tendency is to cripple and impede the right of defence to which the owners of the captured vessel are entitled, and gravely to discredit what should be above all suspicion, the administration of justice in the Prize Court.

We would humbly advise your Lordship to represent to the Minister from Washington the unusual and unfair proceeding upon the part of the United States' Consul, and to endeavour to obtain from the Minister directions to the Consul to follow the usual and ordinary course.

We reserve our further opinion until we know the result of this application.

Proceeds of sale of a British vessel at Bangkok taken charge of by the British Consul.

Doctors' Commons, September 9, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying letter from the Board of Trade dated the 21st August ultimo, inclosing a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok, stating the circumstances under which he had taken charge of the proceeds arising from the sale of a British vessel at that port; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Consul has acted in this matter no doubt with the best intentions, and possibly for the benefit of all persons interested in the proceeds of the sale of the ship, but not in the execution of any duty imposed upon him by law.

That it does not appear to me that your Lordship, any more than my Lords of the Privy Council for Trade, ought to take upon yourself the responsibility of advising the Consul as to the best method of relieving himself from liabilities voluntarily incurred. But that, nevertheless, it might be suggested that if any mortgagee of the ship would institute a suit in the High Court of Admiralty here against the proceeds of the ship in the hands of the Consul, the Consul would then be directed to pay them over into the custody of the registry of that Court, and the several claimants would then be legally paid according to the priority of their claims. Such a proceeding need not be attended with any great expense, and, at all events, is the one which would most effectually relieve the Consul from liabilities.

Restrictions on trade between New York and the Bahamas.

My Lord, Temple, September 12, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th September instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 172, August 20, 1862), respecting the restrictions imposed by the United States' Government on trade between New York and the Bahamas, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon, with reference to the draft note to be presented to the United States' Government which was sent to us for our opinion on the 16th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the gravity of the circumstances which were the subject of our former Reports is, in our opinion, rather increased than diminished by the grounds on which the proceedings of the New York Custom-house are explained and sought to be justified in Mr. Collector Barney's letter to Mr. Chase, and (as it appears) approved and sanctioned by the Government of the United States.

It is admitted in this letter that the prohibitions and restrictions in question are directed exclusively against the commerce of one particular British possession, namely, Nassau. It is therefore clear that unless they can be justified by the Law of Nations, they violate the terms of the subsisting Commercial Treaties between the United States and this country, and furnish ground for international complaint, and (if thought necessary) for reprisals by Her Majesty's Government.

The position assumed by the United States' Government is this,—that it is entitled to prohibit (or to place under restrictions equivalent to prohibition) the exportations from New York, and from Great Britain viâ New York, to Nassau, of articles which are neither in their own nature contraband of war, nor made contraband for the purpose of the present hostilities by any general and public declaration of that Government, with a view thereby to prevent British subjects resident at Nassau, or making that Colony a depôt for purposes of commerce, from trading in those articles with the Confederate States. The inference that the articles, though having really and bonâ fide a British destination, are likely to be afterwards used for the purposes of the trade between Nassau and the Confederate States, is drawn (as explained by Collector Barney) from the magnitude of the consignments; from a comparison between the amount of the trade in similar articles carried on between New York and Nassau in former times and the amount during the present war; from the notorious existence of an extensive trade, during the war, between the Confederates and Nassau; and from the known or reputed connection of certain merchants or mercantile houses in England and at Nassau with that trade. The possibility or probability being thus arrived at that such a use may be made of some of these articles after their arrival at Nassau, it is concluded that the United States' Government are entitled to stop them at New York.

From this conclusion we dissent.

The trade between Nassau and the Confederate States is (subject to those limitations which the Law of Nations has established) as legitimate as the trade between Great Britain and any other part of the world. Even if the Government of the United States were in a condition to ask other nations to assume (which is very far indeed from being the case) that every part of the coasts of the Confederate States is effectively blockaded, British subjects at Nassau would still have a perfect right to sell goods to all such shippers, whether of the Confederate States or others, as might be able to resort to Nassau for the purpose of buying them there; and the dealers at Nassau, or their principals in Europe, in making such sales, are not chargeable with any, the slightest, violation of neutrality. If contraband articles are shipped for any part of the Confederate States they are liable to seizure according to the Law of Nations; if articles not contraband are shipped for any blockaded place, they also may be seized upon the high seas, according to the Law of Nations. But the liability of the trade between Nassau and the Confederate States, or any part of it, to be intercepted upon the high seas, by a maritime capture according to the rules of international law, does not render the dealing in the articles which supply that trade, by British subjects within British jurisdiction, less lawful and innocent than if there were no such liability; much less does it justify a belligerent Government in superadding to the known belligerent rights of blockade and of maritime capture an embargo within its own ports upon any part of the trade of a neutral nation with one of its colonial possessions, merely because this may possibly tend to cripple or embarrass another lawful trade between that neutral Colony and the country of the other belligerent.

It will be for Her Majesty's Government to determine how far (if at all) the importance of maintaining friendly relations, under present circumstances, with the United States may preponderate over the risk of disturbing these relations, by assuming a decided attitude in opposition to the violation of Treaty, and departure from the principles of international law thus attempted.

The question is, no doubt, rendered one of some practical difficulty by the extent to which the trade between the Bahamas and the Confederate States is of a really contraband character; but the doctrine of the United States on this subject has always been the same as our own, viz., that neutral Governments are under no obligation to stop a contraband trade between their subjects and a belligerent Power; and that the only penalty of such a trade is the liability of contraband shipments to capture on the high seas by the other belligerent.

The false assumptions which seem to pervade the views of the United States' Government with respect to Nassau are, that it is a violation of neutrality for a British Colony to carry on any active trade with the Confederate States during the existence of the blockade; and that in aid of the inefficiency of the blockading force an embargo may lawfully be placed on a particular trade of British commerce at New York.

Claim of owners of the "Will o' the Wisp," captured at Matamoros, and released by sentence of Prize Court.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 15, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying letter, dated September 8, from the Colonial Office, inclosing a Memorial addressed to the Queen by certain British subjects resident in Nova Scotia, claiming compensation from the United States' Government for the seizure of the British vessel "Will o' the Wisp" at Matamoros, by the United States' ship "Montgomery." He was also pleased to inclose other papers bearing upon the subject which have been received at the Foreign Office, and to request that I would take the case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, transmitting a further despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 170) respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's directions I have the honour to report—

That I have taken this case and the various papers which accompany it into consideration, and am of opinion that the sentence of the Prize Court releasing the "Will o' the Wisp" ought to have been accompanied by a condemnation of the captor in the costs of the suit. The justice of the case would seem to me also to have required an award of damages against the captor, though upon this point I admit there may be room for doubt. I understand that the facts elicited by the investigation before and at the trial to have been these:—That the vessel was seized just outside the neutral waters of Matamoros; that she was at the time engaged in transhipping on board lighters (among other cargo), gunpowder and ammunition for Matamoros, a neutral port; that these articles had been purchased by a special order for the neutral Government at the time of the capture; on the hand it appears from Mr. Consul Blacker's despatch (June 9, 1862), that the captain had originally made to the captor false and contradictory statements respecting the destination of the gunpowder and ammunition; that these had originally been put clandestinely on board; were not declared in the ship's manifest, nor mentioned by the captain of the vessel to Captain Hunter, the captor, when he first boarded the vessel.

These were circumstances of suspicion, but they were quite rebutted by the fact that the articles in question were actually in course of transmission to the neutral purchasers when Captain Hunter boarded for the second time the "Will o' the Wisp." It is clear too from the despatch of Consul Blacker that the vessel was seized by the captor upon a most erroneous notion of the international law applicable to the case, viz., that he had a right to look beyond the actual and immediate destination of the articles to a neutral port, and to consider what would probably become of them after they had reached this lawful destination in some further and future transaction. This notion is, indeed, distinctly and satisfactorily refuted by the Judge of the Prize Court, and it seems to me that his sound premises ought to have led him to the equally sound conclusion that the captor must pay the cost and damages incident to his unlawful act. That learned person acted upon a true principle, indeed, in maintaining as a general proposition of Prize Law, that where the circumstances of a case disclose probable cause of capture, the Court might in the exercise of its discretion refuse to condemn the captor in costs and damages. In the case before him the Judge found this probable cause in the circumstances of secrecy and suspicion with respect to the gunpowder and ammunition to which I have referred; but he does not seem to have adverted to the fact that the captor was aware at the time he made the seizure that these articles were purchased by and actually being sent to a neutral purchaser in a neutral port, and that the captor seized the vessel believing her nevertheless to be lawful prize. It is quite certain that this ignorance of the law on the part of the captor furnishes no legal excuse for the capture.

I am of opinion, therefore, that it would be proper that Her Majesty's Government should remonstrate on these grounds upon the inadequacy of the sentence of the Prize Court. This remonstrance should state that in their opinion the justice of the case required condemnation in damages, but that there can be no reasonable doubt that the omission to condemn the captor in the costs of this unjust seizure was a miscarriage on the part of the Judge, and a failure in justice which founded a claim for redress to the United States' Government.

ARGENTINE CONFEDERATION.

Case of Mr. Haycroft, condemned to refund price of lands purchased, and subsequently resold by him.

Doctors' Commons, September 15, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires to the Argentine Republic (No. 5, July 24, 1862), calling attention to a case in which Mr. Haycroft, a British subject, who purchased and subsequently resold some lands, has been condemned by a Court of Law to refund the price received by him for that land, on the plea that the title was defective; and also to transmit a Report on this subject from Mr. Thornton, Her Majesty's Minister to the Argentine Republic, dated the 5th September instant, now on leave of absence in this country, as also five volumes of correspondence in which I should find marked the previous papers bearing on the case; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion on the case, and that I would state whether I consider that Her Majesty's Government are called upon to take any or what steps in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there can be no doubt that according to unquestionable principles of public and international law, the obligations which a State, under one form of Government or under one Administration, contracts towards foreigners are binding upon it when that form of Government or that Administration has been changed. Nor can there be any doubt that a retrospective law, confiscating the property of an innocent owner, is, whatever name may be given to it, a wrongful act; and that in the case of a foreigner becoming the victim of such an act, the State to which he belongs is warranted by international law in demanding compensation from the State which has been the wrong doer. I assume that by the operation of such a law, Mr. Haycroft has been deprived of certain portions of land which he purchased in the State of Buenos Ayres. Nevertheless, it does not appear to me that this is a case in which, having regard to all the circumstances of it, Her Majesty's Government are called upon officially to interfere. It is important, I would humbly suggest, in these cases to bear in mind the distinction which in the nature of things, as well as in the laws and usages of States, subsists between real and personal property.

An English subject who chooses to purchase landed property and thereby contract the relations in some sort of a territorial subject in a South American Republic, which he knows to be in a condition of chronic revolution, perpetually changing both its Government and its laws, and especially those which relate to landed property, cannot, it seems to me, reasonably expect that his own Government shall interfere on his behalf whenever the laws of such a State, with which he has chosen so to incorporate himself, shall become oppressive and unjust towards all its territorial subjects, among which number he has chosen to enrol himself.

The possible abuse of such an interference on the part of Great Britain is, in the abstract, obvious; and the letter of Mr. Thornton is most significant as to the practical danger of that interference being invoked to confirm suspicious or fraudulent titles to land in these unsettled and ill-governed States. It is clear that the original titles to this class of property, if it did not deserve the appellation of "boletos de sangre" (tickets of blood),* were of a very questionable and odious character. It is clear that in 1856, when Mr. Haycroft purchased the land, he was aware of the peculiar character, if not of the vice, of the original title (for he bought it of near relatives of General Rosas), and of the great probability that the then Government of Buenos Ayres would rescind (as they did two years afterwards) the grant of General Rosas which constituted the title; and these are circumstances which render the suspicion of Mr. Thornton that Mr. Haycroft took the land in question, well knowing the jeopardy of the title, as payment for a bad debt, far from improbable. But even if there were no weight in these observations, it is manifest that Mr. Haycroft has a legal remedy for his wrong. The same tribunal which compelled him to restore the purchase-money to his vendee (Senhor Ochoa) must compel his vendor (Senhor Escurra) to restore the money to him. If that vendor be, as is suggested but not proved, a bankrupt, that is a misfortune to which Mr. Haycroft, like other purchasers, is liable. I entirely agree with Mr. Thornton that this fact, if it be one, is an unhappy accident, which founds no claim on the part of Mr. Haycroft for the interference of Her Majesty's Government, or any duty on their part to interfere.

This case, in my opinion, differs materially from that of Messrs. Gibson and Fair, upon which Earl Malmesbury wrote his despatch of March 16, 1859. That was a case of emphyteutical property, the holders of which were disturbed after an interval of twenty years' possession, having, moreover, themselves been sufferers by the conduct of General Rosas, and being free from all suspicion of knowingly purchasing under a bad title.

* See despatch of Mr. Consul Parish from Buenos Ayres, December 29, 1858.

It may, perhaps, be expedient that Her Majesty's Government should direct Her Majesty's Representative at Buenos Ayres to express the concern with which they learn that the good faith and credit of Buenos Ayres has been tarnished and shaken by retrospective legislation, confiscating property acquired by British subjects under the sanction of that Government, and the obvious tendency of such conduct to impair, unless compensation be awarded, the relations of amity between that country and Great Britain. But it would not seem to me necessary or expedient to take any further step in the present case.

I humbly tender this advice to your Lordship, and have, &c.

Seizure of British barque "A and A" at Ponce (Porto Rico), and detention of captain.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 15, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me therewith two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at Porto Rico (Nos. 18 and 19, of the 7th and 10th August), detailing the circumstances under which the British barque "A and A" was seized by the Spanish authorities at Ponce, and her captain forcibly detained; and inclosing a correspondence which has passed on the subject between Her Majesty's Consul, the Captain-General, and the British Vice-Consul at Ponce; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether any and what steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I agree with Mr. Cowper, Her Majesty's Consul-General at Porto Rico, that the Royal Order of 1751, inasmuch as it affects foreigners, was not virtually or at all abrogated by the Spanish Commercial Code. The effect of the Ordinance of Matriculos published in 1802, and referred to as binding by the Royal Order of 2nd July, 1847, is a more difficult question. On the one hand I think it impossible to deny that it is fully within the abstract competence of Spain to make such orders as she has done with respect to foreign vessels within the waters of her Colonies. Indeed, it is no more than Great Britain herself has done in some, though a much less, degree by the creation of Receivers of Wreck, &c., in England. On the other hand, privileges once accorded by one foreign State to another, such as those contained in the Royal Order of 1751, cannot be rightfully taken away without due and formal communication from the one State to the other, offering opportunities for remonstrance and for statement of reasons which may avail to prevent the withdrawal of the privilege. Nor can a bare statement in an Order of Proclamation that the "privileges of foreigners are extinguished in the Colonies" be accepted by foreign Governments as a solution of disputed point whether privileges granted with respect to the mother country do, or do not, in the absence of negative words, extend to her Colonies.

It appears to me that the intemperate language of Mr. Vice-Consul Basanta has probably prevented an amicable adjustment of this matter; as I gather, though the evidence be slight, from what is stated by Mr. Consul Cowper, that the usage has been de facto at least in favour of allowing the British Consul and captains the charge of British wrecks. I would humbly advise that the opportunity be taken to put the matter for the future upon a certain and sound footing, and that Mr. Consul Cowper be instructed not to seek to open the case of the "A and A," which seems to be practically closed by his judicious conduct, but to state that Her Majesty's Government trust that in future British Consuls and captains may be permitted to act unmolested in all cases relating to the custody, sale, and disposal of British vessels or wrecks where British interests alone are concerned; inasmuch as such permission is in accordance with the usages of all commercial and maritime States, and is supported in the case of Great Britain by the Royal Order of 1751.

If this representation should prove unavailing, it would be desirable that a question which is certainly important should be made the subject of more direct and formal negotiation with the Spanish Government.

Claim for damages by owners and charterers of the "Labuan," released by sentence of American Prize Court.

My Lord, Temple, September 17, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us in Mr. Layard's letter of the 22nd of August last, stating that with reference to the Reports of Her Majesty's late Advocate-General of the 22nd and 27th of March, and to our Reports of the 3rd and 11th of April,* respecting the case of the British steamer "Labuan," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, and with certain additional correspondence which has since passed respecting that vessel, including a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 341) notifying her release, and also a despatch from the Acting Consul at New York (No. 73) transmitting copies of the legal evidence and pleadings, a letter from Messrs. Lefevre and Co. dated the 16th August ultimo, inclosing letters from Messrs. Bailey and Leatham, the owners, and Messrs. De Jersey and Co., the charterers of the "Labuan," stating their claims for damages, and requesting that they may be supported by Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, and to request that we would take these claims into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken into our consideration all the papers submitted to us in this case.

The original injustice of the seizure of the "Labuan," which has been the subject of so much remonstrance and reclamation on the part of Her Majesty's Government, is now judicially established by the sentence of the American Prize Court.

It is manifest, however, that a sentence merely restoring the vessel to its owners, without the costs of the litigation and the damages incident to the detention, would fall very far short of that justice, of that "due reparation" (to use the language of Mr. Seward) to which the sufferers by this act of wrongful and unjustifiable violence are entitled.

Upon principle they are entitled to whatever damages have been occasioned by the act of the wrong-doer; and it is satisfactory to find that the precedents of the Prize Courts of the United States and of Great Britain have fully recognized and embodied this principle in their decisions.

We can scarcely suppose that the United States' Prize Court will fail to apply this principle to the particular case of the "Labuan," and to condemn the captor in damages as well as in costs.

We are clearly of opinion that the failure of the Prize Court to do justice in this respect would, in the particular case of the "Labuan," warrant the strongest remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government to that of the United States.

Assuming, however, that justice will be done in this respect, we must admit that it would be in accordance with the usage of these tribunals to refer the assessment of the damages to Commissioners appointed by the Court, whose duty it is to make a regular report of the several items and the amount of the damages.

But it seems to us that the peculiar circumstances of this case would warrant Her Majesty's Government in requiring immediate compensation both to the charterers and the owners directly from the Government of the United States.

The "Labuan" was seized at anchor in the waters of a neutral State while her captain was actually on shore.

The "Labuan" was British built, British registered, British owned; manned by a British crew, with a British flag and proper papers all perfectly regular; with no contraband on board; destined to a neutral port; making no attempt at concealment or resistance.

---

* Pages 70, 73, 83, and 92.

1862

There never was the slightest primâ facie justification for her seizure, which violated in the most flagrant manner the plainest and most unquestionable principles of international law.

The United States' Government, moreover, in whose name the seizure was made, was clearly apprised of all the circumstances connected with the ship,—her origin, her ownership, her papers, her cargo, her crew, her destination; and so apparent was the absence of any justifiable cause of seizure that the United States' Government never maintained in their correspondence, official or unofficial, or in any way or at any time, that they were prepared to allege or maintain the existence of any such cause.

Lord Lyons pointed out emphatically and carefully to Mr. Seward that to send the "Labuan" for adjudication to the Prize Court was a certain mode of largely increasing the expenses already incurred, and of adding to the amount of the hardships and inconveniences already suffered by this innocent ship.

Nevertheless the case was sent to the Prize Court, and with exactly the result which had been anticipated, namely, the flagrant injustice of the seizure judicially established, the expenses greatly and most unnecessarily aggravated.

The claims of the owners (Messrs. Bailey and Leatham) and charterers (Messrs. De Jersey and Co.) of the ship must, perhaps, if Her Majesty's Government require it, be submitted to the arbitration of some person professionally competent to decide upon them. Large as they are, they may be—we are far from saying they are not—just and due, but we desire to express our opinion that whatever authority, whether emanating from the Prize Court, or directly from the United States' Government, decides upon the admissibility of the various items in the demands, the damages ought to be assessed upon the principle that the seizure and the detention were throughout without a pretext of legal justification.

Search of the "Marie Louise" at Paimbœuf on suspicion of French deserters being on board.

My Lord, Temple, September 22, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th September instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 16th of April last* respecting the case of the arrest by the gendarmerie of Paimbœuf of a part of the crew of the British barque "Marie Louise," of Quebec, on the charge of their being French deserters, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft of a despatch which, in accordance with the suggestions of the Law Officers, was addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (No. 454), instructing his Excellency to take steps to obtain an explanation as to the grounds for the treatment of three of the crew of the "Marie Louise."

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose a despatch from Mr. Gray, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Paris (No. 77), inclosing M. Thouvenel's reply (dated the 26th August ultimo) to Lord Cowley's representation, together with the observations of the master of the "Marie Louise" thereupon, which your Lordship considered it advisable to call for; and to request that we would take these further papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether it is desirable to take any, and if so what, further steps in regard to this case.

The Report of the 16th of April was also annexed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is not stated in the papers now submitted to us whether the three sailors mentioned in the despatch of M. Thouvenel of the 25th July, 1862, as Marjolli, Arene, and a third unnamed, are or are not the persons referred to in the Law Officers' Report of the 16th April last as Francis Roberts, Walter Aylward, and Sanchez, whose cases the Law Officers then recommended should be followed up, and distinct explanations required, in writing, as to the grounds of the treatment which each of them had received. If these men are not the same, then we are no nearer to the means of forming a satisfactory conclusion than we were in April, and we can only refer your Lordship to the recommendation which we then submitted. But if, as we should infer is the case, the men, however named, are identical, two at least of the three having entered themselves by false and English names on the ship's articles of the "Marie Louise," then we think that as regards the arrests on the ground of desertion from the French navy, satisfactory explanation has been given, and there are no reasonable grounds for Her Majesty's Government further interfering in the matter.

The case of the French Government is that two of the three were actually French deserters, and admitted themselves to be so, having, as well as the third, sought for concealment under false names. As regards two of the three, the account given by the captain of the "Marie Louise" at Gloucester, on the 22nd August, is fully in accordance with that which is put forward by the French Minister on the information furnished to him. The captain, speaking of two of the men who were seized out of his ship by the gendarmes at Paimbœuf, says distinctly that "the men confessed themselves deserters from the [French] Marine, being entered in my articles under false names." The third of the arrested men M. Thouvenel describes also as a Frenchman who had once belonged to the Marine, who was also suspected (and we cannot infer without reason) of desertion, and who having been apprehended on that suspicion was liberated as soon as his innocence was established by proof of his having received a regular discharge. To this part of the statement of M. Thouvenel, which has been submitted to the captain, no contradiction is offered, and we therefore assume it to be correct.

There remains the case of the carpenter, Joseph Chartier, who the captain still alleges was stopped by a gendarme on his way to the office of M. Vandersluys for a letter for his captain, and sent back to his ship. Referring to the letter of M. Vandersluys himself to the "Administrateur de l'Inscription Maritime" at Paimbœuf of the 16th March, copy of which is furnished by M. Thouvenel, we cannot regard the statement of the captain in this respect as sufficiently to be relied on to warrant a demand for redress or even of further explanation.

Claim of Captain Carvell to administer to property of late Mr. Winder.

My Lord, Temple, September 23, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th August, 1862, stating that with reference to the Law Officers' Report of the 24th May last,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Barton (No. 54, July 10, 1862), on the points to which the Law Officers alluded in connection with the proceedings in Peru against Captain Carvell.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose a letter from Messrs. Dawes, and the previous correspondence therewith, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which should be now pursued in this matter.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th August last, inclosing a letter from the O'Gorman Mahon with reference to the case of Captain Carvell, and requesting we would take the same into consideration, together with the papers previously referred to us.

---

1862

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the additional papers forwarded to us in this case do not, in our opinion, warrant us in advising Her Majesty's Government that a case is made out for direct official interference.

It is impossible to demand redress for an unjust decision on the ground that certain advocates, too timid to appear openly in Court, express on paper a different opinion upon the law from that which has been judicially delivered by a Judge.

It does not appear that a final judgment has yet been pronounced on the matter which is of most consequence to Captain Carvell, namely, the validity or invalidity of the will of which he has obtained an English probate.

Captain Carvell has now admitted (what he never ought to have contested) the jurisdiction of the Peruvian tribunals; but he cannot say, as he does in effect, I meant to admit it if it decided in my favour, and protest against it if it decided in favour of my adversary.

Her Majesty's Representative at Lima might, we think, be instructed to complain, if the fact be so, that Captain Carvell was ordered to bring in the property of the deceased, received from the British Legation, while his adversary, the widow Winder, was allowed to retain the remainder of the property.

We can express no opinion as to the individual who ought to have been appointed the juez testamentario; if the order of the Supreme Court has not been obeyed, that Court must be appealed to.

We think that, generally, Her Majesty's Representative at Lima might be instructed to complain of the want of comity shown by the Peruvian authorities in not recognizing the forum domicilii (admitted to be in England) as the forum competens to try the question of the validity of the will, at least so far as the personal property is concerned, and to press for a decision upon this point by the Peruvian tribunals, as they have thought proper, contrary to general usage, to try the question themselves.

But in the present state of facts we cannot recommend a more formal interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Interference in favour of Colonial Bank of London for the recovery of a debt.

My Lord, Temple, September 24, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st September instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence noted in the margin,* regarding a case in which the Colonial Bank of London had requested your Lordship's interference with the Government of Venezuela in a matter connected with legal proceedings in that country; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in interfering in this case, and if so to what extent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken into our consideration all the papers submitted to us.

That the opinion (contained in Inclosure No. 13) of Dr. Nunez de Caceres appears to us well founded upon every recognized principle of public and private law applicable to such a case. That the Venezuelan Government must be considered as also agreeing with it, and as having fully recognized that the law of spoliation, which has been justly designated scandalous, entitled the British creditor to be indemnified by the State.

Looking to all the circumstances, and among them the difficulties which beset this Government and its apparent desire to redeem the good faith and honour of the State, we think that your Lordship might with propriety so far strengthen the hands of Mr. Doveton Orme as to authorize him to demand immediate payment of the capital of the debt, and to require that the question of interest, if not made the subject of private arrangement within a reasonable time, say one month from the date of the payment of the capital, should be submitted to two experts, one chosen by each party interested; and that in the event of their disagreement, Mr. Orme and the Venezuelan Government should, in a manner to be settled by themselves on the spot, choose an umpire expert, and that the whole question of interest should be settled within two months from the date of the payment of the capital.

As to seizure of "Oreto" fitted out at Liverpool for service of Confederate States, should she put into Nassau, Bahamus.

My Lord, Temple, September 25, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us, together with the former papers, a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 16th September instant, inclosing a copy of the Judgment delivered by the Court at the Bahamas in the case of the "Oreto," and requesting to be informed whether it will be necessary to modify the instructions sent to the Governor of the Bahamas, founded upon our Report of the 29th July last,* for the detention of the vessel said to have been fitted out at Liverpool for the service of the so-styled Confederate States, should that vessel put into Nassau; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the instructions for the Governor of the Bahamas should be forwarded by the mail of the 27th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that if the vessel "290" should put into Nassau, she ought to be there seized and proceeded against, provided that there be nothing in the condition of the vessel when at Nassau tending to rebut the inference which the Law Officers drew from the facts laid before them with respect to the vessel when she lay at Birkenhead.

Claim of Messrs. Dorrington and Forwood for restoration of the "Adela," and for damages for detention of their vessel.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th September instant, stating that with reference to Mr. Layard's letters respecting the "Adela," he was directed to transmit to us some further papers which have since been received on the same subject, and to request that we would inform your Lordship whether there is anything in these papers to induce us to alter the opinion on the case of this vessel contained in our Report of the 6th September instant,† which, for convenience of reference, was inclosed with the papers on which it was founded.

1862

That we have considered the further papers in the case of the "Adela;" that they do not appear to us to call for any alteration in the opinion which we have already had the honour to forward to your Lordship. Admiral Milne is quite correct in the view which he has taken of the rights of neutrals to trade freely with either belligerent, so long as the cargo is not contraband, and the destination is not to a blockaded port (see his despatch of 25th August, 1862); and we think that his remarks on that point are proper and well calculated to obviate the possibility of any misconception. But we do not understand Mr. Seward's instructions to mean that neutral vessels, under such circumstances, are to be carried in for adjudication; but only that the class of vessels he describes are not to be detained after a search verifying the conditions described.

The question as to the seizure of the Royal mail appears to be a new and very important element in the matter, deserving very grave consideration, and raising a point of some delicacy and difficulty. We are rather inclined to infer, from certain circumstances mentioned in the papers before us, that the United States' Government would concede that all mail-bags, clearly certified to be such, shall for the future be exempt from seizure or visitations, and that some arrangement shall be made for immediately forwarding them to their destination in the event of the ship which carries them being detained. Should this inference prove to be correct, the necessity for discussing the claim to exempt, as a matter of strict right, from visitation and detention Her Majesty's mails on board a private vessel might be avoided.

If it be desired that we should give our opinion upon the abstract point of law, we should, of course, be prepared to do so; but we would venture to suggest that it might be expedient to ascertain from the United States' Minister here whether his Government claim the right of searching and detaining the mail-bags of Her Majesty in such cases.

PERSIA.

Claim on Persian Government of Meer Ali Naki Khan, a Persian under British protection.

Doctors' Commons, September 26, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch, with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran (No. 54), requesting instructions as to the course he should pursue in consequence of the refusal of the Persian Government to investigate the case of Meer Ali Naki Khan, the particulars of which are fully detailed in the Report drawn up by Mr. Eastwick, forming Inclosure No. 1.

He was also pleased to state, that by the XIth Article of the Treaty between Great Britain and Persia of March 1857, Commissioners were to be appointed to examine into and decide upon the claims on the Persian Government of all Persian subjects, or the subjects of other Powers, who, up to the period of the departure of the British Mission from Tehran, were under British protection: that Meer Ali Naki Khan was at that time under British protection, and his case was brought before the Commission by Mr. Abbott, the British Commissioner, but owing to the opposition of the Persian Commissioner the case was not gone into.

He was also pleased to transmit the former papers relating to this case; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which it would be right and proper to give to Mr. Alison.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it seems to me important to state that the papers submitted to me establish as facts which must form the basis of my opinion:—

1. That Meer Ali Naki Khan has been recognized as being entitled to British protection.

2. That his claims were a proper subject for investigation under the Treaty, and ought to have been investigated.

3. That the British Government has not recognized the decision of M. de Gobineau, rejecting these claims, and has distinctly apprized, through Mr. Alison, the Persian Government of this determination.

4. That since the closing of the Commission, the British Government has continued to urge on the Persian Government the obligation of investigating these claims, which still remain uninvestigated.

Assuming these facts, it seems difficult to find in reason any principle why Her Majesty's Government ought now to desist from demanding justice on behalf of the person so admitted by it to be entitled to its protection. Certainly the claim is of an extraordinary character, and it does, as Mr. Alison observes, "involve the Government of the Shah in an accusation of housebreaking and robbery."

It might, nevertheless, be observed that the evidence (tthough of an imperfect character), and the opinions expressed by competent judges on the spot (contained in these documents), do tend strongly to support a charge which sounds so incredible to European ears, but which was not incredible to Mr. Eastwick, the writer of this clear and able Report. Be this, however, as it may, this consequence of criminal imputations upon the Government of the Shah has always existed, and has not been hitherto considered as a bar to urging the investigation of the claim.

I am compelled, therefore, to say that it seems to me right and proper that Mr. Alison should be instructed to continue to press the necessity of an investigation, by way of arbitration or otherwise, upon the Government of the Shah, as a matter in which the honour of the British Government is concerned.

It is highly probable that Meer Ali Naki Khan has greatly overstated the amount of the loss which he has sustained. Possibly from this or other local circumstances Mr. Alison might be enabled to effect some compromise, which, while it would save the dignity of the Government of the Shah, might, on the whole, do justice to Meer Ali Naki Khan. This would be a happy extrication from a considerable embarrassment.

In conclusion, I am bound to say that, in my opinion, the honour of the British Government is pledged to use every effort to obtain from the Persian Government a hearing of this case, unless in some way it can satisfy Meer Ali Naki Khan that he ought to consent to the abandonment of his claims.

NEW GRANADA.

Decree of the Government of New Granada regarding the status of foreigners resident in the Republic.

Temple, September , 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in New Granada (No. 46), callling attention to a Decree of the Government of that country regarding the status of foreigners resident in the the territories of the Republic. Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose Mr. Griffith's previous despatch (No. 38) to which he makes reference; and to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Griffith on the points to which it relates.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken into our consideration the inclosures from Mr. Griffith and the Decree in the "Registro Official." The subject is certainly one of considerable importance, and we are not aware that such a law respecting foreigners is to be found in the Code or Statute Book of any other State. Nevertheless, it appears to us to be competent to a State to make and enforce such a law, and that the making and enforcing of it furnishes no cause of complaint to foreign States. The distinction between commorant and resident foreigners (though there may in some cases be great difficulty in establishing it) seems to us, on the whole, reasonable and just. The foreigner who, by the relations of property, marriage, profession, or business and length of residence, has incorporated himself into a State, certainly owes a qualified allegiance to her, and she would be entitled to extend her protection to him with reference to all other States but that of his origin or birth.

Such foreigners are truly and practically citizens of the State which they have adopted; and cannot complain that they are liable to the obligations of native citizens, with whom they are placed on an equality in every other respect. But it might be desirable that Her Majesty's Representative at Bogotá should draw the attention of the Columbian Government to the fact that the rule as to the military service could not extend in the case of British subjects to authorize or compel them to serve against Great Britain or her allies in any war which might unhappily break out between these these countries and the United States of Columbia; and having placed officially on record this declaration, Mr. Griffith should, we think, be instructed to offer no opposition to the enforcement of the Decree, unless in any point it should be sought to be enforced in such a manner as to violate any express stipulation of the Treaty between this country and Columbia.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 26th of February last,* suggesting certain alterations in the Rules and Regulations for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects in Japan, issued by Sir Rutherford Alcock, under the Order in Council of the 23rd of January, 1860, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Mr. Winchester, late Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan (No. 20, April 29, and No. 25, May 17); Mr. Layard being pleased to state that the first of these contained copies of those Regulations as amended and classified by Mr. Winchester, under instructions received from Sir Rutherford Alcock before his departure from Japan, and that the second contained copies of the Regulations as further amended by Mr. Winchester, in pursuance of the directions which were addressed to Sir Rutherford Alcock on the 26th of February last (No. 24), founded upon our Report of that date. And that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these last-amended Regulations into our consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we were of opinion that they might receive the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 26th of February last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the draft of an instruction which was addressed to Sir Rutherford Alcock founded thereupon (No. 23, February 26), a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan (No. 24), inclosing copies of the Regulation which had been issued prohibiting the resort of British subjects to Yeddo, and to request that we would take this Regulation into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether it is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

Refusal of United States' Consul at Liverpool to legalize documents required by Mr. Haigh in defence of his vessel the "Bermuda."

My Lord, Temple, September 28, 1862.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 31st of August ultimo, in which he stated that with reference to his letter of the 16th of August, inclosing a letter from Messrs. Leech, Harrison, and Forwood, relative to the refusal of the United States' Consul at Liverpool to legalize certain documents required by them in defence of their vessel the "Adela," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter and its inclosure from Mr. Haigh, complaining of a similar refusal on the part of the United States' Consul in the case of his vessel the "Bermuda;" and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have little to add to the advice that we have already had the honour of tendering to your Lordship upon a similar point in the case of the "Adela."

But we would add that the refusal of the Consul of the United States at Liverpool to certify a fact which he knows and does not deny to be true, viz., that a particular person is a Notary Public, is as much without the warrant of reason as precedent. Such an attempt was never made before the present war in America.

It seems to us deserving of very strong comment. A Prize Court, which is a Court of international law, has no right to require evidence the attainment of which it allows its own officers to render impossible.

For let the possible, and indeed not improbable, consequences be observed: First, the Prize Court requires the fact that A. B. is a Notary Public (a person whose authority is well known to all public law) to be certified as a fact by its own Consul; secondly, it allows its own Consul to refuse to certify what he admits to be the fact; lastly, it proceeds to condemn the vessel for the want of the proper evidence, the procurement of which it has thus rendered impossible.

We, of course, treat as nugatory the offer of the Consul to send the affidavit of the accused party to the accuser. The very suggestion evinces how entirely the Consul has mistaken his functions in this matter, and has substituted the feeling of a party in the pending suit for the duty of quasi-judicial office, which, in fact, he had to discharge.

We can at present only report our conviction that the Minister for the United States accredited to Her Majesty will afford, upon application being made to him, the proper redress in this matter; and we beg leave to reserve our further opinion until we have been apprized of the failure (which we cannot anticipate) of such an application.

Liability of a foreigner to military service by reason of length of domicil. Liability to the performance of Civil duties.

My Lord, Temple, September 29, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 171, September 20, 1862), inclosing a copy of a despatch addressed to him by the Acting British Consul at New Orleans, in which he asks for instructions on certain points of international law; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

1862

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that a domicil established by length of residence only, without naturalization or any other formal act whereby the domiciled person has, so to speak, incorporated himself into the State in which he resides, does not "for the time convert him into a subject of the domicil in all respect save the allegiance he owes his native Sovereign." This proposition is, we think, far too broad. Such a domiciled person is not a citizen (civis), but a temporary subject (subditus temporarius) of the State in which he is resident. He cannot lawfully be compelled to serve in the military forces of that State against any other State, or be compelled to enrol himself in the militia of the State; though it would be his duty to co-operate with native citizens, when called upon to do so by the proper authorities, in keeping the peace and preserving good order in the particular place in which he resides, as, for instance, against thieves or pirates.

With respect to the performance of civil duties, we are of opinion that he is liable to the performance of such as by the law of the State were obligatory on resident foreigners at the time when he took up his abode therein; upon the principle that he is bound to apprise himself of such existing liabilities before, by his voluntary act, he enters a foreign State in which they already by law exist.

With regard to other civil duties imposed after his domicil has been established, he is entitled to the option of being permitted to leave the State, or to remain and consent to the imposition of the new burden. He is, in every other respect, apart from the exceptions provided by Treaties, or established by custom, subject, like the native citizen, to the general law, civil and criminal, of the State in which he chooses to reside. We must not be understood as expressing any opinion respecting the status of foreigners who have become purchasers of territory in a State.

We may add that in case of illegal acts (acts contrary to the lex loci), or of acts at variance with the common principles of justice being committed by or with the sanction of foreign Governments, to the prejudice of resident foreigners, who have not sought a new citizenship in the particular State, the interference on their behalf, of the Representative of their own State, with a view either to prevention or redress, is permitted, and its propriety is recognized by Diplomatic usage. It is otherwise where the individual has by his own choice, and by naturalization or otherwise, become a subject of the foreign State.

Claim of owners of "Will o' the Wisp," captured at Matamoros, and released by sentence of Prize Court.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 29, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th September instant, stating that since the receipt of my Report of the 15th September instant* on the case of the "Will o' the Wisp," your Lordship has received from the Colonial Office the further documents which he was pleased to inclose respecting the case of that vessel, and that your Lordship thinks it better that I should see these papers before your Lordship sends instructions to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, in case I should see grounds in them for in any way varying the tenour of my Report. He was also pleased to return my Report for convenience of reference, together with the papers already before me on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further statement does not induce me to alter my opinion. It must be remembered that the matter has undergone a judicial examination before the proper Tribunal, the Prize Court, and that the justice or injustice of its decision must be considered with reference only to the evidence that came before it. It is clear, moreover, from Vice-Consul Jones' despatch (June 9, inclosed in Mr. Jonson's No. 25 of June 20), that the gunpowder was not mentioned in the clearance, or to Captain Hunter when he first boarded the vessel, and that it was put in bags bearing another designation. It matters not whether the "Will o' the Wisp" was lying, as Vice-Consul Jones thought, without, or, as it is said in these papers, within, the neutral waters. The neutral State, the only competent Power, makes no reclamation on the subject. I retain my opinion that the non-condemnation in costs was, upon the Judge's own statement, a clear failure of justice, and I have little doubt that damages ought also to have been awarded if the discretion of the Court had been properly exercised; but this latter point is, for the reason which I have already stated, less certain than the former. I have the honour humbly to repeat the advice which I tendered in my Report of the 15th of this instant month.

Request of Major Mansell for protection of British Government to the property, in New Granada, of his father-in-law, a New Granadian, some years a resident in England.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 29, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th September instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from Major Mansell, of the Royal Bengal Engineers, stating the circumstances under which he asks that the protection of Her Majesty's Government may be extended to the property in New Granada of his father-in-law, a New Granadian, who has been for some time a resident in this country; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether or not this is a case in which Her Majesty's Government can properly interfere.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Government cannot properly interfere in this matter. Don Manuel Valez is not only a native of New Granada, but has passed a great part of his life in that State, and been a Senator of its Congress. Six years' residence in England, with whatever intention, cannot entitle him to ask, or Her Majesty's Government to grant, a request that they would consider the fines and taxes imposed, justly or unjustly, upon his landed property in New Granada, by the existing Government there, as a subject for official interference and complaint. Nor does the fact that his daughter, who is destined to be a joint heir of his property, has married an English officer, however distinguished, affect, in the absence of any specific Treaty on the point, the application of the usual principles of international law to this case.

As to alleged harsh treatment to which British vessels captured for breach of blockade are subjected.

Temple, September 30, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th September instant, stating that, with reference to the Law Officers' Report of the 3rd of July,* he was directed to transmit to us, together with the former papers, a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 184), containing explanations respecting the alleged ill-treatment of the crews of captured British vessels.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that it appears to your Lordship that the complaints are unfounded, and the various charges refuted, but that your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with our opinion on the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have the honour to agree with your Lordship in your opinion that the complaints in the case of the "Mersey" are unfounded, and the various charges refuted by the affidavits and statements in the papers now submitted to us.

We would suggest that Mr. Consul Edwards ought to be informed that his letter (submitted to us on the former occasion) of June 5, 1862, in which he speaks of "a system of robbery" pursued with respect to prize cases, and of which system the treatment of the crew of the "Mersey" was an example, was intemperate, and certainly in the particular instance not founded on an accurate knowledge of the facts.

We also think that the attention of Mr. Edwards should be called to the statements on this subject contained in the letter of Mr. Upton to Marshal Murray of the 15th August last, and that Mr. Edwards should be asked for any explanation which he may have to offer with reference to these statements.

Forcible enlistment of British subjects in the army of the so-styled Confederate States.

Temple, October 1, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th September ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 192, September 1, 1862), inclosing copies of a correspondence with the Acting British Consul at Richmond, respecting the forcible enlistment of British subjects in the army of the so-styled Confederate States, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that British subjects domiciled only by residence in the Confederate States are not liable to be forcibly enlisted in the military service of those States against the Federal States, in the civil war now raging in America.

We are of opinion that subjects of a foreign State, domiciled by residence in another State, in which at the time of the establishment of this domicil no municipal law existed which enacted that domiciled foreigners would be liable to serve in the army of the State, cannot be made liable to such service by an ex post facto law.

It may be competent to the State to pass such a law if, at the same time, an option is offered to foreigners affected by it, to leave after a reasonable period the territory if they object to serve; but without this option, such a law would violate the principles of strict international law; and even with such an option, the rules of comity hitherto observed between independent States would not be very scrupulously observed.

If this position be true generally with respect to all active service against enemies of the State, it applies with the greatest force to the case of a civil war, and especially to such a civil war as now rends asunder the United States of America.

The plainest notions of reason and justice forbid that a foreigner admitted to reside for pacific and commercial purposes in a State forming a part of a Federal Union should be suddenly, and without warning, compelled by the State to take an active part in hostilities against other States which, when he became domiciled, were members of one and the same Confederacy with that in which he is domiciled; which States, moreover, have threatened to treat as rebels, and not as prisoners of war, all who may fall into their power.

In the particular instance another strong argument arises against the lawfulness of this forced enlistment. The persons who are the victims of it are also subjects of a kingdom whose Sovereign has forbidden them, under severe penalties, to take any part in this very war; and thus they are made not only to enter a military service contrary to their own wishes, and in violation of the tacit compact under which they took up their original domicil, but also to disobey the order of their legitimate Sovereign.

For these, among other reasons, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought to address a strong remonstrance to the de facto authorities at Richmond against this violation of international law.

It will be remembered that we are not now offering, as we have offered in the Reports of July 31, 1860, March 18, 1861, and September 30, 1861, advice upon the question of liability of British subjects to serve in the domestic police force of the State in which they were domiciled.

Capture of the "Albert" for alleged intention to break the blockade of the Southern Coast.

Temple, October 2, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th September ultimo, stating that, with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 30th June,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 19, September 1, 1862), containing further particulars respecting the capture of the British vessel "Albert" by one of the cruizers of the United States; and to request that we would again take this case into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That (unless the facts of this case should appear, upon inquiry before the Prize Court, to be different from those which are now represented to Her Majesty's Government) we are of opinion that the "Albert" ought to be released with costs; whether she would be also entitled to damages must, in some degree, depend upon the opinion of competent nautical experts as to whether the reason alleged in the protest for her nearness to the shore at the time of the second seizure is or is not satisfactory.

But the bonâ fide destination of the cargo (as evidenced by its actual consignment to a house at New York), the passport of the Spanish passenger, and the protest, combine to make out a strong case of innocence.

We do not know whether proceedings in the Prize Court have or have not been begun against the "Albert;" but, judging from the materials now before us, we should confidently anticipate that they will terminate in the release of the vessel.

If, contrary to our expectation, an adverse judgment should be pronounced, it would be necessary for us to be informed of the terms of such judgment, and of the evidence on which the Court proceeded, before expressing any opinion with regard to it. If, on the other hand, the "Albert" should have been released without any judicial inquiry, we should feel no difficulty in advising Her Majesty's Government that as, upon the statements contained in the master's protest and the other papers before us, the capture was altogether unwarranted, it would be proper to make an application to the United States' Government for full compensation and redress.

Claim of Colonel Mugaburn against trustees of British cemetery at Bella Vista.

Temple, October 3, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th of June last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Lima (No. 14) inclosing copies of a correspondence which had passed between himself and the Peruvian Government, on the subject of a claim brought forward by Colonel Mugaburn, in connection with the British cemetery at Bella Vista.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should perceive that the support now given to Colonel Mugaburn's claim by the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs is at variance with the decision contained in a Decree, inclosed therewith, of the Council of Ministers, dated August 20, 1857, and accordingly that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which it would be right and proper to send to Mr. Barton.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the support now given to Colonel Mugaburn's claim against the Trustees of the Bella Vista Cemetery by the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs is manifestly at variance with the Decree of the Council of Ministers, dated August 20, 1857; but we are not at present sufficiently informed as to the nature or legal validity and effect of that Decree, or of the subsequent "Resolution" by which it is said to have been revoked, to be able to advise Her Majesty's Government as to the course which it may be proper for them to take. Further information on these points is clearly necessary. It does not, in the first place, distinctly appear whether the Council of Ministers, in making the Decree of the 20th May, 1857, were exercising a judicial, or only an executive authority; nor in either case does it appear whether their legal authority was, or was not, exceeded by that Decree; nor on what grounds or by what authority it was afterwards "annulled." If the Decree itself was not warranted by the law of Peru, or if it was afterwards annulled by any authority competent (according to that law) to annul it, we do not see how it can now be insisted upon as conclusive of anything by Her Majesty's Government. Indeed, so far as the title of Colonel Mugaburn to compensation from somebody is concerned, that Decree, upon the face of it, decided nothing finally; it only declared that the claimant had down to that time failed to show any valid title, and that the title then appeared to be in the Government of Peru, which had gratuitously appropriated the land, subject to any outstanding claims, to the purposes of the cemetery; and that certain ex parte proceedings, which Colonel Mugaburn had then taken without citing either the Trustees or the Government, ought to be disregarded and set aside. So far, it seems to have left it open to Colonel Mugaburn to renew his claim at any future time, in any more regular form of proceeding, which he appears now to have done. Its importance consisted chiefly in this, that it declared the intention of the Peruvian Government to have been to take upon itself the satisfaction of any outstanding claims, if they should be substantiated, so as completely to exonerate the Trustees therefrom; thus making the question one between Colonel Mugaburn and his own Government, and not between him and the Trustees. Whether this was an act of executive or of judicial power, its effect, according to the local law, ought to be explained. What seems to be suggested by the letter of the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs of the 1st May, 1862, addressed to Mr. Barton is, that the ground had in fact been appropriated by the Peruvian Government to the purposes of the cemetery, under a reservation of all outstanding claims of third persons for compensation, not upon the footing of any engagement or design whatever of that Government to make itself answerable for any such claims, but upon an express undertaking by the Trustees "to pay the value of the ground at any time that a claim should be made upon the subject." If so, the Decree of the 20th August, 1857, may possibly have proceeded (in this respect) upon a mistake of fact; but whether it was liable, for that or any other reason, to be annulled, or whether it has actually been annulled by competent authority, does not as yet sufficiently appear. Without inquiry into the facts, it is impossible to assume that the statement of the Peruvian Foreign Minister is unfounded; and if it be well founded, as far as at present appears, the Trustees may have no other ground of complaint than that of an adverse decision by a competent tribunal of a foreign country, in which the property with reference to which the complaint is made is situate. Should the result of a full inquiry be to show, either that the Decree of the 20th August, 1857, was originally valid and remains unreversed, or that any reversal which may have taken place has been brought about contrary to the established and prevailing law of Peru, or in a manner at variance with the common principles of justice, then we think that a case may be established, calling upon Her Majesty's Government to interpose its good offices for the protection and indemnity of those British subjects who happen to be concerned as Trustees of the cemetery at Bella Vista. We would, therefore, respectfully recommend to your Lordship that Mr. Barton should be instructed to make a full report to your Lordship upon the several points above adverted to.

Outrage on three officers of Her Majesty's ship "Forte," and plundering of British ship "Prince of Wales." Question of reprisals.

Doctors' Commons, October 6, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence respecting a serious outrage committed by a Brazilian police-guard upon three officers of Her Majesty's ship "Forte," together with a draft of the instructions which it is proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro thereupon. He was also pleased to transmit the papers relating to the plundering of the wreck of the British ship "Prince of Wales," together with drafts of the instructions that have been framed thereupon; and to request that I would take these two cases into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations thereupon, and with my opinion whether the demands made by Her Majesty's Government are just and fair, and such as the merits of the cases demand.

1862

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these cases into consideration and have the honour to report—

1. With respect to the outrage committed on British officers of Her Majesty's ship "Forte," that it appears to me the circumstances of this very serious case warrant the demands of Her Majesty's Government: and that the draft instructions which it is proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro are fit and proper to be sent. I have ventured to suggest in the margin a slight addition.

2. With respect to the second case, the plundering of the British ship the "Prince of Wales," I am also of opinion that the demands of Her Majesty's Government are well founded in justice and reason. I have also ventured in this case to suggest in the margin of the draft instructions proposed to be sent to Her Majesty's Minister at Rio de Janeiro, certain additions and alterations.

It remains to notice the very grave question of reprisals. In my opinion a continued refusal on the part of the Brazilian Government to satisfy the fair demands of Her Majesty's Government would (the nature of the cases and the lapse of time duly considered) warrant, according to the principles of international law, a recourse to this extreme remedy. I would humbly add that it seems to me very desirable to give directions to the proper authorities that these reprisals, if unhappily found necessary, should be exercised (as appears to be the opinion of Lord Palmerston) by the seizure of some ship, or of some portion of public property, belonging to the Brazilian Empire, and that if possible the seizure of private property should be avoided. The public property so seized would of course be holden only as a security until the Brazilian Government did justice, and then restored to them uninjured.

Claim of Mrs. Shee on the estate of Anesti Kovako for jewels entrusted to him before his death.

Temple, October 6, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th of July last, stating that with reference to the Queen's Advocate's Reports of the 8th of December, 1858, 3rd January, 1st April, and 26th May, 1859 (inclosed herewith), he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Alexandria (No. 73) relative to the claim of Mrs. Shee on the estate of Anesti Kovako, an Ottoman subject, in the matter of some jewels which she entrusted to him, but of which after his death Kovako's brother and heir refused to give any account before the Egyptian Court.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that the former correspondence respecting this case was inclosed therewith, together with a volume containing a complete and full statement of the case in all its bearings. And that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the papers inclosed into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which Mr. Colquhoun proposes to take with a view to settle Mrs. Shee's long-pending claim, or what other steps might properly be taken for that object.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to suggest that it might be of use if Mr. Ayrton, the gentleman mentioned by Mr. Colquhoun as Mrs. Shee's representative, were to confer with us on this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the very full and circumstantial statement contained in the volume which has been drawn up by Mr. Frederick Ayrton, and which accompanies the papers submitted to us, two distinct claims upon the estate of the late Anesti Kovako are described, viz., the claim of Mrs. Colonel Shee and a claim to a considerable amount by Mr. Ayrton himself. It is with reference to the former claim only that any part of the correspondence has taken place, and to that claim only the attention of the Queen's Advocate was called when he made his Reports. Neither does it appear that Apostoli Kovako, brother and representative of the deceased, has refused to acknowledge the justice of Mr. Ayrton's demand, or has even been applied to on the subject. Regarding these facts, as well as the terms of Mr. Layard's letter to us, which confine our attention to the claim of Mrs. Shee, we propose to apply our remarks to that claim only.

As regards Mrs. Shee's claim it appears to us that the justice of such claim is made so far apparent by legal and credible testimony, collected by Mr. Ayrton, as to render it only a matter of common justice that the claim itself should be submitted without delay to some formal and competent judicial investigation. We also think that the late Anesti Kovako, having been an Ottoman subject, the administration of his estate pertained of right to the Turkish tribunals and not to the Greek Consulate, by reason of the surviving brother Apostoli Kovako, having, after the decease of Anesti Kovako, obtained what is called Hellenic protection. Such is stated by Mr. Consul Green to be the known and settled practice in Egypt, and we agree with the late Queen's Advocate in thinking that such practice is agreeable to the recognized principles of European jurisprudence. It appears, however, that the Egyptian Ministers having been appealed to, positively refused to interfere in Mrs. Shee's behalf, and, as far as in them lay, handed over all jurisdiction to the Greek Consulate; and, as we collect, the estate of the deceased, with the exception of the funds originally retained by Mr. Ayrton out of the Jeddah indemnity, and since by him deposited in the Consulate at Cairo, has already passed away into the possession of his brother Apostoli Kovako. Under these circumstances we think that a fair ground of complaint arises on the part of Her Majesty's Government against the Government of the Viceroy. It is, however, to be regretted, in a diplomatic point of view, that the matter has been allowed to slumber from 1858 or 1859 until the present year.

A very important question remains for consideration, namely, whether resort can be had in any way to the funds paid by Mr. Ayrton into the Consulate for the purpose of satisfying the claims of Mrs. Shee on the estate of the late Anesti Kovako; and we are sorry to be compelled to answer this question in the negative. The destination of the fund in question is in no way altered or affected by the fact of its transference from the hands of Mr. Ayrton to the coffers of the Consulate; and for the purposes of the argument the money may therefore be regarded as if Mr. Ayrton had never parted with it. How then would the case stand? Mrs. Shee, a British subject, had, as we will assume, a just claim against Apostoli Kovako as the personal representative of his deceased brother—the liquidation of which claim, however, was withheld and refused. Mr. Ayrton, also a British subject, had received as the agent of the same Apostoli Kovako (and others), and, so far as he was concerned, in his right as his brother's administrator, a sum of money equal in amount to Mrs. Shee's claim. Primâ facie, Apostoli Kovako and the surviving partner of the original firm were entitled to receive from Mr. Ayrton the full sum which that gentleman had received on their account voluntarily, and on the undoubted understanding that it should be accounted for and paid over to the principals. It may be, as suggested, that if Mr. Ayrton shall ultimately think fit to refuse payment of the Jeddah compensation except on compulsion, recourse must be had by Apostoli Kovako and the others, or by him alone, to British jurisdiction, as against Mr. Ayrton, a British subject, under the particular circumstances of the case; although upon this point we are not called upon nor do we wish to express an opinion. Supposing, however, such to be the case, we do not see how, according to any principle of law or justice, Mr. Ayrton could set up, by way of answer, the debt due to Mrs. Shee. The two matters of Mrs. Shee's claim on the intestate's estate and of Mr. Ayrton's liability to the same estate are entirely distinct, and each of them, it appears to us, must be treated separately and apart, and upon its own particular merits.

Mr. Colquhoun's suggestion that the Egyptian Government should be called upon to show cause why "these funds should not be applied to the satisfaction of the petitioner's just demands," is, in our opinion, wholly inadmissible; the present question with reference to those funds arising between Apostoli Kovako and his partners and Mr. Ayrton, and in no wise concerning the Egyptian Government.

It appears to us, on the whole, that in all probability the course of justice has been interfered with and obstructed, if not by the acts at least by the connivance of the Egyptian Government, as regards the claim of Mrs. Shee, but that the form of remedy proposed would be only another injustice coming from another quarter. It does not very clearly appear whether there is or is not any regular course of legal procedure which Mrs. Shee could have pursued, or could now pursue, before a competent forum, without the active assistance of the Executive Government in Egypt. If any such course of procedure was open to her, it should have been pursued; if not, the assistance which the British Consul requested, to prevent her claims being defeated by the unfounded pretensions of the Greek Consulate to jurisdiction, ought to have been afforded. And as it seems clear that the persons administering the functions of the Greek Patriarchate in Egypt after Anesti's death ought not to have handed over the estate to Apostoli Kovako, without previously inquiring into Mrs. Shee's claim, and satisfying it if well founded, we should have thought that the Egyptian Government, acting in the interests of justice, might have brought (and might even now bring) to bear on Apostoli Kovako such an amount of pressure as, aided by the representations of the British Consul and Mr. Ayrton, might probably lead to a reasonable adjustment of the matter. This is obviously most desirable; for it must not be forgotten after all that, before payment of Mrs. Shee's claim could be reasonably expected, strict legal proof of its existence might (as it no doubt would) be fairly exacted. The gravamen of her case is that she has been required to submit it for trial to an incompetent tribunal, who would not be governed in their decision either by the lex loci contractus, or by the law of the domicil or forum of the deceased, and whose jurisdiction she had a right to decline, and has declined.

Arms and ammunition supplied by foreigners to insurgents in China. As to prohibition by Order in Council to export arms and ammunition from any British port or settlement to any place within dominions of Emperor of China.

Temple, October 8, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th September, saying that he was directed by your Lordship to state that the insurgents in China are largely supplied by foreigners with arms and ammunition, and are thus enabled, not only to maintain the hostilities in which they are engaged with the Imperial authorities, but also to assail the ports to which British subjects are by Treaty entitled to have access, and so to place in jeopardy the valuable trade there carried on;

And that Her Majesty's Government have reason to believe that these supplies are mainly exported from Singapore or Hong Kong; and that your Lordship would be glad to have our opinion whether it might not be possible, by Order in Council or otherwise, to prohibit the export of arms and ammunition from any British port or settlement to any place within the dominions of the Emperor of China, without a license from Her Majesty or Her Majesty's authorities in India or any other British possessions;

And that if we should see no objection to such a course your Lordship would be glad if we would prepare the draft of the proper instrument for giving effect to this prohibition.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are not aware whether there are or are not any precedents at the Council Office for a prohibitory proclamation of this kind issued from any of Her Majesty's Colonies, except when Great Britain has been either actually at war or taking precautions for her own defence under the immediate apprehension of war in some probable contingency; and in the absence of any such precedent we think that the question of the lawfulness of any such proclamation is so doubtful that we cannot safely advise Her Majesty's Government to adopt the course proposed, or to deal with this subject otherwise than in the way of legislation by the proper Imperial or Colonial authority. The result of Lord Hale's examination into the question of the lawfulness of such proclamations, in his Treatise "De Portibus Maris" (Hargrave's Law Tracts, pp. 95 and 96), appears to be that they can only be justified "in the time of hostility or public danger," and then only on the ground of urgent public necessity. It is necessary, therefore, to avoid any extension of the practice beyond those cases as to which it has received the sanction of constitutional usage.

We would suggest that an inquiry should be made whether there may not be some local law or regulation in force whereby the object of the proposed proclamation might be safely attained; and if not, whether local legislation upon the subject may not be expedient.

Invoices of British vessels sailing from Belize for American ports required to be authenticated in Belize by Mr. Raymond, whose recognition as American Consular Agent has been refused by British Government.

Doctors' Commons, October 8, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 27th September ultimo, inclosing copies of despatches from the Governor of Jamaica and the Lieutenant-Governor of Honduras, together with a letter from the United States' Secretary of State to the agent of Mr. Jex, of Belize, from which it appears that the Government of the United States consider that shippers of merchandize in a British vessel from that port should have their invoices authenticated by Mr. Raymond, a gentleman whose recognition as Consular Agent for the United States has been refused by Her Majesty's Government; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the reasonableness of the United States' Government in urging that parties should obtain certificates from a person whom Her Majesty's Government has refused to recognize as an Agent of the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am not aware of the grounds of the refusal of Her Majesty's Government to recognize Mr. Raymond as the Consular Agent for the United States; but that, assuming the propriety of those grounds, I am of opinion that the act of the United States' Government in requiring the invoices of British vessels sailing from Belize for American ports to be authenticated in Belize by Mr. Raymond, whom Her Majesty's Government have refused to recognize as the Agent of the United States, is an act of gross discourtesy towards Great Britain, and ought to be the subject of grave and prompt remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Claim of Mr. Clarke for 846*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* for coals shipped by him to Manilla. Question of currency in which the amount is to be paid.

Doctors' Commons, October 9, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter (dated the 7th October instant) and its inclosures from Mr. Clarke, stating the circumstances under which he claims from the Spanish Government the sum of 846*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.*, on account of the manner in which they have paid for some coals shipped by him to Manilla, under a contract concluded with the Spanish Government in May 1860; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether this is a case which calls for any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that this is not a case in which Her Majesty's Government is called upon to interfere. The construction of the contract between Mr. Clarke and the Spanish Government upon the question of the particular currency in which the coals were to be paid for, may involve discussion of a nice point of contract law. It is quite proper that such a point should be discussed in a court of law, and it appears that both the Spanish Government and Mr. Clarke are willing to submit to the decision of the Court of Manilla. That is in my opinion the proper course to be pursued.

Complaint of Rev. M. McCartan, a Roman Catholic priest, of treatment by an Ecclesiastical Court in Chile.

Doctors' Commons, October 10, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letters of the 5th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 2nd April ultimo, from the Rev. Michael Mc Cartan, a Roman Catholic clergyman, complaining of his treatment by an Ecclesiastical Court in Chile, together with a report upon the case from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Santiago (No. 47); and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether this is a case which calls for any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that this case does not demand the interference of Her Majesty's Government. If Mr. Mc Cartan is dissatisfied with the general discipline of the Church to which he belongs, or with the exercise of it in this particular instance, the remedy is in his own hands. He may either appeal from the sentence of which he complains to a higher tribunal, or he may detach himself from the Church which he thinks treats him unjustly. It cannot be reasonably expected that because Mr. Mc Cartan is a British subject, Her Majesty's Government should undertake the reformation of the Roman Catholic Ecclesiastical Courts in Chile.

Insufficiency of French blockade of Tampico.

Doctors' Commons, October 10, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Tampico (No. 31, of the 19th August), inclosing a legalized copy of a protest made before him by the leading merchants of that city with reference to the insufficiency of the blockade of the port by the French naval forces; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should adopt with regard to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration and have the honour to report—

That assuming the accuracy of the facts stated in the protest, there is no legal blockade of Tampico. If Great Britain were so blockading Tampico, the English Prize Court would, upon such evidence, unquestionably refuse to condemn a French ship which might happen to be taken entering the port. The true law is clearly laid down by Lord Stowell (the "Rolla," 6 Rob. 372). "It is then said that there are other circumstances that will defeat the operation of the penalty, namely, that the blockade was irregularly maintained by the blockading force, in suffering some ships to go in and others to come out, which would tend to deceive other persons, and would therefore vitiate the the effect of the notification. And I confess, if I was satisfied of the fact that such instances did occur, I should be disposed to admit the conclusion that such a mode of keeping up, or rather of relaxing, the blockade, would altogether destroy the effect of it. For what is a blockade but the uniform universal exclusion of all vessels not privileged by law? If some are permitted to pass, others will have a right to infer that the blockade is raised. It was shown, therefore, that ships not privileged by law have been allowed to enter or come out, from motives of civility or other considerations, I should be disposed to admit that other parties would be justified in presuming that the blockade had been taken off."

Such a blockade as the protest described at Tampico is, in effect, regard being had to what is said as to French vessels, a very objectionable kind of paper blockade. Such a blockade is contrary to the Declaration of Paris, 1856, in which France as well as England announced "qu'elle empêcherait les neutres de violer tout blocus effectif qui serait mis, à l'aide d'une force suffisante, devant les ports, les rades, ou les côtes de l'ennemi." In the treatise of De Pistoye and Duverdy, published for the information of the French Prize Courts during the last war with Russia, and a work of considerable authority, the law is correctly stated: "Lorsqu'il ne se trouve plus devant les lieux qui ont été bloqués de forces suffisantes et suffisamment proches pour qu'il y ait danger à y entrer, on peut dire que le blocus n'existe plus, et que les neutres peuvent aller et venir comme avant le blocus. Souvent la nation qui avait établi le blocus notifie la cessation; elle doit même le faire pour apprendre aux neutres qu'ils peuvent faire des expéditions pour les lieux qui ne sont plus bloqués. Mais cette notification n'est pas nécessaire pour que le blocus prenne fin, car c'est le fait matériel de la présence ou de l'absence des forces bloquantes qui détermine si le blocus existe ou s'il a cessé d'exister" (vol. i, 378). I must presume that a French Prize Court would act upon the recognized principles of international law upon this subject, which so vitally affects the interests of neutral States, and would (as the English and American Prize Courts would) admit evidence to show that there was no de facto blockade. But I am rather afraid that this point, upon which any case would turn, might be evaded by the practice or rules of evidence of a French Prize Court, which I fear is sometimes open to a political influence from which ours are happily free.

I think it would be expedient to send a copy of the said protest to the French Government, and to express a confident expectation that no British vessel, rebus sic stantibus, would be condemned for entering the port of Tampico. Probably the law would not be denied by the French Government whatever they might say as to the fact. And perhaps it might be ascertained whether a French Prize Court would admit evidence to show that in spite of the notification there was no de facto blockade.

TURKEY AND RUSSIA.

Differential duties levied in Russia and Turkey on goods imported by sea in excess of the duties levied on goods imported across the land frontier.

Temple, October 10, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th August instant, stating that your Lordship has had under your most serious consideration our Reports of the 23rd of June* and 3rd of July last, on the subject of the differential duties levied in Russia and Turkey on goods imported by sea in excess of the duties levied on goods imported across the land frontier. That the general purport of our Reports is, that notwithstanding

---

Great Britain has with each of those two countries a Treaty stipulation that no other or higher duties shall be imposed on the importation into their territories of any article of British produce or manufacture, from whatever place arriving, than are or may be payable on the like article the produce or manufacture of any other foreign country, yet that there is no ground for contending that the imposition of higher duties on goods imported by sea than on goods imported by land is contrary either to the letter or the spirit of such Treaty stipulation. That it is true that in the Treaty with Turkey the words "whether by sea or by land" are added in that clause of Article V which relates to importation from the Sultan's dominions into the dominions of Her Majesty, and that those words do not occur in the corresponding clause of the Article which relates to importation from the British dominions into the dominions of the Sultan. That your Lordship cannot find in the correspondence connected with the negotiation of the Treaty any allusion to this discrepancy, and that it appears to be a pure oversight, as the condition of reciprocity was throughout insisted upon by Her Majesty's Government. The particular expression "by sea or by land" is, moreover, not customary in the corresponding Article of other Treaties, and is in fact exceptional in that with Turkey.

That the construction which we have placed upon the stipulation in question is of such grave importance to the commercial interests of this country, and is so directly opposed to the principle which has hitherto been adopted by this country in the negotiation of Treaties of Commerce, that your Lordship is compelled again to submit the matter to our consideration. That the effect of our opinion would be to place the produce of Great Britain uniformly at a disadvantage in every market in the world to which a third country might have access by a land frontier. Belgium might thus encourage the manufactures of France to our prejudice; France those of Germany; and so on throughout every nation in Europe to which the produce of any other countries may be admitted by land; while British produce can, of course, be imported directly by sea alone.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that, disastrous as such a doctrine, if established, would be to British interests, your Lordship is well aware that the mere circumstance of the injury it would inflict is, of itself, no sufficient argument against it. But that your Lordship has no reason to believe that the construction which we have placed upon the stipulation for equality of import duties, is that which is entertained by foreign Powers generally. That in all negotiations with France and Belgium, and with the Zollverein, no pretension to favour goods imported across a land frontier, to the prejudice of goods imported by sea, has, as far as your Lordship is aware, ever been advanced: and in the instances in which such a preference has lately been sought to be justified, it seems rather with a view to political objects, as in the case of Turkey; or to uphold, as in the case of Russia, a system of long existence which, until the recent improvement of inland communication by means of railways, which enables that mode of transit to compete with transit by sea, inflicted no practical injury on the trade which could be carried on by sea alone. And that it seems to your Lordship that the terms of the stipulations in the Treaties are absolute in favour of equality of duties on importation. That there is no condition for equality of circumstances, or conditions of importation; and although no differential duty might be levied on British produce imported by land, in excess of the duty levied on the produce of another country imported by land, yet as the Treaty makes no reference to the mode of importation, but simply declares that any article of British produce shall be admitted at a rate of duty no higher than a similar article the produce of any third country, the plain object of the Treaties would be altogether evaded if, by a strict legal construction of terms, altogether opposed to the spirit of the Treaties themselves, the produce of third Powers were admitted at a less rate of duty on account of the route by which it may be imported.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that your Lordship feels it would be hazardous even to attempt to remove the difficulty which we have raised in regard to this question. If, for instance, your Lordship succeeded by negotiation with Russia in obtaining such an amendment of the Treaty as would, beyond all dispute, equalize the duty on importations whether by land or by sea, the effect would be to throw doubt on the stipulation for equality of duty in all our other Treaties of Commerce, and to hold out temptations to foreign countries to establish, to our prejudice, the same distinction which is now contended for by Russia and Turkey, or even other distinctions which ingenuity would be at no loss to draw, if once the plain literal construction of the Treaties be abandoned.

He was also pleased to inclose for our perusal two letters which have been received from the Board of Trade on this subject, and to request that we would again take the subject into our serious consideration, and express your Lordship's earnest hope that we may find reasons to justify Her Majesty's Government in continuing to maintain the sense in which they have hitherto understood the stipulation for equality of import duties, and in which they believe it to be generally understood by foreign Powers; and that the consequences of an opposite construction cannot be viewed without the gravest apprehensions.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have again taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, on a careful consideration of these papers, we have seen reason to depart from the opinion formerly expressed by the Attorney and Solicitor-General, and to conclude that Her Majesty's Government will be justified in insisting upon that construction of the Treaties between this country and Russia and Turkey which it is manifestly for the interest of British commerce to maintain. We all agree that, in the construction of any doubtful terms in international engagements, reference may be made to the real intention and understanding of the Contracting Parties, if that can be made out from the antecedent communications between them; and that if before the Treaties were made the formula common to them and other similar Treaties had been understood and acted upon generally in a certain sense, the Contracting Parties may properly be assumed to have also understood and used it in the same sense. The statements in Mr. Layard's and Sir Emerson Tennent's letters, to the effect that the sense which Her Majesty's Government now contend for is that which the Contracting Parties can be shown to have had in view at the time, and is in accordance with the practical interpretation hitherto uniformly placed upon the "most favoured nation" clause in Europe (we presume, also, in America), appear to us to be very important, and to go far (if admitted or substantiated) to decide the present question. We understand, for instance, that no lighter transit duties have ever been in force under Treaties of this kind, as between Switzerland and any of the conterminous countries, which have such Treaties with maritime Powers, or between the United States and any part of British North America, than the Customs duties imposed on the same description of goods imported into the same territory in the ships of any maritime nation entitled to the benefit of the most-favoured nation clause. If so, we have no difficulty in advising Her Majesty's Government to insist upon this view of the meaning and effect of the Treaties in their future communications with Russia and Turkey. And, even upon the terms of the Treaties taken by themselves, the Queen's Advocate would probably have arrived at the same conclusion.

We have, &c.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General desire to observe that the grounds of their former opinions, which were given upon the terms of the Treaty only, without any information either as to the existence of any general usage or understanding in other countries applicable to the point in question, or as to the existence of any other evidence of the intention of the Contracting Parties, appear to have been misappropriated. The question under the Turkish Treaty did not seem to them to arise upon the interpretation of the Vth, but upon that of the Ist Article. They never doubted that the Vth Article must be construed exactly in the same way as if the words "whether by sea or land" had been twice repeated in it. That Article, however, corresponding with the IInd Article of the Russian Treaty, in which the phrase is only "from whatever place arriving," relates not to duties upon importations generally, but solely to duties imposed upon imported goods in respect of the country of their origin, to duties on goods "the produce or manufacture of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions or possessions," and on goods "the produce or manufacture of any other foreign country." The stipulations which raised the question in the recent Treaty between Austria and Turkey were not for the admission of any articles, as the produce or manufacture of Austria or of any Austrian possession, at favourable rates of duty. They were equally and indifferently applicable to the produce and manufacture of all countries, British as much as Austrian, if brought into Turkey (as British or any produce might be) by land over the Austrian frontier. No inquiry was to be made for the purpose of the duty into the origin of the goods. In one sense such a stipulation might be practically favourable to Austrian produce and manufactures, because in such an overland trade they would have a natural advantage. But the question was, whether this Article struck at anything more than differential duties, imposed on the carrier or importer on account of the origin of the goods? If it did not (which was the view taken by the Attorney and Solicitor-General) it became necessary to rely upon the general engagements contained in the IInd Article, and for that purpose to prove the identity, as subjects of taxation, of imports (without reference to origin) by sea and imports (without reference to origin) by land; for under the IInd Article Great Britain seemed to be entitled only to claim the same "privileges," which might be conceded by Turkey to any country and not equivalents, in a different form, for any such privileges, valuable to other countries, which might be practically inapplicable to her own circumstances or trade It is unnecessary, however, now to dwell upon these points, as the additional facts now stated have enabled us to agree in our practical conclusion.

Arrest and imprisonment of Mr. F. Carrol.

Doctors' Commons, October 10, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me, therewith, a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 230), inclosing copies of correspondence respecting the arrest and imprisonment by the United States' authorities of Mr. Francis Carrol, a British subject; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears not to be denied that Mr. Carroll is a British subject. That he is a person indulging habitually in the most offensive license of vituperative speech is an irresistible inference from his own letters. But it does not appear to me that any definite charge of treason against the United States' Government has been, or can be, preferred against him. On the other hand, if during a period of civil convulsion he is subjected to the same military law as American native subjects, it is in consequence of his voluntary residence and domicil in the United States. I am of opinion that the suggestion contained in the despatch of Mr. Turner (the Judge-Advocate to Mr. Seward) of the 17th of September, 1862, contains an equitable and fair suggestion, viz., that if Mr. Carroll will undertake either to leave the United States, or to obtain a fit guarantee for his good conduct, he should be set at liberty. At all events I think that the full measure of obligation due from Her Majesty's Government towards Mr. Carroll, as a British subject, would be discharged by obtaining on his behalf either of these conditions from the United States' Government; and I therefore advise that Mr. Stuart be instructed to endeavour to obtain the release of Mr. Carroll upon whichever of these conditions the United States' Government will grant, and Mr. Carroll agree to.

Application to Sir J. Brooke, as Sovereign of Sarawak, relative to the appointment of a British Consul at Sarawak.

Temple, October 11, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th September ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. John Abel Smith, dated the 4th September ultimo, containing a statement prepared for the purpose of being submitted to Counsel on behalf of Sir James Brooke, with a view to ascertain whether there exists any legal or constitutional objection to the appointment of a British Consul at Sarawak.

Mr. Hammond added that the various questions which have arisen in connection with Sir James Brooke's position at Sarawak have formed the subject of the correspondence and confidential Memoranda contained in the volumes therewith inclosed for our information; and he also inclosed a Memorandum as to the bearing of Treaty stipulations on the matter, and requested that we would take these papers into our consideration, and that we would report to your Lordship our opinion on the following points:—

1. Supposing Her Majesty's Government to be willing or desirous to send a Consul to Sarawak, does there exist any legal or constitutional ground against applying to Sir James Brooke, as Sovereign of Sarawak, for an exequatur?

2. Do there exist any Treaty stipulations between this country and the Netherlands, or any other foreign government, which precludes such recognition of Sir James Brooke as Rajah of Sarawak?

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th September ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from the Earl of Elgin respecting Sarawak, dated the 16th August ultimo, in order that they might be taken into consideration, together with the papers which were referred to us in his letter of the 11th September on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these questions into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That (1) we agree with the opinion expressed by the Law Officers of 15th February, 1856, in which they say, "As a question of constitutional law, we are of opinion that it is legally competent to Her Majesty to permit one of her subjects to assume the sovereignty of a foreign State, and to recognize him as such;" and we think that there does not exist any legal or constitutional ground against applying to Sir James Brooke, as Sovereign of Sarawak, for an exequatur to a Consul sent by Her Majesty to Sarawak.

2. We do not find in the Treaty stipulations between Great Britain and the Netherlands, or any other foreign State, any obstacle to the recognition of Sir James Brooke as Rajah of Sarawak.

regard to that person's character, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration; and that with reference to the statement in the Home Office letter of the ultimo, that this person was at one time a convict in Pentonville prison, we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to his last letter of the 19th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as the original complaint of Dr. Berrington against the Consul and Consular Chaplain has been entertained, and an inquiry prosecuted in consequence, and as the receipt of Dr. Berrington's letter of September 6th has been acknowledged, we advise that a letter be written to Dr. Berrington, to the effect that his letter of September 6th does not contain any denial of his having been confined in Pentonville prison for swindling, and therefore does not call for any further notice from Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Hammond was pleased likewise to inclose two Reports which have been drawn up by Sir E. Hornby upon this subject, dated the 8th August and 12th September, ultimo, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course it would be expedient that Her Majesty's Government should take in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report,—

That we are of opinion that it would not be expedient upon the present evidence to institute criminal proceedings against either Debono or Amabile, for being engaged in the Slave Trade.

We agree with the observations of Sir E. Hornby upon this point, and we think the prosecution would fail for want of proper evidence. There is, however, little moral doubt that Amabile has been extensively engaged in the Slave Trade: and if the statements of Mr. Consul Petherick are not wholly incorrect, it must have been, and may still be, possible to obtain proper and legal evidence of his guilt.

It is also most probable that his uncle Debono connived at and co-operated with his conduct in this respect.

We think, therefore, that it would be right to apprise the proper authorities at Alexandria that Her Majesty's Government do not intend (owing to the imperfect state of the evidence) to prosecute Debono and Amabile, without some other and further proof of their guilt; but that it is their firm resolution to proceed criminally wherever evidence can be obtained against all British subjects engaged in this detestable traffic.

We think, moreover, that Mr. Consul Petherick ought to be admonished for neglecting to obtain the proper evidence when Amabile's boats were alongside Mr. Petherick's for many hours, and that his conduct in this respect appears to be unaccountable and very reprehensible.

We also agree with Sir E. Hornby in lamenting that Mr. Petherick should be engaged in trade, though we are not prepared to say that the fact has induced Mr. Petherick to bring false charges either against Debono or Amabile.

Nothing can more palpably show the inconvenience of such a combination of the functions of Consul with the character of trader than the fact that slaves were brought down the White Nile in Mr. Petherick's own boats, by his own agents; so that if he had not discovered them, and taken such steps as to clear himself, he must himself have been exposed to the suspicion of being concerned in that traffic.

Claim of Mr. Shaver to compensation for imprisonment and consequent loss of business.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th September ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 23rd September ultimo, inclosing a copy of a Report which the Governor-General of Canada has been instructed to furnish, with regard to the refusal of the Government of the United States to grant compensation to Mr. Shaver for his imprisonment, and for his losses consequent thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter addressed by Mr. Shaver to your Lordship on the same subject, and stated that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 22nd March last* on this case, which, with the previous correspondence, he also inclosed, he was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that Mr. Shaver has established, by good proof, that he is a born subject of Her Majesty, and what is of less importance, that he has retained his British domicil.

Mr. Seward's remark upon this latter point is very superficial; and the rebuke, therefore, which he founds upon his remark to Her Majesty's Government is really foolish as well as flippant.

The domicil of the wife was not stated to be the domicil of the husband.

But the fact of the residence of the wife and family at a particular place was, in the case of a travelling agent, alleged as part of the evidence that his home or domicil was at that place.

This position is in accordance with the best authorities, English and American, upon the particular point of domicil.

We are clearly of opinion that in spite of travelling agencies, limited to three or four months' absence, Mr. Shaver was domiciled at Belleville.

But, in truth, it was a question of natural allegiance and not of domicil; and when Mr. Seward forbore to press the oath of American allegiance, which he had at first tendered to Mr. Shaver, it was, we cannot doubt, because he was satisfied of the British origin and allegiance of Mr. Shaver.

The grave fact as to Mr. Shaver's detention, ill-usage, and incarceration upon charges which the American Government did not venture to bring to a trial, remain, in our opinion, wholly without excuse or modification from the weak and vehement statement of Mr. Seward.

Even if Mr. Seward's reliance in the statements of the United States' officials as to the treatment of Mr. Shaver after his arrest were justified, this would merely tend to show some degree of possible exaggeration (not unnatural or inexcusable in the circumstances) on Mr. Shaver's part as to some points of detail, not really of much importance to the substance of the case, as to which the feelings and observation of prisoners are apt to be more acute than those of gaolers. But when Mr. Seward asserts that, in the correspondence previous to Mr. Shaver's letter to your Lordship, there is "no allusion to a trial," we cannot but observe that the letter of Mr. Shaver to Lord Lyons (2nd December, 1861), the answer of Lord Lyons to Mr. Shaver (5th December, 1861), are evidence, not to be gainsaid, that Mr. Shaver did demand either a trial or immediate release.

---

1862

His demand for a trial could, of course, only be in the alternative, and the Government of the United States preferred the other alternative, namely, that of release without trial.

Mr. Seward's statement is said to be supported, on one point, by the testimony of a single person named, viz., Thompson; but the character of that person, and his particular relations to Mr. Shaver, deprive his evidence, such as it is, of all value in this matter.

It will be observed that even if this man's evidence were not discredited, the offence of Mr. Shaver would be one unknown as such to any but the most absolute and rigid of despotisms. It would be only by such a Government that a free comment upon passing events to a friend could be considered as a crime justifying imprisonment.

As we agree in substance with the able and temperate summary of the case contained in the despatch of his Excellency the Governor-General of Canada, it is not necessary to dwell upon any further details. But we humbly express our opinion, in accordance with that which we have previously given, that the claim of Mr. Shaver for redress and compensation—as to the measure of which we say nothing—is well established in the documents submitted to us.

Claim of Messrs. Cotterill and Sons to restoration of cargo of the "Empress," condemned in District Court at New York.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 17, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th October instant, stating that, with reference to my predecessor's Report of the 8th April last,* relative to the case of the "Empress," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith, together with the former papers,† a letter from Messrs. Cotterill and Sons, dated the 8th October instant, reporting the condemnation of that vessel by the United States' District Court at New York, and requesting the interference of Her Majesty's Government to procure the restoration of the cargo, and compensation for what they allege to have been an illegal capture; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that there is no case made out at present for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

Messrs. Cotterill state that, from the decision of which they complain, "an appeal is now pending in the Circuit Court."

The Circuit Court is actually exercising its legitimate jurisdiction over a subject matter properly brought before it.

It is an unquestionable proposition of international law that, in such a case, the foreign Government cannot interfere upon the presumption that justice will not be done.

It is only when justice has been denied in re minime dubiâ, in the ultimate Court of Appeal, that the foundation for such interference is laid as a matter of strict right. More especially is this maxim applicable to cases in the Prize Court, and still more in the American Prize Court, which professes to act, and has generally acted, upon all material points of prize law, in harmony with our own.

Her Majesty's Government has never, I believe, except as a matter of political favour, ever entertained the demand of a foreign Government to have the sentence of an English Prize Court reversed before the remedy of an appeal had been exhausted.

Claim of Messrs. Ede and Co. to larger interest to be paid by the Porte in settlement of their claim.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 17, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to me that, among the claims of British subjects which have been recently settled by the Porte, was one of Messrs. Ede and Co., the particulars of which, and the steps taken by Her Majesty's Government in regard to it, I should learn from the correspondence therewith inclosed.* That it appears, however, from the accompanying despatch from Sir Henry Bulwer, and the inclosed letter from Messrs. Ede, that they now make a further claim on the Turkish Government for interest at the rate of 18 per cent. instead of 6 per cent., the sum allowed by the Porte; and he was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which it would be proper for your Lordship to take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me, upon a consideration of all the circumstances of the case, that Messrs. Ede have a claim to be supported in a demand for further interest from the Turkish Government, but certainly not at the extravagant rate of 18 per cent., instead of 6 per cent., which they have been pleased to fix.

I would humbly advise Her Majesty's Government to confirm the proposition in the despatch of Sir Henry Bulwer (September 17, 1862), and to sanction the application by his Excellency to the Porte for the further claim of interest at the rate of 9 per cent.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Raiatea (No. 14), together with its inclosures, relative to the claim of Mr. Blackett, a British subject, to hold certain land in the Island of Borabora, which claim is opposed by the Queen and Chiefs of that Island; and to request that I would take Consul Wodehouse's despatch and its inclosures into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the validity of Mr. Blackett's claim.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me therewith a Memorandum dated the 16th August ultimo, drawn up by the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, with reference to the claim of Messrs. Barker, of Alexandria, on the Government of the Viceroy of Egypt for an indemnity on account of losses alleged to have been incurred by them in consequence of the refusal of the Viceroy to ratify a promise made verbally by His Highness to sanction the formation of a Steam Towing Company on the Nile, which promise His Highness afterwards retracted on discovering that he was pledged to another Company; and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this paper into consideration, and have the honour to report—

Request of Mr. Sellers as to whether he can claim British protection, having declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, but not having as yet taken the oath of allegiance.

Doctors' Commons, October 18, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 7th October instant, and its inclosures, from Mr. Alfred Sellers, in which that gentleman requests to be informed whether, having declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States at some future time, but not having as yet taken the oath of allegiance, he can claim as a right the protection of Her Majesty's Government; and to request that I would take this letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Sellers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly advise that an answer be sent to Mr. Seller to the following effect:—That it is to be regretted that he has voluntarily, without legal advice, and without any previous application to Her Majesty's Government, taken an anomalous, uncertain, and hazardous position, so far as his rights as a British subject and his claims upon the active interference on his behalf of the British Government are concerned. That Her Majesty's Government are not disposed to give categorical answers to questions of this kind, which relate to a possible future contingency. While Her Majesty's Government feel it to be their duty to protect to the utmost of their power all loyal subjects of Her Majesty who happen to be sojourning in a foreign State, they are not prepared to declare, until the occasion actually arises, whether, or to what extent, they may be of opinion that this duty has been modified in the case of a British subject who has formally, and without any previous notification or application to his own Government, announced to the Government of a foreign State his intention to become a citizen of it, and, therefore, as far as lies in his power, to divest himself, hereafter, perhaps in a very short period, of his natural allegiance to his Sovereign.

It is not to be expected that Her Majesty's Government can, directly or indirectly, countenance the doctrine that a subject may play fast and loose with his allegiance, or that he may obtain, at one and the same time, the protection of two Governments. That in these observations it has been assumed that Mr. Sellers really intends, according to his averment, to be a citizen of the United States; but if it should be Mr. Sellers' intention merely to obtain some temporary advantage from the United States' Government by making a quasi engagement to it which he does not hereafter bonâ fide mean to fulfil, of course Her Majesty's Government cannot be in any way accessory to what is in fact a fraud upon the Government of a foreign State.

Temple, October 18, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th September, 1862, stating that, with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 2nd of May last,* which was communicated to the Foreign Office by the Queen's Proctor, as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General at Monte Video in the matter of the property left intestate by Mr. Lizaur, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Lettsom,† containing information which he was requested to furnish upon this matter; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to annex the despatch from the Foreign Office to Mr. Lettsom‡ to which the paper above alluded to is the reply; and also the former correspondence on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it now appears that Mr. Consul Lettsom has not transgressed the bounds of his duty, and has acted only in aid of the heirs of the deceased Mr. Lizaur, and indeed at the earnest desire of the representative of one of the heirs.

We see no reason why the Consul should not aid Mr. Gower and his attornies, Messrs. De Lisle, in recovering the amount due to him from the estate of the deceased; and we think that, if, according to the course of the local law, in the circumstances of this case, he should receive that amount, or any sum for the heirs of the deceased, he may safely transmit the same to England.

Claim of Irish Church Missions Society to a bequest under the will of the late Mr. T. E. Brown.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 18, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying papers* relative to a claim preferred by the Committee of the Society for Irish Church Missions, to a bequest under the will of the late Mr. Thomas Edward Brown, who died in Chile in 1855.

He was also pleased to state that the circumstances of the dispute as to Mr. Brown's will and the legal proceedings that have been taken in consequence are stated in the Memorandum inclosed in the annexed despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile; and to request that I would take the case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether the Society in question has, as yet, any just claim under the will, and, if so, whether it is proper that Her Majesty's Government should interfere in the matter, and to what extent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the contingency, namely, the refusal of the Valparaiso Municipality to accept the condition of Mr. Brown's bequest, has not yet happened, and that consequently the claim of the Irish Church Mission Society has not yet accrued. But I am also bound to say that, if it had so accrued, there is no reason why Her Majesty's Government should interfere on their behalf any more than on behalf of Mrs. Solby (who appears to have been very ill-used) or any other suitor. I am clearly of opinion that this Society must take its own steps at its own expense to defend its own rights if it be advised that, as yet, it has any in this suit.

TURKEY.

Right of Turkish Government to expel from Turkey subjects of foreign Powers whose residence might be considered injurious to the public peace.

My Lord, Temple, October 18, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th September last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers and reports of the Law Officers on a question raised by the Porte in the year 1859 as to the right of the Turkish Government to expel from Turkey subjects of foreign Powers whose continued residence in the Turkish dominions might be considered a source of danger to the public peace.

That we should find in your Lordship's despatch to Sir Henry Bulwer No. 433 of August 23, 1860, the instructions finally given to Her Majesty's Ambassador on the subject, and that with reference to this correspondence he was to transmit to us the inclosed despatches which have been received from Sir Edmund Hornby, the Judge of the Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 49), Mr. Francis, the Legal Vice-Consul there (No. 58), and Sir Henry Bulwer (No. 388), respecting a question which has arisen at Smyrna out of a claim on the part of the Governor of that city to have deported certain British subjects whose continued presence there he considered injurious to the public peace.

That the views severally taken by Sir Henry Bulwer and Mr. Logie of the question raised in these papers is sufficiently explained in the correspondence; and the points on which your Lordship would wish to receive our opinion are, whether Sir Henry Bulwer in his letters to Mr. Francis and Mr. Blunt has correctly interpreted and applied to the case under discussion the intention of Her Majesty's Government, founded on the recommendations of the Law Officers of the Crown, on which the instruction of August 23, 1860, was addressed to him; and if so, whether in addition to informing Sir Henry Bulwer and the British legal authorities in the Levant that his Excellency's interpretation is approved, any special observations are required on the opinions expressed by Mr. Legal Vice-Consul Logie on being made acquainted with Sir Henry Bulwer's instructions to Mr. Consul Blunt.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers and questions into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree generally with Sir Henry Bulwer in the distinction which he draws between cases which belong to the category of legal and judicial inquiry, and those which belong to the category of international relations and public policy.

It may be and no doubt will be often difficult in practice to draw the line of demarcation between the two categories. But this difficulty must be overcome by the wisdom and care of Her Majesty's Ambassador upon the spot.

It appears to us that to most of the evils pointed out by Mr. Francis and Mr. Logie as incident to Sir H. Bulwer's position, the answer is that the Porte has not an arbitrary power of deportation or expulsion, for that this power can in no case be exercised without the assent of Her Majesty's Ambassador, who is in the first place bound, as Sir H. Bulwer states, to require evidence to be furnished to him, both by the Turkish and English authorities under the Capitulations, upon which his assent is to be given or withholden; and who is in the second place bound to refuse his assent if the only or principal ground alleged be one which ought to be investigated judicially as an ordinary criminal offence under the Capitulations.

With respect to the particular cases, if Sir Henry Bulwer acted upon the grounds of suspicion that the persons were guilty of crime cognizable under the Capitulations, but of which there was no legal proof, we think he did not act in accordance with your Lordship's instructions; but if he acted upon the ground that these were persons of a loose, vagabond, and unsettled life, and of general bad reputation, we think he did not contravene those instructions. For although it was stated in those instructions, and in the Law Officers' Report on which they were founded, that cases of vagabondage might "properly be dealt with as coming within criminal jurisdiction," we understand this rather as a suggestion that it might be desirable to have such cases defined by the Turkish law, and made subjects of criminal jurisdiction (as they are in England), than as meaning that in the absence of any such law in Turkey they might not sometimes be properly dealt with as cases of danger to the community on political grounds. It is needless to add that it could not have been meant that they ought to be treated as coming within criminal jurisdiction unless they were actually made criminal by the Turkish law, which we assume them not to be at the present time. There is undoubtedly a serious risk both that the officers of such a Government as that of Turkey may attempt frequently to abuse a power of expulsion, resting upon vague and indefinite allegations, and exercised without anything like a formal investigation or proof of facts, and also that the Ambassador residing at Constantinople may be often without sufficient means of knowledge to enable him adequately to check such an abuse. For these reasons we agree in the suggestion of the former Report that it might be well if such cases could be placed by competent authority within the reach of the criminal jurisdiction, so as to insure their due and regular investigation under the safeguards of the law, and in the meantime we think that they will require the exercise of very great caution on the part of the Ambassador.

But, on the other hand, the public evils which might arise from the uncontrolled resort of vagabonds under foreign protection to a country like Turkey are great and undeniable; and it cannot be disputed that (in the absence of any adequate legal remedy) the expulsion of such persons may sometimes be justified upon political grounds.

The Porte (Mr. Logie admits) must have the power to refuse to receive the foreigner; and it is upon the same principle that it must have the power, except so far as that prerogative may have been impaired or lessened by positive Treaty or Capitulation, to refuse to retain him. This power, incident to every independent Sovereign, was not taken away by the Capitulations. But it does not follow that it is therefore competent to the Porte, or consistent with the spirit of the Capitulations, to arrest and imprison for any considerable period British subjects, previous to expelling them.

* Irish Missionary Society, June 30; Mr. Thomson, No. 50, 1862.

1862

The argument for allowing the power of expulsion is, that the objects of it are not criminals, but considered on political grounds dangerous to the State.

Any imprisonment at all, if by that is meant confinement in a common Turkish gaol, is in itself a criminal punishment; and if as appears to have been the case in one instance, it be accompanied by putting the suspected person in irons, it is a severe criminal punishment.

But detention in a place other than a gaol, or the putting a person as it is called in France "au secret" for any considerable period, is also a punishment. In both cases a punishment on suspicion, not proof, and if no crime, cognizable by any tribunal, be alleged, then for no legal offence, even imputed.

It appears to me, therefore, that it would be consistent both with what is due to the Turkish Government and to the rights of Her Majesty's subjects, if the person whom it was intented to expel were allowed to be placed under the special superintendence of the police, either at his own home or elsewhere, not in gaol, until the assent or dissent of Her Majesty's Ambassador could be obtained.

We think, too, that the Porte cannot be allowed to deport any of Her Majesty's subjects to other places in the Turkish dominions, unless such persons have had previously the option given to them of quitting the Turkish dominions altogether within a reasonable time; and even in cases where this option has been declined, we think that due notice of the place to which it is intended to deport them should be given to the Ambassador, who would be able to exercise his veto if, for any local or other reason, he should think it expedient to do so.

We think that, subject to the foregoing modifications, Her Majesty's Government might inform Sir Henry Bulwer that they approve of the principles of his interpretation of the instructions of August 23, 1860, and that a copy of the despatch to him, if your Lordship should adopt our opinion in it, might be forwarded to Mr. Legal Vice-Consul Logie, Mr. Consul Blunt, and Sir E. Hornby.

Compensation for imprisonment of T. O'Connor on a charge of being concerned in crimping seamen.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying papers* respecting the case of Thomas O'Connor, a British subject, who was imprisoned by the Peruvian authorities on a charge of being concerned in crimping seamen, no criminating evidence having been produced against him. Musson, complaining of the course pursued by the Governor of Bermuda with regard to an American vessel named the "Wheatland," in which he was interested; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me that Mr. J. W. Musson has no legitimate ground of complaint against the Governor of Bermuda. The "Wheatland" was an American ship, with American owners and an American master; she was properly, therefore, while in a foreign port, under the care and authority of the American Consul. Whether the owners had or had not power to dismiss the master and substitute another in his place, was a question exclusively of American law, to be considered in Bermuda by the American Consul. The American Consul had no doubt about the matter, and directed the substituted master to be placed in authority. I must observe that Mr. J. W. Musson could have no right to interfere in the matter. If the American owner or Consul erred, the discarded master, Captain Peacock, had his remedy by an appeal to the American Admiralty Court against the former, or the American Executive against the latter. But it was clearly the duty of the Governor of Bermuda both to prevent any breach of the peace on board a vessel in port, and to support the legitimate authority of the foreign Consul over the vessels of his country.

Request of Mr. Lindsay for interference of British Government with Portuguese Government in a legal suit in Portugal.

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, October 24, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the correspondence, of which a list is inclosed, respecting a case in which Mr. Lindsay has requested the interference of Her Majesty's Government with the Government of Portugal in the matter of a legal suit in Portugal; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion on the case, and as to how far Mr. Lindsay is entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government in prosecuting his claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Mr. Lindsay is not entitled to require the formal intervention of Her Majesty's Government in the legal prosecution of his private claim against the Portuguese Company called the "União Mercantil."

Mr. Lindsay entered into a large and complicated mercantile negotiation with that Company, the Chairman and two Directors of which were British merchants resident at Lisbon. Disputes arise as to the fulfilment of their mutual contract. Mr. Lindsay has recourse to the proper forum, the Portuguese Court, to enforce his contract. The Court decides against him, and he appeals, and then, pendente lite, asks for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

There is no evidence of any corrupt judicial proceeding. The Judge may have been wrong in his law, the jury inconsistent in their finding of facts—I should rather incline to the opinion, as at present advised, that such was the case; but such untoward incidents in the administration of justice are not confined to the Courts of Portugal, or even unknown to those of this country. It is to be hoped that these miscarriages as to law and facts, if such they be, will be corrected by the Court of Appeal to which Mr. Lindsay has resorted.

I humbly advise your Lordship that there is at present no adequate ground for any interference, strictly speaking, on the part of Her Majesty's Government; though perhaps your Lordship might think it proper to direct Her Majesty's Representative at Lisbon to watch the further legal proceedings in this case, and, if necessary, again report to your Lordship. I see no foundation for the position or suggestion that the Government of Portugal is responsible for the due execution of the contract.

Not necessary to have an interview with Mr. Lindsay.

THE Queen's Advocate presents his compliments to Mr. Hammond, and begs to state that, having written his Report on Mr. Lindsay's claim in accordance with the instructions sent to him in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, thought it best to send that Report to the Foreign Office.

Mr. Hammond's letter of yesterday, which arrived after the Report was written, is directed to the Law Officers, inquiring if they would desire to see Mr. Lindsay. The Queen's Advocate thinks it would not be expedient to see him. If the joint opinion of the Law Officers on this point is desired, perhaps Mr. Hammond will have the goodness to say so.

Mr. Whitehead's claim for injuries inflicted by Chilian troops.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th October instant, stating that with reference to Sir John Harding's Report of the 15th of January, 1861,* respecting Mr. Whitehead's case, therewith returned to me, he was directed to transmit to me the explanation (dated the 25th April ultimo) offered by the Chilian Minister in London of the outrage on Mr. Whitehead, for which redress had been demanded in accordance with the advice of my predecessor.

He was also pleased to transmit a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 49), containing his own and Mr. Whitehead's observations on that explanation; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon, and as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should now pursue in the matter.

The previous papers and a Memorandum on the case were annexed for my more complete information.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st October instant, inclosing some papers relative to Mr. Whitehead's claim, which were accidentally omitted to be sent in the letter from the Foreign Office of the 15th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I entirely agree with the view of this case uniformly taken by my predecessor in office in his various Reports upon the papers from time to time submitted to him.

In the additional papers now submitted to me, I find no reason to alter or modify the view which has been so taken. In the long and elaborate statement of his Excellency M. Carvallo, dated April 25, 1862 (the contents of which, I may add, as it was accompanied by no translation, I was especially careful to master), there are certain general positions which Her Majesty's Government would of course consider indisputable, viz., that a British subject at Valparaiso is amenable to the law of that place; that the Chilian Government are entitled to treat an Englishman at Valparaiso as the British Government would treat a Chilian at London; that sentries must obey military law, and not allow themselves to be forcibly prevented from doing their duty by strangers. These and the like general propositions are unquestionable, but they fall far short of the proposition that either at London or Valparaiso a sentry may run an unarmed man through the body, call together other soldiers, beat him half dead with the butt ends of muskets, shoot off his left arm, follow him into an hotel, load him with execrations, and actually rob him of his watch. This is what the Chilian soldiers did to a poor weak unarmed man, and it is the conduct of savage and cowardly brigands, not of disciplined soldiers.

There are two facts—not now (it is important to observe) disputed by the Chilian Government—quite sufficient to dispose of the wretched attempts to give an innocent, indeed a meritorious, colour to this disgraceful atrocity:—

First. The soldiers were compelled by an officer to restore the plundered watch.

Secondly. These ruffians have never yet been cashiered or punished for the crime.

As to what is called the positive evidence on behalf of the soldiers, the value of it may be estimated from the fact which Mr. Walton states, namely, that what the Chilian Government has published as his evidence is entirely opposed to that which he really gave. The truth is, the story concocted since the atrocity was committed is destitute of all reasonable probability, and entirely inconsistent with the admitted robbery.

I humbly advise your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government ought to demand a proper indemnity (and the amount must be measured by the terrible injury inflicted on this innocent man) without delay; and if satisfaction be not speedily given, to resort to the remedy of immediate reprisals.

Seizure of the "Orion" on a voyage from Jamaica to Matamoros.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 262), relative to the capture of the British schooner "Orion" by the United States' cruizer "Quaker City," whilst on a voyage from Jamaica to Matamoros; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is clear that the "Orion" was in the first instance seized without any colour of justification. From the seizor's statement it appears that her cargo was innocent, her destination neutral, her ownership British. The seizor says that the "Orion" had on board "an assorted cargo, doubtless intended for rebel uses." Upon this plea every vessel that swims the ocean and does not belong to the North American States may be captured. The seizor does not seem to have been aware or to have been subsequently apprized by the authorities of his country that a suspicion in the mind of the captor, unsupported by any evidence on board the ship, does not, according to international law, justify seizure. To seize without some primâ facie evidence of this kind is the act of a pirate, not of a belligerent. It is said that after the seizure the master of the "Orion," when on board the captor's ship, has made confessions as to a previous voyage of this vessel affecting her character. But I find nothing which would take off the illegality of her capture even if the alleged confessions made in such Complaint of Messrs. Taylor and Co. of duties levied in Egypt on gunny bags and iron wire imported for packing cotton for exportation.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 29, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter from the Board of Trade, respecting a complaint made by Messrs. Taylor and Co., of Liverpool, on the subject of the duties levied at the Egyptian Custom-houses on gunny bags and iron wire imported in Egypt to be used in packing cotton for exportation. He was also pleased to inclose a despatch from the Acting British Consul-General at Alexandria,* reporting the steps which he took to carry out your Lordship's instruction to endeavour to induce the Egyptian Government to abolish the duty in question, and inclosing a note from the Egyptian Minister for Foreign Affairs, defending the course adopted by that Government; and to request that I would take these papers, together with the accompanying copy of the Treaty of Commerce recently concluded between this country and Turkey, into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the steps which Her Majesty's Government should take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me contrary to the spirit of the Treaty that these gunny bags and iron wire should pay double duty of 8 per cent. on import and export. This last duty it seems is indirectly imposed by adding the weight of the package to the weight of the cotton.

The defence is, first, that the cloth and wire undergo alterations after their import, and therefore assume a new character in their transit through Egypt. This seems to me an untenable position. They are imported for the purpose of packing up cotton, and they are merely in the one case shortened, in the other cut up, to suit the cotton. There is no change in the quality of the article, no addition by manufacture, or any alteration of the material.

2ndly. It is said that it is the old practice of the Custom-house to compute duty on the gross weight of cotton, though not of grain. This is a wholly different ground from the former, and not consistent with it. The truth is, the wire and cloth do practically pay a double duty, one on import and one on export, and this appears to me not in harmony with the spirit or meaning of the Treaty.

Capture of the "Ann Sophia" for alleged intention of running blockade of Wilmington.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 30, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th October instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me therewith a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 279), reporting the capture by the United States' cruizer "R. R. Cuyler" of the British schooner "Ann Sophia" for an alleged intention of running the blockade of Wilmington; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration and have the honour to report—

That I perceive it to be stated in the despatch of Acting-Master Freeman, to Mr. Gideon Welles, that the "Ann Sophia," was captured, "the character of her papers and cargo leading strongly to the suggestion of its being her purpose to violate the blockade." If this be so, the vessel according to the general principles of international law applicable to blockade, was rightly captured. But I am at a loss to understand how a Court of American Prize Law can reconcile the lawfulness of her seizure with the following passage in the Proclamation of the President of the United States: "I, Abraham Lincoln, &c., &c., have further deemed it advisable to set on foot a blockade of the ports within the States aforesaid, in pursuance of the laws of the United States and of the law of nations in such case provided. For this purpose a competent force will be posted so as to prevent entrance and exit of vessels from the ports aforesaid. If, therefore, with a view to violate such blockade, a vessel shall approach, or shall attempt to leave either of the said ports, she will be duly warned by the Commander of one of the blockading vessels, who will endorse on her register the fact and date of such warning, and if the same vessel shall again attempt to enter or leave the blockaded port, she will be captured and sent to the nearest convenient port for such proceedings against her and her cargo as prize as may be deemed advisable." The "Ann Sophia" appears to have had no warning, and to have been seized when out of sight of land. I presume this point will be properly argued before the Prize Court.

There is a practice which the case of this vessel exemplifies, and which appears to be gaining ground among the irregularities of the North American cruizers; the practice of taking out all, or nearly all the crew of the captured vessel, placing them on board the ship of the captor, and then reporting that they have made such and such declarations adverse to their owners. There may be cases which render it necessary to remove all the crew, but they must be very rare. The excuse set up in this case that "they were all more or less intoxicated," is very unsatisfactory. It is manifest how much such acts as these tend to throw discredit upon the adjudication of the Prize Court, which should be above all suspicion.

By the universal and long-established usage of nations the oral evidence in these cases must come from the captured ship's crew only. The greatest care should, therefore, be taken that their first examination after capture should be before the examiner of the Prize Court, and not extracted from or suggested to them on board the ship of the captor. Many an indefensible seizure may thus be prevented from being attended by the proper consequences, viz., condemnation in costs and damages. I humbly suggest that this practice should be strongly remonstrated against.

Proceedings of Admiral Wilkes and United States ships of war at Bermuda, and disobedience to orders of Governor of Bermuda.

My Lord, Temple, October 31, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for our immediate consideration, the accompanying letters from the Colonial Department and the Admiralty* respecting the proceedings of Admiral Wilkes and the United States' ships of war at Bermuda; and to request that we would favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in the matter, and also in regard to the specific questions put by the Admiralty.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased, in a note of the same date, to say that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the War Office,† containing further information respecting the proceedings of Admiral Wilkes at Bermuda.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration and beg to report—

* Mr. Saunders, No. 89, September 23, 1862.

* Colonial Office, October 28, 1862; Admiralty, October 28, 1862.
† War Office, October 29, 1862.

1862

That we have the honour to answer the specific questions put by my Lords of the Admiralty as follows:—

Liability of a British ship which has broken a blockade to capture on her homeward voyage.

1. That an English vessel which has broken the blockade by egress from a blockaded port does not become released from liability to capture by an United States' ship of war because on her voyage to England she has reached a British Colonial port.

2. That a vessel which has so broken the blockade, and has transhipped her cargo into another vessel in a Colonial port, does not become thereby necessarily released from the liability to capture; she remains under that liability until she has completed the voyage of her bonâ fide destination: for instance, if she meant to run to England from the blockaded port, and there are proofs that such was and continues to be her destination, she will be in jeopardy of seizure until that voyage has been performed, and she has started de novo on another voyage from the port of her destination after her breach of the blockade. "Where a ship," Lord Stowell says, "has contracted the guilt, by sailing with an intention of entering a blockaded port or by sailing out, the offence is not purged away till the end of the voyage; till that period is completed, it is competent to any cruizer to seize and proceed against her for that offence." ("Juffrow Maria Schroeder," 3 Rob. 153, 154.)

3. That with respect to cargo tainted by a breach of blockade, which has not reached its destination, but merely undergone transhipment, without any other breach in the continuity of its voyage, in a colonial port, we are of opinion that it would be liable to seizure and condemnation until it had reached the port of its destination.

4. We think also that the ship which knowingly took on board such cargo would be liable to seizure and condemnation.

5. We are of opinion that the authority (the dominium eminens) of Her Majesty does extend to three marine miles from the northern reefs. We think that these reefs must be considered as belonging to the territorial jurisdiction incident to the possession of Bermuda; so far, at least, as that between them and the island, Her Majesty has a right to prevent the exercise of hostilities; and that if we are right in considering them as part of Bermuda, it would follow that Her Majesty's jurisdiction must extend for three marine miles from that point.

As we are desired, generally, to express our opinion as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in this matter, we think it right to express our opinion that the conduct of Admiral Wilkes, both past and present, calls for very strong remonstrances on the part of Her Majesty's Government to that of the United States.

It is manifest that he was guilty of a gross insult to Her Majesty's Representative at Bermuda, by disobeying, in the most open and contemptuous manner, the legitimate orders of his Excellency, with respect to anchoring in the fairway, as well as by the greater affront of placing sentinels on Her Majesty's territory. It is equally plain that he made deliberately false statements with respect to the necessities of his ships, for the purpose of setting at naught Her Majesty's instructions.

With respect to the case generally we are of opinion that the true doctrine with respect to the rights of belligerents, in circumstances like those of the present case, is properly explained by Lord Stowell, in the case of "The Anna," 5 Rob., 385:—

"Captors must understand that they are not to station themselves in the mouth of a neutral river, for the purpose of exercising the rights of war from that river; much less in the very river itself." . . . . . "The captors appear, by their own description, to have been standing off and on, obtaining information at the Belize, overhauling vessels in their course down the river, and making the river as much subservient to the purposes of war as if it had been a river of their own country. This is an inconvenience which the States of America are called upon to resist, and which this Court is bound, on every principle, to discourage and correct."

A belligerent has the right, so long as he keeps bonâ fide and altogether beyond the limits of neutral waters, to watch for ships guilty of breaches of neutrality, anywhere upon the open seas, however near this exercise of right may be to any neutral territory. This cannot, with any propriety, be called a "blockade" of the neutral territory: inasmuch as it has none of the legal effects of blockade. Neutrals cannot complain of any degree of obstruction whatever, which thus may be offered to ships of their subjects, engaged in breaches of neutrality.

If this right of the belligerent be abused by the capture of ships innocently employed, redress will always be open, and ought to be required, according to the circumstances of each case, and if this should be systematically or recklessly done, or if, when done, due provision should not be made, by the sentence of the Prize Court, for the complete indemnity of the parties injured, a case will arise for peremptory remonstrance, and for further measures if such remonstrance should fail.

But the belligerent right, thus admitted to exist, does not in any degree justify the use of neutral waters for purposes subsidiary to warlike operations.

We cannot but express our opinion that it appears, from the papers before us, that by the late proceedings of Rear-Admiral Wilkes in Bermuda, not only the rules laid down in Her Majesty's orders have been disregarded, but the hospitality extended by the authorities of the island to the ships under that officer's command, upon the pretext alleged by him of want of necessary repairs and supplies, has been seriously abused, for the purpose of furthering belligerent operations which he was engaged in carrying out.

Outrage on three officers of Her Majesty's ship "Forte," and plundering of British ship "Prince of Wales." Question of reprisals.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 1, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to me in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 6th ultimo,* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two further despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister in Brazil (Nos. 84 and 87), respecting the proceedings of the Brazilian Government and their authorities in the matter of the wreck of the "Prince of Wales." And that he was also to transmit to me the instructions that have been sent to Mr. Christie in this case; and to request that I would take the correspondence into consideration and furnish your Lordship with any observations that may occur to me thereupon, and with my opinion whether any further instructions to Mr. Christie are necessary in this case.

The previous papers were annexed for convenience of reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this correspondence and the papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the propositions which the Brazilian Government appears to allege by way of excuse, namely, that it is not to be considered responsible for probable murder and for certain robbery committed by its subjects upon helpless foreigners, because the coast, the scene of these misdeeds, is desert and inhospitable, or because after long delays it has failed in discovering the culprits, are propositions wholly inadmissible by the Government of the injured subjects.

The remarks of Admiral Warren are extremely pertinent.

It is clear that both the wreck and the unfortunate crew have been plundered; the presumptive evidence is strong that the missing bodies said to have been buried, but whose graves nobody can show, were murdered.

It is impossible that the Justice of the Peace on the spot (Bento Venancio Soares) should not have been cognizant of what took place; the presumption from the evidence is strong that he participated in the robbery.

A great parade is made of the sufficiency of the Brazilian Government to discharge its own functions of causing justice to be administered, and of its legitimate jealousy of the interference of the English naval officers; but the result is that the murderers and robbers are undetected, and the supine, if not guilty, Justice of the Peace on the spot remains unpunished.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of 30th October, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas (No. 50), inclosing a copy of a Decree which has been issued by the Venezuelan Government, declaring the ports and coasts of Maracaibo in that Republic in a state of blockade; and to request that if this notice is sufficient, I would prepare, at my earliest convenience, the proper notification to be inserted in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as the notice appears to be sufficient I have prepared the notification for the "London Gazette" which is appended hereto.

I presume that the Ordenanza de Corso (translated "Order of Privateering") of the 30th March, 1822, according to which vessels breaking the blockade are to be proceeded against, has reference to a regularly constituted Prize Court conducted according to the recognized principles of international law; but it would be desirable to ascertain from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires that such is the case.

Claim of Captain White for imprisonment at Lima.

Doctors' Commons, November 1, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to me in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that, with reference to the Reports of Her Majesty's Law Officers of the 25th June and 12th of November, 1861,[*] therewith annexed, and to the previous correspondence, of which a list was inclosed, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Captain White, dated the 25th October ultimo, setting forth the circumstances under which he has advanced a claim against the Peruvian Government on account of his imprisonment in Peru;

And that he was to request that I would take this correspondence into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the amount of compensation which Her Majesty's Government would be justified in demanding from Peru in this case.

[*] See Reports for 1861, pages 133 and 279.

To assist me in arriving at a conclusion on this point, Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose a Memorandum setting forth the circumstances under which Her Majesty's Government obtained from the Peruvian Government compensation in the case of Mr. Hugh Wilson.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this correspondence and papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is of course difficult to make anything more than a rough approval to the amount of compensation which the mixed considerations of justice and policy require in these cases.

The injury to the individual, the honour of the State of which he is a subject, and the prevention of future wrong to its subjects, are, I humbly think, all, though in different proportions, elements of consideration; and with respect to all these elements, certainly a more aggravated case than that of Captain White cannot easily be conceived.

A British subject, a man apparently of probity, intelligence, education, good conduct, and fair position in society, is suddenly and brutally seized by the throat as he lands (bound on a peaceful errand) from the deck of a steamer, on the quay of a friendly State, goaded with bayonets, refused all explanation of his offence, imprisoned with every circumstance of ignominy in a filthy gaol of common malefactors, by order of the Government, in which he is kept nearly ten months, subjected during that period to continued and barbarous indignities, often attended with great personal suffering, upon a charge of assassination,—which charge three Criminal Courts successively pronounce to be, and always to have been, wholly destitute of foundation; and it is clearly shown that the original mover and principal actor in these wicked proceedings is a Judge, not for the first time known as a bitter enemy of Her Majesty's subjects, and who remains even, as it appears, unadmonished in the discharge of judicial functions.

I have considered the case of Mr. Wilson, and with some reference to the award in that case, and discarding the very exaggerated claim put forward by Captain White, and weighing the peculiar circumstances, I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Government would be justified in demanding from the Peruvian Government, as the amount of compensation due to Captain White, 4,000*l.* or 4,500*l.* I should incline to the latter sum.

Claim of Mr. Kay for the detention of his vessel the "Beautiful Star" at Vera Cruz.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th October, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence which has passed between Mr. Thomas Kay, Her Majesty's Consul at Vera Cruz, and the Foreign Office,[*] relative to a claim for compensation brought forward by Mr. Kay against the authorities of that port for losses sustained by the detention of his schooner "Beautiful Star," and the seizure of her cargo of gunpowder, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the despatch of Her Majesty's Consul at Vera Cruz must be considered as proving that Mr. Kay has no claim for compensation on account of the detention of his vessel, which appears to have been occasioned by an accident, which the authorities at Vera Cruz were unable to prevent, and not to have been connected with the seizure of the gunpowder.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 4, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th October last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to refer to me a despatch and its inclosures from the Acting British Chárgé d'Affaires in Peru (No. 55), containing a statement of the circumstances under which a claim against the Peruvian Government is made by Mr. W. Jordan, on behalf of the Lima Gas Company, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government should support this claim, and if so to what extent.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter dated the 8th September, ultimo, which your Lordship received from Messrs. Bates, Stokes, and Co., on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears clear that the Peruvian Government has broken a plain contract with the shareholders of the Lima Gas Company.

The decision of the Supreme Court is not founded upon the plain unambiguous terms of the written contract itself, but upon theoretical arguments which have no reference to the language of the instrument itself.

It is difficult to conceive how any tribunal uninfluenced by political or other motives, could possibly have pronounced that these words—"an exclusive privilege ('privilegio exclusivo') is granted to the Company for making gas in the capital and Callao ('en esta capital y el Callao') for fifteen years, the term to commence from the date in which the apparatus and mains are in working order," did not convey an exclusive privilege to light Callao as well as Lima with gas, but only liberty to make proposals for lighting Callao.

The reasons alleged for the forfeiture of the contract are contrary to plain facts.

I think Her Majesty's Government would be justified in instructing Mr. Barton to press strongly upon the Peruvian Government the palpable injustice inflicted by this sentence of the Court on British subjects who have advanced large capital on an undertaking eminently useful to the Peruvian State, and who have been defrauded of privileges plainly guaranteed to them by the contract of its Government.

Mr. Barton might also, if his opinion coincides with Mr. Jordan's on the point, urge the illegal constitution of the Supreme Court which gave the last adverse decision. I do not, however, advise Her Majesty's Government to go further, as at present advised, than thus to instruct Mr. Barton.

As to service of notices upon Peruvians in England, in connection with legal proceedings in Peru.

My Lord, Temple, November 4, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th October ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note from the Peruvian Minister in this country, dated the 14th October ultimo, inclosing two documents addressed "to one of the Judges of the city of London," requesting that notices might be served on certain parties supposed to be resident in this country, in connection with some legal proceedings in Peru. And he was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to whether any or what steps could be taken to give effect to M. Sanz's wishes in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the power of Her Majesty's Judges with regard to cases pending in foreign Courts is regulated by the 19th and 20th of Victoria, cap. 113

That by the provisions of that Statute it would be competent to one of Her Majesty's Judges to order the examination of a witness in aid of the matter pending in the Civil Court at Lima, but that no provision is made in it empowering any of Her Majesty's Judges to cause a notice or citation to be served upon a Plaintiff or Defendant in a foreign Court.

That it would seem to us that his Excellency the Peruvian Minister might cause the notice to be served on the person in London, and might certify to the proper authorities at Lima that he had done so, as the tribunals here had no power to aid him in this matter.

Refusal of Brazilian Government to submit Mr. Lang's claim to arbitration.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 5, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th October last, stating that "he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Rio (No. 85), inclosing a statement of the grounds on which the Brazilian Government decline to submit to arbitration the claim which has been preferred against them by Mr. Lang; that the case has already been under the consideration of my predecessor, whose Report of the 3rd May, 1858, I should find marked in the accompanying volumes, in which I should also find marked the whole correspondence connected with the case. And that he was to request that I would take the subject into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government will be justified in taking any or what further steps in the matter."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the refusal of the Brazilian Government (contained in the letter of M. de Sinimbú to the Marquis Abrantes) to consent to an arbitration in this case is not founded upon satisfactory reasons. But, nevertheless, looking to the nature and character of the contract, which is in fact a Brazilian contract, to be interpreted and executed in Brazil; and considering that the Mixed Commission has been broken up, and having regard to the steps which Her Majesty's Government have already taken on Mr. Lang's behalf, I do not think that they can properly go further, and insist upon the appointment of an Arbitrator; though if a new Commission were to be appointed, Mr. Christie might properly be instructed to assist Mr. Lang in bringing his claim before it.

Complaint of Messrs. David Taylor and Sons of additional duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem levied in United States on all goods the produce of countries to the east of the Cape of Good Hope, if imported from Europe.

My Lord, Temple, November 5, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd October ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. David Taylor and Sons, dated the 24th September ultimo, relative to an additional duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem, which is imposed by the 14th section of the Tariff at present in force in the United States of America upon all goods the produce of countries to the east of the Cape of Good Hope if imported from Europe; and calling in question the right of the United States' Government, under the existing Treaties with this country, to levy the duty in question; and he was to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the bearing of the Treaties in this case.

A copy of the Tariff in question was inclosed for our information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have considered the subsisting Treaties between Great Britain and the United States, viz., those of the 3rd July, 1815; 20th October, 1818; 6th August, 1827; 5th June, 1854; and that we do not find in them any stipulations which conflict with the 14th section of the New Tariff by which the United States impose upon the produce of countries eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, if imported from Europe, an additional duty of 10 per cent.

Claim of Mrs. Shee on the estate of Anesti Kovako for jewels entrusted to him before his death.

Temple, November 5, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th October last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that Mr. Ayrton, having been apprized of the view taken by us in our Report of the 6th October last,‡ of his proposal to appropriate to the payment of Mrs. Shee's claim a sum of money held by him on account of the party against whom that claim is made, requested to add some further observations in support of his view.

That in those observations (which Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose), Mr. Ayrton alluded to the ancient practice of attachment in the Levant having been set aside by the new Rules of the Consular Court; and your Lordship therefore thought it best, in the first instance, to ascertain from Sir Edmund Hornby how the case stood in that respect.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose Sir Edmund Hornby's observations, and to request that we would acquaint your Lordship whether there is anything in Mr. Ayrton's or Sir E. Hornby's observations to induce us in any respect to modify our former opinion, which for convenience of reference he also inclosed, together with the papers in the case, for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and beg to report—

That in our Report of the 7th October we observed, "It does not very clearly appear whether there is or not any regular course of legal procedure which Mrs. Shee could have pursued, or could now pursue, before a competent forum without the active assistance of the Executive Government in Egypt;" and it is now, for the first time, brought to our notice (by Mr. Ayrton's letter to Mr. Hammond of the 13th October), that a system (or practice) of law similar to that which is known in England as foreign attachment prevails in the Consular Courts generally in Egypt and the Levant.

In his general statement Mr. Ayrton seems to be fully borne out by Sir Edmund Hornby in his Minute on the subject. By this Minute it also appears that the practice of attachment (or sequester), whatever it may have been, remains unaffected "either by the Order in Council of August 1860, or by the Rules framed under the provisions of that Order," and that according to such practice, if, in respect of the funds which were in Mr. Ayrton's hands on account of Apostoli Kovako, as his late brother's representative, Mrs. Shee is disposed to seek a remedy by sequester, she (or her agent) should make formal application to the Consular Court at Alexandria for the purpose, such application being supported by affidavits showing all the facts of the case; and an opportunity being afforded to "the party to be affected by it (the sequester) to show cause why it should not be granted." This "party" would not (as we pointed out in our former Report, in opposition to what appeared to be the view of Mr. Consul Colquhoun) be the Egyptian Government, but the person or persons whose private interests would be at stake, namely, Apostoli Kovako alone, or (it may be) Apostoli Kovako and the other individuals who, together with him, were interested in the entire corpus of the Jeddah compensation, originally received on account of the house by Mr. Ayrton.

If Mr. Ayrton is correct when he states, with reference to the practice of sequester as it obtains in Egypt, as follows, "Had I been a French subject in Egypt, she would have been entitled to arrest the funds in my hands, through the French Consul-General," it would appear to be but a reasonable inference that, Mr. Ayrton being a British subject, on his return to Egypt Mrs. Shee will have open to her the remedy of arresting the funds in his hands through the British Consul-General.

We presume the fact that Apostoli Kovako is not a British has not been overlooked by Mr. Ayrton.

Under these circumstances we are of opinion that although, as we stated in our former Report, grounds for diplomatic complaint may already exist, and this later remedy is, owing to a mere accident, unconnected with the original relations of Mrs. Shee and her debtor, yet it would be prudent to refrain from any further representations to the Egyptian Government, until an application to the Consular Court for sequester shall have been properly made, and the result of that application shall be known.

In the view of the case now presented, the matter appears to be one of a private nature, in which justice may be done (so far as this fund is concerned) by ordinary processes of law; and in which, therefore, no interference, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, is (so far) required.

Our former view that this fund could not be reached by other means (which was based on the assumption, apparently involved in the very fact of the case being submitted to us, that the object could be accomplished only by some extraordinary measure, for which the authority of Her Majesty's Government would be required) remains, as we need hardly observe, entirely unaffected.

We observe that Mr. Ayrton conceives the fund, though in the actual charge of the Consul to be, as regards his own claim, liable to the same extent "as if it had continued in my (his) own hands." And we have already intimated our view that the change in the custody of the money could not improve the position of Mrs. Shee with reference to it. On principle, we equally think that such change in custody ought not to operate to Mrs. Shee's prejudice.

Whether, however—as a matter of precaution, and previous to any application to the Consular Court—the fund should be restored by the Consul to the keeping of Mr. Ayrton, is a matter for the consideration of Mrs. Shee's legal advisers on the spot.

Liability of sons of British Consul at Cologne, Mr. Crossthwaite, to serve in Prussian army, he being a naturalized Prussian subject.

My Lord, Temple, November 5, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th October ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Cologne (No. 29), inclosing a legal opinion respecting the liability of his sons to military service in the Prussian army, in consequence of his having become a naturalized Prussian subject; and he was to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not understand what the obligation was by which Mr. Crossthwaite was compelled (as he states in his letter No. 29) to become naturalized as a Prussian subject, nor does it appear what the ages are of the sons of Mr. Crossthwaite—whether they are or are not between the ages of 17 and 25.

It is not clear that any obstacle prevents persons between these ages leaving the country of Prussia. It may, however, be the case that passports are refused to all sons of naturalized subjects between these ages.

Upon the general question we incline to the opinion that the sons of a naturalized Prussian subject (owing allegiance to Her Majesty) who are between the ages of 17 and 25, and are resident in Prussia, would be compellable to serve in the Prussian army.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter and its inclosures from Mr. Haslewood, dated the 20th October ultimo, containing an account of a scheme for the formation of a tramway across Honduras, and desiring to be informed whether such a tramway would be entitled to a guarantee of protection under the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty; and to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the question raised by Mr. Haslewood.

Mr. Hammond also added that your Lordship has promised to use the influence of Her Majesty's Government for the protection of any railroad formed by this route.

Complaints of British subjects of forced military service in Western States of North America.

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 10, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 291), having reference to certain complaints which have been made to your Lordship by British subjects residing in the Western States of North America respecting forced military service, and giving the substance of the answer which your Lordship had returned to them with regard to the duties which he considers British subjects may properly be called upon by the United States' authorities to perform; and to request that I would take the same into my consideration, and favour your Lordship with my opinion as to the correctness of Mr. Stuart's views.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into my consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the particular circumstances Mr. Stuart seems to have acted with prudence and good sense, but that he should be instructed that, as a general proposition of international law, neutral subjects ought not to be compelled to perform any military service; and working in the trenches is a service of that character, and might be considered by the enemy of the United States as impressing upon persons so employed a belligerent character. It does not, however, appear that Mr. Seward does really claim the abstract right of forcing Her Majesty's subjects to perform this service; and of course much allowance upon this point must be made for the conduct of authorities, military and civil, in a city under martial law, and in daily peril of an attack from the enemy.

Instructions to Mr. Bruce and Regulations relative to the export from Singapore and Hong Kong of arms and military stores for Chinese insurgents.

Temple, November 11, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd October last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that since the receipt of our Report of the 8th October,* which for convenience he therewith returned to us, your Lordship received the inclosed despatch from Mr. Bruce (No. 94), setting forth the inconvenience arising from the facility with which the Chinese insurgents obtain arms and military stores.

Mr. Hammond was also to state to us that although, for the reasons stated in our Report, it may not be possible in this country to impose a check upon this proceeding, the local Legislatures of Singapore and of Hong Kong, which are stated to be the principal ports from which those arms and military stores are shipped, might, perhaps, prohibit their exportation to China; and also that in virtue of the powers vested in him by Order in Council, Her Majesty's Envoy might, perhaps, as far as the ports of China are concerned, prevent British subjects from engaging in any such traffic with the insurgents.

Mr. Hammond was accordingly to transmit for our consideration two drafts of letters to the Colonial Office and to Mr. Bruce, in conformity with that view of the matter; and if we should be prepared to concur in the course indicated in those letters, he was further to request that we would frame, for transmission to Mr. Bruce, a draft of the rule or regulation which he may properly issue on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken the proposed letters and matters submitted to us into consideration, and beg to report,—

That we are of opinion that the two letters,—one to the Colonial Office, and one to Mr. Bruce, the drafts of which were inclosed for our perusal,—are fit and proper to send; and that in accordance with the request contained in the letter of Mr. Hammond, we have framed for transmission to Mr. Bruce the annexed draft of the Order or Regulation† which we think it would be proper for him to issue.

As to trial at Gibraltar of murderer of the Commander of the Confederate privateer "Sumter."

My Lord, Temple, November 12, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the War Department,* inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Gibraltar respecting the murder of the Commander of the "Sumter" by the second officer of that vessel, together with the opinion given by the Attorney-General of Gibraltar on the case, and other papers relating to it.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to observe that we should see that the Governor desires to be instructed whether the trial of the prisoner should take place in the same manner as if the murder had been committed on board a merchant-vessel; and he was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion, at our earliest convenience, on the point in question, and with any other observations which we may have to offer.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

We are not informed whether the "Sumter" is a privateer sailing under letters of marque without a commission from the Confederate States, or a regularly commissioned ship of war. Assuming her, however, to be a privateer, we are of opinion that the offence of murder on board the "Sumter" in a British port is triable in the same manner, and by the same process, as if it had been committed on board a foreign merchant-vessel.

We are not aware of any generally accredited maxim of public or international law, or of any decision of any British or foreign tribunal, which has placed a privateer upon the same footing as a man-of-war with respect to the exercise of jurisdiction over crimes committed on board the vessel while in a foreign port.

If it should turn out that the "Sumter" is a regularly commissioned man-of-war, we think that, having regard to the very peculiar circumstances of the case, the course most consistent with international law would be, not to treat the offence as the subject of criminal jurisdiction at Gibraltar, but to detain the offender until means can be found of communicating with the Confederate Government, and learning from them in what manner they would wish the case to be dealt with.

As to destruction of neutral property on board vessels captured by Confederate war-steamer "Alabama." Apprehensions of Liverpool, New York, and Philadelphia Company of destruction of their steamers by the "Alabama."

Temple, November 12, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th November instant, stating that we should doubtless have observed in the newspapers allusions to the proceedings of the Confederate man-of-war steamer "Alabama," which appears to be cruizing in the course of vessels passing between the United States and this country, and capturing and destroying all vessels which it may fall in with under the flag of the Federal States, without regard to the neutral or hostile character of the property which such vessels may have on board.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he should presently, under your Lordship's directions, have to lay before us various representations from British mercantile firms in this country whose property has been destroyed in this manner; but in the meanwhile he was to send, for our immediate consideration, a letter which had been that morning received from the Chairman of the Liverpool, New York, and Philadelphia Company, dated the 5th November, expressing their apprehensions lest the steam-vessels employed by them should be interfered with and destroyed by the Confederate steamer, if it should appear on search that a portion of their cargo consisted of arms; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would acquaint your Lordship what answer should be returned to the Company, and whether it is competent for Her Majesty's Government at present to take any, and if so what, steps in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we conceive our advice to be asked upon three points:—

1. As to the form of letter proper to be addressed to the Steam-Packet Company.

2. As to whether it be legally competent to Captain Semmes to execute his threat of destroying British vessels on the high seas.

3. As to whether Majesty's Government can now interfere, and if so in what manner.

To these three questions we have the honour to return the following answers:—

1. We think the proposed letter should state in effect that the destruction of a British vessel at sea by the "Alabama," although contraband of war should be found on board of her, would be contrary to international law. That Her Majesty's Government, on being apprised of the actual occurrence of any such case, would be prepared to remonstrate with the de facto Government of the Confederate States, and to demand proper compensation for the injury inflicted upon the property of British subjects embarked on board British vessels; but if the Company have, as it would appear that they are conscious they have done, allowed its vessels to be the carriers of arms to the Federal States, the excuse that the Company does not know what the packages contain which are put on board is, with respect to the belligerent, wholly nugatory, and that the vessels containing such contraband, and their cargo, would be justly liable to the penalties which international law attaches to the conveyance of such articles.

2. This question is, in our opinion, one of the gravest importance, involving a consideration of the most important principles of international law in their application, during the time of war, to the rights of neutrals and the duties of belligerents.

In order to arrive at the conclusion whether or not Captain Semmes would, by the execution of his threat, be guilty of a serious violation of international law, we think it will be expedient, first, to state what the general principles are on which the right of captors to search, visit, and seize neutral vessels, and the obligation of the latter to submit to such search, visitation, and capture, are founded.

The principles are these:—

The captor seizes on a fair suspicion that the neutral is pro hac vice aiding the enemy of the captor, for instance, by carrying contraband.

The Government of the neutral submits to the exercise of this authority, the creature of war, on the faith that the conduct and property of its subject will be submitted to the impartial jurisdiction of a legal tribunal, bound to regulate its procedure and its decisions according to recognized principles, not of municipal, but of international law.

Every belligerent is obliged to have such tribunals so constituted and conducted.

A belligerent which carried on war without them would be rightly considered and treated by States not otherwise concerned in the war as piratical.

It is not the act of the captor, but the decree of the Prize Court, that permanently changes the property of the vessel or goods seized, and gives to a new owner a new judicial title, a title universally respected by all States because it is judicial.

It is this decree which makes the prize good, or, as the French say, "la déclaration de bonne prise."

It is obvious that to have no Court of Prize and to capture without ever resorting to it are, practically, equal violations of neutral rights and international law.

Various well-established legal consequences flowing from this doctrine illustrate it.

Thus, captors who after capture misconduct themselves towards the captured vessel or crew, or who carry the prize for adjudication, unnecessarily, to an inconvenient port, have been mulcted in demurrage, costs, and damages, according to the exigence of the case.

Still further, the captor has been holden bound to make full restitution to the owners of a captured vessel wantonly and unnecessarily destroyed.

The law as laid down by Lord Stowell is in harmony with these principles. Speaking of enemy's property, he says, "If impossible to bring in, their (the captor's) next duty is to destroy enemy's property. Where doubtful whether enemy's property, and impossible to bring in, no such obligation arises, and the safe and proper course is to dismiss. Where it is neutral, the act of destruction cannot be justified to the neutral owner by the gravest importance of such an act to the public service of the captor's own State. To the neutral it can only be justified under any such circumstances by a full restitution in value. These are rules so clear in practice that they require neither reasoning nor precedent to illustrate or support them."

We are of opinion, therefore, that by the execution of his threat, Captain Semmes would have committed a grave offence against international law; and we are of opinion, upon the circumstances stated to us, that the de facto Government of the Confederate States would be bound to make ample and complete restitution to the British owner.

3. We do not think that in this stage of the case Her Majesty's Government can at present interfere.

But it may be expedient to state the course which is open to British owners to pursue, if treated according to the alleged menace of Captain Semmes.

The Confederate States must be considered, as far as this question is concerned, as an independent belligerent Government, and they must be taken to possess (as in fact they do possess) proper Courts of Prize; and therefore, according to international law, it would be the right of the British owners to take proceedings, technically called extracting a monition, which the Court would be bound to issue, calling upon the captors to proceed to the legal adjudication of the vessels or cargo which they have seized: and it may be stated, as a general rule, that proof of the neutral character of the ship, and of its wilful destruction, would entitle the owner to a decree of full restitution, with costs and damages.*

Having pointed out the legal remedy which is open to the owners in the cases supposed, we think it right to add that the systematic destruction of neutral vessels or cargoes by a belligerent cruizer, avowedly disregarding the obligation of bringing them in for adjudication, is an international wrong of so grievous a character as to warrant the direct interference of Her Majesty's Government for redress, without waiting for or going through the forms of judicial proceedings.

Destruction of British property on board Federal vessels by Confederate war-steamer "Alabama."

My Lord,

Temple, November 12, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th November instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the previous day's date he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith the accompanying representations from various mercantile firms* in this country relative to the recent proceedings of the Confederate vessel "Alabama" with regard to British property on board Federal vessels, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion upon the several points raised in these letters.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased, in a note of the 8th November instant, to say that, with reference to his letter of yesterday, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, a further letter† which your Lordship had received respecting the destruction of British-owned property by the "Alabama."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these letters into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if the letter of Captain Julius contains, as it appears to do, an accurate report of the conduct of the "Alabama," and of the principles upon which she avowedly acts with respect to British and neutral property, not contraband, on board Federal vessels, a very clear case is made out for demanding both instant and full reparation from the Confederate Government for the British owners; and also for demanding from that Government an express repudiation of the unlawful (and, indeed, piratical) proceedings of a ship sailing under their flag and commission; and that orders be immediately despatched to Captain Semmes to exercise belligerent rights according to the recognized principles of international law; and we are of opinion that if these proceedings should be defended, which we do not anticipate, or if there be a refusal to send out the proper orders, that then, and in that case, the Confederate Government should be apprized that Her Majesty's Government will give directions to Her Majesty's ships to capture and detain the "Alabama."

With respect to the inquiry made by Mr. Clark in his letter to your Lordship, he should be informed that the matter involved has reference to the municipal law of this country only, and is not one for consideration by Her Majesty's Government.

Responsibility of United States for misdeeds of a Confederate steamer.

With respect to Mr. Denny's request, we are clearly of opinion that the United States' Government cannot be held responsible for the misdeeds of a steamer belonging to the Confederate States.

Destruction by an American cruizer, in Spanish waters, of the British steamer "Blanche," laden with cotton.

My Lord,

Temple, November 13, 1862.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 304), relative to the destruction by an United States' cruizer, while in Spanish waters, of the British steamer "Blanche," laden with cotton; and he was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the right of the British owners to compensation.

† Mr. Denny, November 6, 1862.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and beg to report—

That we are of opinion that the owners of the "Blanche" are, upon the statements laid before us, entitled to full restitution from the captors or Government of the United States.

The offence of capturing the "Blanche" within Spanish waters is one for which the Spanish Government ought, and it appears will demand redress through the agency of its Ambassador at Washington.

The offence of destroying a neutral vessel instead of bringing her for adjudication into the Prize Court is one for which the neutral owner is entitled to demand redress in the manner pointed out in our opinion in the case of the "Alabama."

On both grounds, as well because the ship was unwarrantably destroyed as because, at the time of her destruction, she was within the territorial waters of a neutral Power friendly to Great Britain, and not consenting to the act, we are of opinion that the case is a proper one for an immediate demand of full restitution by Her Majesty's Government from the Government of Washington.

It is, of course, desirable that the necessary representations should be made by the British Minister, acting in concert with the Spanish Envoy to the United States.

Legality of marriages of British subjects at Kustendjie by English clergymen.

My Lord,

Doctors' Commons, November 13, 1862.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Bucharest (No. 34), inclosing a despatch from the British Vice-Consul at Kustendjie, pointing out the difficulties to which several parties located at that place, who were desirous of being married, have been subjected in getting their marriages performed, and the doubts entertained by them as to the legality of such marriages according to the law of England.

Mr. Hammond was also to state that to prevent the recurrence of the difficulties complained of in this respect, the British Vice-Consul at Kustendjie will be furnished with a warrant under the hand of the Secretary of State, authorizing him to celebrate marriages between British subjects according to the Act of Parliament; but as doubts have been raised as to the legality of the marriages already performed, your Lordship requested that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether any communication on the subject should be made to the parties.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think it would be proper to apprize Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bucharest that these marriages, celebrated (as I understand them to have been) by English clergymen in Turkey, would be holden, upon proof that they were so celebrated, valid. But that the contracting parties would do well to bear in mind the difficulty which may hereafter arise of producing the requisite legal proof, should the validity of these marriages ever be impugned in a Court of Justice.

Losses sustained by Messrs. Longton and Longrigg on account of seizure of their property by revolutionary authorities at Rio Hacha.

Doctors' Commons, November 13, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a Memorial from Messrs. Longton and Longrigg representing the losses which they have suffered in consequence of the seizure by the Revolutionary authorities at Rio Hacha, in New Granada, of certain property purchased on their account, and to request that I would take this subject into consideration, and report to your Lordship, at my early convenience, my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government are called upon to take any or what steps in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this subject into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it would be proper to make inquiries of Her Majesty's Consul or Vice-Consul at Rio Hacha as to this matter.

It does not appear that any answer was sent by the Vice-Consul to Mr. Danies' letter of the 2nd June, 1861.

But in the meanwhile I must observe that there is no evidence in these papers that the sum of 1,356*l*. has actually been paid by this firm for the "divi divi," either to Mr. Danies or his agents at Liverpool, though in their Memorial Messrs. Longton and Longrigg claim 5 per cent, from "the 29th of March last," their letter being dated "Liverpool, August 1862."

The "divi divi" was seized in May 1861. The vessel of Messrs. Longton and Longrigg (not being the vessel originally sent) arrived at Rio Hacha shortly after the seizure and confiscation of the "divi divi."

I think that Messrs. Longton and Longrigg should be informed that it does not appear in their Memorial on what day the money was actually paid for the "divi divi," nor whether it was paid after knowledge of the confiscation, nor to whom, nor is any receipt for the same among the papers sent to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

I think it would be better to reserve my opinion upon the course which Her Majesty's Government ought to pursue in this matter until further information be received upon all these points.

Case of the British steamer "Blanche."

Temple, November 14, 1862.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch and its inclosure from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 312), respecting the case of the British steamer "Blanche," destroyed by a United States' cruizer in Spanish waters; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those on the same subject which were inclosed in his letter of reference of the 6th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not occur to us that these papers render necessary any addition to the Report which we have already had the honour to make to Her Majesty's Government.

As to right of United States' Government to appropriate, pending the result of an Appeal, the British steamer "Bermuda," if condemned for breach of blockade.

Doctors' Commons, November 15, 1862.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith various despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington,* respecting the supposed intention of the Government of the United States to appropriate the British steamer "Bermuda," against which proceedings have been taken in the Admiralty Court for breach of blockade, before those proceedings are brought to a close.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state, that I should observe that in the last of these despatches Mr. Seward is reported to assume, on the authority of the supposed statute of this country, that the Government would have a right to appropriate the vessel if condemned in the Admiralty Court, pending the result of an appeal against such condemnation; and to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and that, in addition to any observations I might see occasion to offer on the general facts set forth in the inclosed despatches, I would report to your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, what instructions should be sent to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington on the specific point raised by Mr. Seward.

In obedience to your Lordship's command I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it would be proper to give instructions to Her Majesty's Representative at Washington to the following purport and effect:—

That the reference of Mr. Seward to a British statute, authorizing the sale of a ship—before the decision of the Appellate Court—by a Decree of the Admiralty (or First Prize) Court, is well founded.

There are two kinds of sale—

1. Pendente lite, during the period when proceedings are being carried on in the Admiralty (or First Prize) Court.

2. After condemnation in the Admiralty (or First Prize) Court, and before the decision in the Appellate Court.

The Prize Act, passed the 2nd June, 1854, at the breaking out of the war with Russia (17 Vict., cap. 18, sects. 24, 25, 26), provides for both these kinds of sale.
